The clause, as it came from the House, and as it was reported from the Committee on Finance, gives to the Indians just what they are entitled to, and they ought to have it now. If, hereafter, the Government should see proper to make them an offer, and give them a round sum to purchase in their annuity, it may be that they will accept it; but it is certainly just, right, and proper that we should now appropriate the $13,000 to these Indians, to be taken within one, two, or three years, from the amount that is due under the treaty with the Great Miami tribe of Indians.

Mr. BELL. Will the Senator from Indiana inform the Senate whether these Indians are not subject to the laws of Indiana—whether in any respect they are different with regard to the jurisdiction of the State, civil and criminal, from other citizens of the State of Indiana?

Mr. BRIGHT. They are not citizens of Indiana.

Mr. BELL. Are they not subject to the laws of Indiana?

Mr. BRIGHT. Of course they are subject to the civil and criminal laws of the State of Indiana, but they are not citizens. They are residents, it is true; but they do not exercise the functions of citizenship.

Mr. BELL. They are subject to the laws of Indiana, as other non-voting inhabitants. The Indians are not allowed to vote, but they are entitled to any other privilege but that of enjoying office and voting.

Mr. BRIGHT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELL. Now, the Committee on Indian Affairs very gravely considered this question, but I do not know that the Senate will sanction their decision. This is not the only band of Indians with whom we have treaties, for whom annuities have been provided, sometimes perpetual annuities. It has happened in this case precisely as it is likely to happen in other cases. They will be multiplying upon us now as time progresses. These Indians have not had their annuities paid to them for some twelve or thirteen years, because they were lost sight of. It was not known where they were. It was not known that there was any such band in existence as the Eel River band of Miamis. The Miamis of Missouri, because they had the same generic name, claimed the annuities, and received them to the amount of some $13,000.

Now, sir, as the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania has stated, the $500 principal annuity, secured by one of three treaties, was to be paid for that object. That has altogether long since ceased. It was to enable the Eel River band of Indians to accommodate themselves to agricultural industry—to enable them to live by cultivating the earth, instead of living by the chase and hunting, as the other tribes. It was not merely to be an annuity of $500 in money, but we were to give them certain specific articles adapted to their condition than as a separate tribes of Indians. The Senator from Indiana says, they once belonged to the other tribe, but we treated with them as a distinct tribe or nation of Indians, and provided that these annuities should go to them separately and distinctly as a band. We treated with them in 1805, as a band of Indians, and since that time they have withdrawn to a small reservation. They were to accommodate themselves to agricultural industry. They claim no longer to be a band or tribe of Indians. Just as other Indians they are becoming gradually merged with the population by which they are surrounded, and are subject to the laws of the States, not claiming to live under Indian customs, but liable for all violations of the laws of the States, civil as well as criminal.

The Committee on Indian Affairs thought that, not only as a matter of economy, but in order to do justice to the Indians, we should establish some such principle as this, and they thought this a suitable means of doing it. The principle which they intend to establish is this: When a tribe ceases to possess its tribal character and becomes subject to the laws of the States—consisting of a very small number of individuals, say ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty—loses all habit and usage of regulating itself by their own laws, we shall regard our treaties as having ceased. Our treaties cease with them, whenever they cease to be a nation or tribe; and according to public law, we are under no obligation to regard them as a nation, the annuities being extinguished by the extinction of the tribe or nation. But we did not want to do injustice to them. We supposed that, by paying the sum of $15,000, in solido, to these Indians—women and children, or their guardians—for I suppose the State of Indiana may appoint guardians for them, as some other States have done under like circumstances—they would be more benefited than they would be by receiving the annuities in kind, as stipulated by the treaty of 1795. It is not only a matter of economy to the Government, it is not only founded upon the principle of public law, but it is calculated also to promote their own true prosperity, and make a provision for them which shall make them comfortable for life. This provision would give them $1,000 each, old and young, and if they have guardians provided for them, they can be established in a much more comfortable manner than they are now. Whereas, if we give them implements of husbandry and stock farms for them, it will either encourage idleness, or will not benefit them. We are not bound, upon any principle of public law, to regard them as a tribe or nation when they cease to exercise authority as such. It was upon this ground that the committee came to the conclusion at which they have arrived.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is proper, I believe, to perfect the amendment as far as possible before it is voted upon. I move to strike out of the amendment the words, "without regard to the place of their residence." Perhaps, the Senator who proposed the amendment will accept of this modification.

Mr. COOPER. It is the amendment of the committee, and I cannot accept a modification.

Mr. BRIGHT. The reason for my proposition is, that a part of the Eel River Indians emigrated with the main band to Missouri, and with that band have been receiving their annuities annually. If they were to be paid out of the $13,000 provided for the Eel Rivers, they would be doubly paid. I therefore move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "without regard to the place of their residence."

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not exactly see the force of that amendment, unless it is to deprive that portion of the Eel River Indians, west of the State of Missouri, from having any portion of this consideration; and if that be the case, it is clearly wrong.

Mr. BADGER. It is all wrong.

Mr. ATCHISON. Perhaps it is. If that be the effect of it, we shall have to make another appropriation hereafter to satisfy that portion of the Eel Rivers who, I am told, constitute the immense number of six persons. [Laughter.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 10, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is a motion to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary, House bill No. 146, to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House to make a few remarks. In the Congressional Globe of Saturday last a speech has been published, said to have been delivered by Mr. DURKEE, a member from Wisconsin, upon this floor. In that speech there are several imputations cast upon the city which I have the honor to represent; and I stand here, sir, ready to repel these outrageous and disgraceful insinuations. Before I proceed to do so, I think it well for me to read the paragraph to which I allude, as the House will then be put in possession of this matter much better than I can explain it. In this speech, which was not delivered, but published by the courtesy of the House, is the following language:

"But, Mr. Chairman, the citizens of South Carolina have not only spoken theoretically on this subject, but have given in one case, as I am informed, a practical illustration of this sentiment. I was told a few days since, by a highly respectable gentleman who resided several years in that State, that a negro in the city of Charleston a few years ago was sentenced to be hung for striking his master. The narrator, in speaking of the provocation, said:

"The master was discovered by the prisoner trespassing on the chastity of his wife. Under the excitement of the moment the slave struck his master, for which he was sentenced to be hung! On the day appointed for the execution, the sheriff ascended the scaffold with the prisoner, placed the rope about his neck, but felt so much sympathy for the slave that he could not perform the duties of his office, and offered $1,000 to any person that would; but not one could be found. All were aware of the circumstances, and presumed that a colored man had nerves to feel on such an occasion as well as a white man. After a time, the rope was taken from his neck, and he was permitted to escape from the State."

I beg leave to state, Mr. Speaker, that I am a native of the city of Charleston, and have lived there all my life, and such a scene as this I pronounce absolutely false. Such a thing never did occur. The narrator of the story says it occurred in the city of Charleston five or six years ago. This is not the case; and I only hope the narrator of this story is within the hearing of my voice. About twenty-six years ago an occurrence took place in Charleston of the following character: At that time Hon. Joseph Johnson was the Intendant of that city. A number of fires had taken place, and several negroes had been arrested supposed to have committed those offenses. Among the number was one negro who was brought to trial. He was legally tried by a court of magistrates and freeholders. After a deliberate and full hearing, he was found guilty of the crime of arson. He was consequently sentenced by the court to be hung; and, after the expiration of two weeks, I believe, he was brought out to be executed. During his term of imprisonment he became very much enfeebled, being greatly alarmed and afraid of death. He had been before a very feeble, and, perhaps, consumptive negro. When he was brought forward to the scaffold and placed thereon, a sympathetic feeling ran through the whole crowd that had assembled, which was natural upon such an occasion. The sheriff, whose duty it was to execute this negro, was a very feeble person himself. He at the moment hesitated, and the Hon. Joseph Johnson, who was then the Intendant of the city, as I before stated, immediately said to the crowd present: "I hereby offer $100 reward to any one who will present himself for the execution of this negro." No one could be found, and properly so, to volunteer for the execution of this poor feeble creature. He was remanded to prison. Application was made to the Governor to commute his punishment, which he did, and the result was the negro's transportation. These are facts for which I pledge my honor. Sir, at this present moment there is in the city of Washington a distinguished gentleman—my predecessor upon this floor—who at that time was a member of the City Council of Charleston, and one of a committee who investigated this case. He can testify to every syllable of what I have said as being perfectly true.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will take this occasion to say—and I am sorry the member from Wisconsin [Mr. DURKEE] is not in his seat—that whoever related this story to that gentleman has told a deliberate falsehood; and that the man who would sit upon this floor, as an American legislator, so unmindful of the dignity of his position, is, I conceive, as base a creature as the person who would relate such a story as he has repeated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the gentleman to order.

LIKENESS OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consent of the House that I may discharge a pleasant duty devolved upon me by one of my constituents, Mr. G. W. Childs, who has requested me to present to the honorable House a beautifully framed copy of a large engraved likeness of Washington.

The original, sir, was painted by Stuart, and was so highly esteemed by the family of General Washington that great exertions were made by some of its members to procure it from the artist; but so satisfied was he that no effort could equal that that he determined to retain for his own satisfaction and for the future benefit of his family what he considered the chef-d'œuvre of his pencil.

After the death of Stuart, that beautiful portrait became the property of a library institution in Boston; and George W. Childs, a publisher in Philadelphia, resolved to present copies of the portrait which, as a specimen of the art of engraving, should be equal to the original as a sample of portrait painting; and Mr. Thomas B. Welsh, of Philadelphia, one of the most skillful artists of the times, accomplished the intentions of the publisher, and the picture which I have now the honor of presenting, in the name of the publisher, is one of the best copies of the engraving.

The picture, I hope, sir, will, under your direction, find a place in some conspicuous portion of the Capitol, where it may be constantly seen and admired by those who are capable of judging of artistic excellence and yielding to patriotic emotions. Amid the warmth of legislative contests it may, it must be, good to look upward towards the gentle features of our country's father, himself one of the givers of the fundamental law of our nation, upon which all other laws must rest, and to which they must conform. And as a motive, an inducement to contemplate the character and follow the example of the great original, it might be beneficial to place at every "coin and vantage" of our legislative Hall these "counterfeit presentments" that serve "to bring remembrance upon the eye," and to awaken our hearts to the instruction which a contemplation of such a portrait naturally suggests.

FEES OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The question pending is the motion to recommit the fee bill to the Judiciary Committee, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MEADE. Mr. Speaker, there are several provisions in this bill which have been the subject of commentary, and which I wish to bring particularly to the attention of the House. The bill was attacked by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] as being oppressive in its nature, and yet the gentleman's particular complaint against it was that it interfered with the present system of charges, which it is the object of the bill to reform so as to reduce the expenditures of the judiciary from its present enormous amount to something like a reasonable sum. The only charge which was cited by the honorable gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. BOWIE,] was the fee of twenty dollars, which is allowed to an attorney.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] permit me to state briefly my objection? I object to the bill, in the first instance, because it contains very material alterations of the criminal law of the country, and then, in the second instance, because it is contrary to the general tenor of legislation upon the subject in the different States.

Mr. MEADE. I intended to notice all the objections urged by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. BOWIE,] and if I can have the attention of this House, I think I shall be able to convince it that the bill before it at this time is one which will be less onerous in its operations than the present system. The gentleman complains that we have made these changes without any memorials from the people complaining of the present system. There are very few people in the community upon whom laws of this sort operate. Probably not more than one twentieth part of the people of the United States are ever engaged in courts of any sort; and hence it is, if there be cases of oppression, they are singular and isolated, and do not attract attention generally. Meetings of the people are seldom called, except for general grievances. Mankind, we are told, are prone to suffer while evils are sufferable, but it is not wise on our part to let them remain until they become intolerable before a legislative remedy is applied.

The gentleman complains that there must necessarily be inequality in the charges in various sections of the country, because he says that the prices of labor and the prices of property are different everywhere. The same objections might be alleged against that provision of our Constitution which requires that duties on imports shall be uniform. The same charge might be made in regard to other provisions in the Constitution, and also against the laws passed in pursuance of it—because of uniformity in the operation. It is also the subject of complaint on the part of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. BOWIE,] that we have constituted Federal laws and Federal process for State laws and State process. I presume that the cardinal features of all judicial proceedings in this country are the same throughout the whole of it. We must have capiases to apprehend defendants; subpoenas for witnesses; recognizances and bail-bonds. We must have executions and sales; so that, though the words of the writ may vary, yet the precept is substantially the same, for serving which the fees may be uniform. I see no reason why a fee for levying an execution and making a sale in the State of New Jersey should be different from one in the State of Virginia. The gentleman complains, moreover, that there is a premium offered by one of the provisions of the bill to the district attorney for a rigorous prosecution. A fee of $30 is given to the district attorney in some cases where the prosecution ends in conviction.

The laws of Maryland and Virginia are very much alike, and I apprehend that the gentleman may find a precedent for this provision in his own State. If it be any justification of this provision in the bill, I can state that the Commonwealth's attorneys in the State of Virginia are for the most part entitled to nothing unless they convict. I have never yet known an instance in the State of Virginia where a man had been punished improperly, while I have known hundreds of cases in which the guilty parties had escaped. It is absolutely necessary to make it the interest of the representative of the public to attend strictly to his duties, and to see that the community has strict justice done upon offenders. Unless you couple his interest with that of the public, the community must necessarily suffer. He has attempted to alarm the Democrats of this House by charging upon this bill that it has a consolidating tendency. When the gentleman used the word "consolidation," my ears pricked up, and I listened with very great attention to the gentleman's remarks on that provision of the bill which contains the consolidating feature, but I saw nothing of that character.

There is a clause which provides for the consolidation of a particular class of suits, which could be as well prosecuted under one indictment as under several. I brought to the attention of the House on Saturday the case of six indictments for one crime, in which upwards of $6,000 were charged as fees by the district attorney. Those six indictments suggested that provision in the bill, and I call the attention of the House to it. It was the case of an attempt to destroy the vessel Franklin, at sea. Three men were engaged in it, and all were equally guilty. These three men could have all been included in one prosecution, without danger to the public or themselves, and the testimony applicable to one would have been applicable to the whole, and consequently there was no necessity of finding more than one indictment against each of these individuals. Six indictments, however, were found against only two. Wilson was indicted for conspiring with others to destroy the ship. There was another indictment, that he had conspired with Crafts, and another with Smith. Crafts was indicted three times also. If Smith had been caught, there would have been three other indictments, so that, instead of one indictment, we should have had nine indictments, and instead of the $6,000 charged by the district attorney, we should have had fees charged to the tune of $9,000. Now, this provision in the bill to which my friend from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] was so hostile, was intended to cover cases of this sort; and if the House will read the provisions of the bill, it will perceive it provides that this union of prosecutions, or consolidation, as the gentleman will have it, is only to take place in cases where it is thought advisable by the court and by the district attorney.

There is another provision of the bill to which exceptions have been taken. It is that which requires that warrants for arrests may only generally describe the offense. And at this I believe some gentlemen are disposed to hold up their hands in holy horror. I never knew a case where a man was apprehended under a warrant of any sort, whether verbal or written, that he did not pretty well know what he was arrested for. All warrants of arrest are of a general nature, as compared with the indictment. The meaning of this clause in the bill is, that the warrants need not be as descriptive of the offense as the indictment; but, at the same time, sufficiently so as to describe the offense for which the party is arrested. He is furnished with a copy of the indictment, in which the time, place, and circumstances are all particularly described. There should be no fears that this section of the bill will operate injuriously upon any citizen. None whatever.

Mr. BOWIE. I beg leave to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MEADE,] whether he has ever known, in his practice, where two offenses have been charged in the same warrant in general terms. This bill proposes to authorize that two or more offenses shall be prosecuted, in very general terms, in the same warrant.

Mr. MEADE. If the gentleman will consult the laws passed by Congress, and by his own State, and by every other State in the Union, he will see that there have been important innovations in the laws themselves, as well as in the practice under them. And nothing is so obvious as the vast improvements that have been introduced by the new States of this Union. Having had business in these States, I have been struck with the progress they have made in reforming the systems we derived from England. We have introduced many such reforms in the Eastern States, and it would be well for us to introduce many more. They are practical men in the West. When people from various sections get into a new country, they become essentially utilitarians, and they discard everything which is not necessary; while we, on the contrary, are wedded to old forms and customs—many of them being in fact onerous and troublesome, and retained from the force of habit.

The clause to which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] alludes, as I have said before, embraces transactions which are closely connected. It does not contemplate a single prosecution against one who has committed several distinct offenses; they must allude as to time, place, and circumstances. It does not authorize a single prosecution for a murder committed at one time and a burglary at another; but if both be committed on the same night, and at the same place, they may be joined. A prosecution for grand larceny and petit larceny may be had under one indictment; also, one for murder and manslaughter. There is larceny of the mail and there is robbery of the mail. There is counterfeiting the coin of the United States, and passing counterfeit coin. If perpetrated at the same time, they may be joined. These things are left to the discretion of the district attorney and the court. We may fairly presume that these men know something, and that they will exercise a sound discretion in the matter. The fears entertained by the gentleman from Maryland are altogether visionary.

Whenever we attempt to introduce a new system, it must necessarily be imperfect at the beginning. We must first put it into operation and see in what the defect consists, and apply the remedy upon some future occasion. It is impossible for anything to spring out of the brain of a man perfect and complete. He must feel his way gradually. The column must be built stone by stone, commencing at the foundation, until the capital is finished. In that way all great works, whether mental or physical, are constructed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House some of the grievances of which the country has a right to complain, and which are attempted to be remedied in this bill. The largest attorney's fee that is allowed to be charged is $20. In extraordinary cases the courts are allowed to increase the fee of the district attorney $30. But let the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] look to the fact, that in place of $20, which is so large as to alarm his imagination, there have been charged in many instances, from $200 to $500; and it is this evil that we wish to correct. It is to this subject that I wish now to draw the attention of the House. Though the fees of marshals, clerks, and attorneys will be considerably reduced by this bill, yet in point of fact, for no real service rendered by either of these officers, is there a single reduction worthy of notice. In truth there is an increase.

Let me now bring to the notice of the House some of the fee bills. In the prosecution against Dyer for perjury, $246 was charged by the district attorney. In another case for a like offense, $280 was charged by one attorney, and $237 by another, his predecessor, making $517. In a prosecution against one who served on board a slaver, $267 was charged by the district attorney. These are only a few of the fee bills for the year 1849, charged by one officer of the court; and I ask this House if it is not time for them to apply a remedy to an evil so crying? Why, sir, if members will take the trouble to look at some of these charges they will be astonished at the ingenuity of counsel in finding names for the various motions made and petty services performed. Here is a fee bill which I will hold up to the view of the House, in which there are some thirty or forty items.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia speaks of $400 or $500, as an enormous charge. In the course of my practice within a few years I knew a case where three men were indicted for the commission of a single offense, and the district attorney who had charge of the case—though all the offenses could have been embraced in a single indictment, and should have been so embraced—made three hundred and forty-five indictments, and charged $10 for each, thus making $3,450 for what should have been a single case.

Mr. MEADE. I am glad the gentleman from Massachusetts has come so effectually to my aid in this matter. I was about to exhibit to this House a list of charges, consisting of some thirty or forty items at one term in a case of a prosecution for perjury. The items range from six dollars down to twenty-five cents, and I should like to read some few of them, because it is a curious specimen of ingenuity on the part of the district attorney. There is scarcely anything that he could do in court that he did not charge for. He could not open his mouth unless it furnished an excuse for making a charge for it. Here is a retaining fee of $8; warrant of attorney, 37 cents; order to marshal to bring up prisoner, 25 cents; motion for examination, $3; counsel for perusing and amending indictment, $2; motion for temporary commitment, $4; motion for arraignment, $3; motion for trial, $3; motion for commitment of witness, $3; "other items," $3.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you would be surprised, and so would the House, if I were to state that charges had been made for looking at the prisoner, $1; for handing the court a book, fifty cents, or for motions to adjourn to dinner, twenty-five cents. Now, I do not mean to say that such charges have been actually made, but I say that charges have been made equally as unimportant, and I should as soon think of charging for one as the other. I would as soon think of charging for some of the acts done, as reported here in these bills of fees, as I should of charging for reading an authority to the court, or handing it a book, or making a motion to adjourn to dinner. Here is a motion for arraignment, $3, and a motion for trial, $3. First a motion is made to arraign a man, for which $3 is charged, and then a motion made to try him, for which $3 more is charged.

Why, sir, let any practicing attorney take hold of and examine this fee bill, consisting of thirty or forty items, and I will defy him to imagine anything more for which a charge could be made, unless it be for looking at the prisoner, making a motion to go to dinner, or handing up an authority to the court. It is possible that such charges have been made; for, at the foot of this list of some thirty or forty items, I found this item: "other items, $3 12½." Now, what could constitute "other items" but those I have named, I cannot imagine, unless they include mending a pen, or sanding a paper. This item reminds me of a settlement between two neighbors who had a long running account for several years against each other. They determined finally to come to a settlement, and one asked the other to send him his account. The account was sent, and upon adding up his own, he found 16s. 6d balance against him; so he put at the foot of his account this item—"to balance your account, 16s. 6d." This charge of "other items" might have been made for the purpose of rounding off the account.

My friend from Maryland the other day committed a most extraordinary error, (I presume he has already detected it, if he has looked over his speech,) in regard to the annual expenses of the courts. The gentleman says:

"But, Mr. Speaker, it is complained that there has been an excessive and extraordinary increase of the judicial expense of this Government, not at all corresponding with the progress of population. I would ask the House to refer to table A, which was relied upon for the purpose of establishing that position. In Doc. 2, p. 524, there is an abstract of the annual amounts presented in this form by the Acting Comptroller of the Treasury. He puts down the expenses from 1800 to 1801 at $42,000; from 1818 to 1821, inclusive, at $117,000; from 1830 to 1831, at $204,000; being an average of about $102,000. He then gives the aggregate from 1842 to 1847, five and a half years, at $464,623. If these items be correct from 1831 to 1847, there has been no increase in the average expenses of the judiciary, because, if you divide the aggregate of $464,000 by the time given it will give a dividend of a less amount; instead of $102,000 it will give some $85,000 per annum; so that the vice is not in the system, the vice is in the administration of the system since 1847."

Now, the gentleman has evidently made a mistake in taking the average per year for the whole aggregate. Instead of the aggregate being $204,000 for 1830-'31, the average of either year was $204,000, and, instead of $464,623 being the aggregate for five and a half years, from 1842 to 1847, it was $2,500,000, and $464,623 was the average for each year.

Mr. BOWIE. I took it from the table marked A, No. 2.

Mr. MEADE. In the table marked A, the amount from 1842 to 1847, five years and a half, is $2,555,000, making an annual charge of $464,623, and in 1849 it was $469,223, and in 1851, $554,854.

Mr. BOWIE. I allude to the table returned by the Acting Comptroller, which is found in document No. 2.

Mr. MEADE. This purports to be taken from that report. It is the same table, I believe. The gentleman only cast his eye over one column instead of both.

Mr. BOWIE. I have not minutely examined the calculation. I made it here at the time, deriving it as I supposed from the table printed by the acting Comptroller, which is understood to be the annual return for the costs of those years.

Mr. MEADE. Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will look at the enormous increase of the cost of the judiciary departments in particular States, from 1830 up to the present time, you will find that the increase has been at the rate of about five hundred per cent., and from 1817 about one thousand per cent. We all know that it costs less per head to administer justice for a million of people inhabiting a particular district than for five hundred thousand inhabiting the same district. The increase of the expenses of the judiciary should not be in the same ratio as the increase of the population by one half or three fourths, but instead of increasing at a slower rate the reverse is true. Instead of being only some twenty or thirty per cent. higher from 1815 to the present time, it is five or six hundred per cent. higher.

The expenses of the judiciary will of course increase as the population increases, but it should not in the same ratio. In a given area of territory it matters not much whether it contains 1,000,000 of souls or 500,000 as regards the expenses of its courts.

Now, sir, these abuses should be corrected by Congress, and it must be done by detailing to this service those who are acquainted with the subject—the practicing lawyers of this House—and I would take the gentleman from Maryland as soon as any other; and if he had been sitting with us at our board, day after day discussing the bearing and effect of every clause in this bill, he would have found that it was impossible to report a bill more to his liking than this. He might not have agreed to every clause in that bill, as I do not. There were many of them to which I objected, but these objections were trivial compared to the great object to be accomplished by the bill.

Mr. BOWIE. I will concur with the gentleman from Virginia, if he will confine his legislation to cases in which the United States is the party interested. I understand that his object is to shield the Treasury. Then, limit the operation of the bill to cases in which the United States is a party, and do not extend it to civil cases between man and man.

Mr. MEADE. Mr. Speaker, under our system individuals in certain States suffer as much as the Government, on account of the multitude of fees for constructive services and immaterial motions. Now, sir, to convince the gentleman from Maryland that we have not reduced those fees to any very considerable extent—I may say, even, we have not reduced them at all for actual services—I will give him the costs of a suit which I have supposed to have been brought upon a bond of $500, with collateral conditions, in which there are two sureties, each of them living one hundred miles from the seat of justice, and in which suit four witnesses are summoned, living also one hundred miles off. I have taken down each item as provided for in this bill. The clerk's fees, in such a suit as that, supposing that the case was tried upon the first calling, would be $7 10; marshal's fees, $41, including commissions; attorney's fee, 20; and fees for witnesses, $52; making $120 10. If no witnesses are summoned, the taxed costs in such a suit would be about $47; if no execution or sale, they would amount to about $29.

Mr. BOWIE. In my State it would not, probably, amount to $20.

Mr. MEADE. Well, take off the attorney's fee of $10—for the attorney's fee is but $10 where there is no testimony—and that would leave the amount $19; so that the gentleman will see that, for real services performed, there is no reduction of fees.

Mr. BOWIE. I never complained of any reduction; the fees are too great.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Speaker, when I conclude the remarks which I design to submit, I shall present to the House a motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order that it may be fully considered in that mode, which is the only one, so far as I know, in which adequate justice can be done to it. It is perfectly manifest, I think, to every one on this floor, that in the present state of things, the House is not in a condition, nor has it the time, (considering this bill in the morning hour,) to do justice to it, and to the attorneys, marshals, and other officers who are embraced in its various provisions. That can only be done, in my view, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where greater latitude is allowed; where an opportunity will be given to amend the bill, clause by clause; and where the numerous imperfections with which it abounds, may be fairly, justly, and considerably corrected.

I have been struck throughout the whole course of the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. MEADE,] and of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. McLANAHAN,] with the singular mode of argument which has been resorted to by them, for the purpose of endeavoring to force this bill through the House, without giving to us an opportunity to amend it, and thus relieve it of some of its objectionable features. If passed in its present shape, it will pass without my vote.

Both of those gentlemen have confined their arguments and denunciations, in a great measure, to some four or five abuses, alleged to have been committed in the States of Massachusetts and New York. My colleague, in the remarks which he has just concluded, has called particular attention, and has consumed much of his time in an exposure of the New York case, which will be found on reference to the ninth and tenth pages of the report of the committee. I could not help being impressed with the fact, and it must have struck the House with great force, that instead of this radical change—this attempt to overthrow the present judiciary system of the country, which has been in existence for more than half a century, and with the exception complained of has worked well—this consolidation of everything in the hands of the Federal Government, in utter disregard of the rights, interests, and usages of the State governments, a much simpler, and speedier, and surer mode of reforming the abuses which are now complained of, should never have occurred to the chairman, and to the other members of the Judiciary Committee, in their consultations on this subject. It is Prescott Hall who has been guilty of all these improprieties, and who is now the district attorney in the State of New York. He is the man who has charged for everything. It is his charges which constitute the official misconduct so loudly and so justly condemned by my colleague and the chairman. He it is who has charged, as my colleague says, for the motion to adjourn for dinner, and yet he is still kept in the office of district attorney. Well, now, what is the remedy, as to Mr. Prescott Hall? What would strike any sensible man as the remedy? Would it not be, that the President of the United States should turn him out of office, and put into his place a man who would act fairly, justly, and in accordance with the law? That, it strikes me, is an infinitely better, safer, and more speedy remedy for the evil complained of. When so safe and certain a remedy is at hand, why attempt to upturn the whole judiciary system of the United States? Why attempt to establish new rules of practice for the thirty-one States of the Union?

Well, sir, how is it in regard to the State of Massachusetts? The very same remedy will correct the abuses there. If you will turn out the guilty parties, and select others who are men of character and standing to fill the offices, men who will act fairly and justly toward the United States, men who will faithfully discharge their duties and act up to the requirements of the law, who will charge only for their services what the law, fairly construed, allows to them, and who will be disposed to reform these abuses and reduce the expenses to something like a reasonable amount, we shall have a practical reform without risking the evils which this bill will visit upon the nation.

Mr. MEADE. Will my colleague permit me to say that these charges, to which we have referred, are certified by the judges as correct? So that it is not a single officer who has been guilty of malfeasance, but it is owing to a defect in the system.

My colleague says that I only mentioned one or two cases. Why, I could not mention more than one or two cases in an hour's speech. They are legion. These abuses are not confined to isolated instances; but if you will go and consult the books of the Comptroller, you will find that these abuses are legion, and grow out of the system, and not an abuse of the system by particular individuals, and it is to the system that we wish to apply the remedy.

Mr. LETCHER. Then it is very remarkable, if there are legions of abuses, as my colleague maintains, that he and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee should confine themselves to the four or five instances of abuses embraced in their speeches and the report. Why have not they furnished us with those numerous instances of abuses? Why has not the Comptroller of the Treasury furnished us with those instances which my colleague says are numberless on the files of that Department? Here are a few instances, confined almost exclusively to the States of New York and Massachusetts, and upon those cases the whole argument, from the commencement of this debate to the present time, has been rested by the chairman of the committee and by my colleague.

But there is another part of the explanation just given by my colleague, which is worthy of some little consideration. He undertakes to defend Mr. Prescott Hall, and these other officers who have been charged with these abuses, from the imputations cast upon them by the Comptroller, by saying that it is the judges who are to blame; that they are the men who have violated the law, and that there is no mode of reaching them, except by the operation of the committee's bill. Now, grant, if you please, that in the two instances referred to in this report—in New York and Massachusetts—these judges have acted improperly, does it follow therefore that every other judge in the thirty-one States of this Union is unprincipled and corrupt, and that they are one and all to be assailed and black-balled by the passage of a bill like this? Why, sir, this bill is an assault, from beginning to end, upon the Federal judiciary of the United States. They are not to be allowed even to certify as to matters and things which occur in their own courts. Their certificates in regard to things that have occurred in their own courts are to be discredited by those in the Comptroller's office, who cannot possibly have a knowledge of the facts, who have no information of the correctness of any one of the items of costs, except as that knowledge and information is derived from the accounts filed and verified by the certificates of the judges.

Now, sir, is it not a most extraordinary fact, worthy the serious consideration of this House, that these gentlemen who are for reforming the judiciary system are disposed to strike out all the checks which at present exist, and which have been devised by those who have preceded us as the best and only means of preventing abuses? If a judge of a United States court is not familiar with the facts which transpire in his own court, and under his immediate personal observation, who, in the name of God, is familiar with them? How can Comptroller Whittlesey, or his clerks, know anything about these facts? It is utterly impossible that they should know them; and yet, sir, these gentlemen gravely propose to remove all the checks now provided, and refer these matters to the Comptroller and his clerks, who can have no sort of knowledge in regard to the justice of the various items which are embraced in the accounts certified by the judge to him for consideration and allowance. This alone is in itself a very important and serious, not to say insuperable objection to the passage of this bill. You not only libel the Federal judges in the United States, but you actually deny to them a knowledge of what occurs in their own courts. You refuse to give credence and respect to their certificates, although they are the only officers of the law, who are cognizant of the facts, and who can furnish certificates that can be relied on to establish the justice of the account.

Mr. MEADE. Do I understand my colleague as justifying these fee bills?

Mr. LETCHER. Let me inform my colleague that I am not young enough to be caught in that way. I have seen some little service, although not perhaps so much as my colleague; but still I am not soft enough to be entrapped by questions of that sort. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEADE. Well, answer my question—yes or no.

Mr. LETCHER. My colleague, throughout this debate, has adopted a regular lawyer-like mode of argument, and his question is not inconsistent with that mode of argument. He has found that the only ground on which he can rely with a hope of success to carry this bill through the House is, to present and keep before the members these two or three cases of abuse, which are strenuously insisted upon in the report of the committee, and which form the staple of all the speeches in favor of this monstrous bill.

But, sir, look at some of its provisions. My colleague undertook to justify all the provisions of the bill, and insists that it is the only remedy for the evils complained of, if I correctly understand his positions. Well, sir, what is one of the first of those provisions?

Mr. MEADE. I voted against some of them in the committee, I will inform my colleague.

Mr. LETCHER. I am glad to hear it, and I hope my colleague will vote against the whole bill here.

Mr. MEADE. Not at all. I shall vote for the whole of it.

Mr. LETCHER. Now, here is one of the provisions of this bill. I ask the House to examine it carefully and considerably, and see whether there is any propriety or necessity for adopting such a provision—a provision likely to work the most mischievous results when reduced to practice. It is as follows:

"Whenever there are or shall be several charges against any person or persons for the same act or transaction, or for two or more acts or transactions connected together, or for two or more acts or transactions of the same class or crimes or offenses which may be properly joined, instead of having several indictments, the whole may be joined in one indictment in separate counts; and if two or more indictments shall be found in such cases, the court may order them consolidated."

[Here a message in writing from the President of the United States, was received by the hands of MILLIARD P. FILLMORE, Esq., his Private Secretary.]

Mr. LETCHER, (resuming.) I had supposed, sir, that the district attorney was selected for the express purpose of attending to all prosecutions and questions which might arise before the court in which the interests of the United States might be involved; and that he was to judge of the offenses, and the best mode of prosecuting the offender; but in this view it seems I have been laboring under a mistake. This bill not only undertakes to regulate the fees which shall be paid to district attorneys, marshals, and clerks, but it undertakes also to prescribe the mode in which a district attorney shall prepare his indictments in regard to offenses which may be brought before the court for consideration. Why, sir, who is so well qualified to judge in regard to matters of this sort? Who is so well qualified to determine whether there shall be several indictments or whether there shall be but one indictment embracing different counts, as the district attorney himself? All the facts and circumstances attending the case are known to him, and he must decide what course is best to be pursued. He knows whether the charges ought or ought not to be separate and distinct. I imagine, sir, that this section is something new and unheard-of in the history of legal practice. There is no parallel for it, so far as I know. The principle is now declared for the first time, that a man may be arrested for two crimes, and that then those two crimes may be joined in the same indictment, and he required to answer both on one trial. Would it not lead to inextricable confusion? For example: A man is arrested, charged with two or three different crimes, and indicted according to the terms of this section. You undertake then to introduce testimony in regard to each of those crimes. Different witnesses are relied upon to prove the several charges against him, and as many witnesses relied upon by the prisoner in his defense. What will be the result? The result inevitably is such confusion as is likely to mislead the jury, and prevent them from arriving at that conclusion which will do justice between the United States and the party who may be accused. Under the old practice justice has been secured. Why, then, should we abandon the old and safe rule, to adopt an experiment that promises nothing but mischief?

But this is not the most extraordinary clause in this remarkable bill. There is another, which my colleague fully indorses, which is more objectionable even than the one upon which I have been commenting, bad as that is. Here it is, and I beg gentlemen who may be favorably inclined towards this bill to examine it with care. It deserves such an examination:

"When two or more charges are, or shall be made, or two or more indictments shall be found against a person, only one writ or warrant shall be necessary to arrest and commit him for trial; and it shall be sufficient to state in the writ the name or general character of the offenses, 'or to refer to them only in VERY GENERAL TERMS.' Only one writ or warrant shall be necessary to remove a prisoner from one district to another, a copy of which may be delivered to the sheriff or jailor from whose custody the prisoner may be taken, and another copy thereof to the sheriff or jailor to whose custody he may be committed; and the original writ, with the marshal's return thereon, shall be returned to the clerk of the district to which he may be removed. Whenever a prisoner is committed to a sheriff or jailor by virtue of a writ, warrant, or mittimus, a copy thereof shall be delivered to the sheriff or jailor as his authority to hold the prisoner, and the original writ, warrant, or mittimus shall be returned to the proper court or officer, with the officer's return thereon."

I had supposed, sir, that under the Constitution of the United States, whenever a man was arrested and deprived of his liberty, he had a right to demand that the charges on which he was arrested should be made with that clearness that would enable him to make his defense. But my colleague, it seems, takes altogether a different view of this matter. He presumes that the man arrested is guilty—that he is therefore perfectly aware of the precise nature of the charges upon which he is arrested, and should be prepared to make his defense. My colleague told us also that no man had ever been arrested, who did not learn the cause of arrest without looking to the warrant to ascertain it. Such doctrine reverses the well-established rule that has ever been recognized in criminal proceedings. The doctrine, as I have always understood, is, that every man is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is made to appear. But this section of the bill, and the explanation of it given by my colleague, establishes another rule, viz: that every man is presumed to be guilty until he establishes his innocence. Sir, a principle so monstrous ought not to be avowed in this enlightened age.

But, again, suppose a man is arrested upon a general warrant, such as is described in this section, charging him with larceny, perjury, and various other crimes of a high character, (the number here is unlimited,) and the prisoner applies for, and succeeds in procuring, a writ of habeas corpus. Well, sir, suppose further, that the judge in hearing the cause ascertains that the party is not guilty, and has not been properly arrested upon four or five charges out of six the warrant mentions in general terms, and makes that return to the officer having him in custody. What then is to be done? Is there to be a discharge of the party as to these four or five charges?

Sir, this section, if adopted, will produce confusion, and will lead to inextricable difficulty, and this is one that will spring from it. If warrants are to embrace a half dozen crimes, and those charged "in very general terms," it will be utterly impossible to secure justice—the great end and aim of judicial proceedings. Such a provision ought to be universally scouted. It does seem to me that if there can be a violation of the Constitution of the country or a violation of the rights and liberties of the citizen, it is to be found in this provision which is sought to be inserted in this bill.

There are other provisions in the bill to which I object; but if we can refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we can then have the opportunity of having it read section by section, and of offering such amendments to its provisions as may make it acceptable to me. I desire to see abuses corrected; but this bill will not correct those complained of. I submit the motion that the bill may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw that motion for one moment.

Mr. LETCHER. I will if you will renew it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will renew it.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I renew the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMART. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up and have referred and printed the communication from the President of the United States upon the Speaker's table relating to the fishing question.

There was no objection, and the communication was taken up and, without being read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The question then recurred upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being put, it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 196, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1853, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday last, an amendment had been proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] proposing to fix the salary of the clerk of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House at $1,500 per annum.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. ORR. I propose to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And that from the commencement of the present Congress the compensation of the messengers employed in the post office of the House of Representatives be $1,000 per annum in lieu of their present per diem.

Mr. O. said: The object of this amendment is to provide that those persons employed about the post office of this House shall receive a salary of $1,000 per annum, instead of their present pay of $2 50 per day. They perform more labor than most officers connected with the Government, being constantly employed from fourteen to sixteen hours per day. I think if there is any case where there should be an increase of salary, there should be an increase in those cases.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman from South Carolina had better withdraw his amendment for the present. If this additional compensation be given, the appropriation will have to be increased; but to what extent, we do not know. If we are to give the additional compensation, it is important that we should know what amount of appropriation to make to meet it. I do not want a deficiency bill at the next session of Congress for this and other like purposes.

Mr. ORR. In order to obviate the objection of the gentleman from Alabama, I will add to the amendment $4,000. This will be sufficient to cover the increased compensation.

The question now being on the adoption of Mr. ORR's amendment—

Mr. HENN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. MILLSON and MEADE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurring upon the adoption of the amendment as amended, it was put; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 65, noes 63; no quorum voting.

Mr. FOWLER demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. FOWLER, and JOHNSON of Tennessee, were appointed.

Mr. McMULLIN I desire to ask, what is the salary of those officers now?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 41.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. DIMMICK, under instruction of the Committee on Patents, offered the following amendment:

For the additional compensation of the disbursing clerk and the draftsman in the Patent Office, $300 each, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund; and that hereafter the disbursing clerk shall be required to give bond, with proper security, in the sum of $5,000, conditional for the faithful discharge of the duties of the office. Also, for the compensation of two additional permanent clerks in the Patent Office, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Patents at a salary of $1,400 each, the sum of $2,800, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund.

Mr. D. said: I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Commissioner of Patents has recommended a considerable increase in the clerical force of that Department. The Committee on Patents have had under consideration this whole subject; and as the result of their investigation, they have come to the conclusion expressed in that proposition. The Commissioner of Patents recommended the appointment of four additional permanent clerks in that Department; but the Committee on Patents determined to suggest the appointment of two permanent clerks, and to increase the salary of the draughtsman, with that of the disbursing clerk, by the sum of $300 each. This is all the increase they have thought proper to recommend at this time. I hope it will be the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment.

A MEMBER. Where is this compensation to come from?

Mr. DIMMICK. It is to come out of the Patent Office fund. It requires no appropriation from the general Treasury. I therefore hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I could not hear the amendment well when it was read. I understand, however, that it provides for increasing the compensation of various officers, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund. Now, I should like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. DIMMICK,] or any other gentleman, tell me what is the amount of that fund?

Mr. CARTER. There are $20,000 on hand, deducting the appropriation for completing the Patent Office building.

Mr. HOUSTON. The appropriation for completing the Patent Office building, and for sustaining the establishment, have been very large; and now I should like to have the gentleman tell me what is the real condition of that fund, and whether this appropriation will not have to come out of the general Treasury?

Mr. CARTER. It will not. There are $20,000 of that fund unexpended, in addition to that expended for completing the building, and for all other purposes, so that this will not come out of the general Treasury; and I am satisfied the service of that Department requires it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman's statement shows, as I think, that he is in error. He says there are $20,000 of that fund left, besides the appropriations made for the building. Now, the appropriations, aside from those for the building, would go largely over the $20,000. There are $250,000 or $260,000 in the bill for completing one wing of the Patent Office and the commencement of the other. But leaving that out of the question, there are other appropriations in the bill which will much more than absorb the $20,000, if I am correct in my recollection.

Mr. CARTER. The permanent services of the Department will not consume that amount, especially if you take into consideration the constantly-accruing fund of the office. I should like to inquire of the gentleman, what appropriation he alludes to? The whole service of the Department amounts to only about $8,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman's recollection is not very good, or mine is defective. There is an appropriation in that bill now, I believe, for upwards of $5,000; and the gentleman got an appropriation increasing a $500 clerk to $1,200, and another appropriation of $1,000 or $1,500 for books, and $2,000 for fixing up the library. These make it over $8,000, and nearly $10,000.

Mr. CARTER. The whole services of this Department, as provided by this bill, with this addition to it, does not amount to $12,000 a year.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. McCORKLE offered the following amendment, to come in after the nine hundred and eleventh line of the bill, at the end of "miscellaneous items:"

For the establishment of a branch of the United States Mint, at San Francisco, California, in accordance with the provisions of the law approved — day of —, the sum of $300,000: Provided, That no contract for materials, or for the purchase, lease, rent, or erection of the building shall be made except to the lowest bidder, after sixty days' advertisement in at least three newspapers, two of which shall be published in the State of California: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the transfer of machinery and material from the United States Mint or Branches to the Branch Mint at San Francisco at a fair valuation; also, for the current expenses of the year, the sums of—

For salary of Superintendent of the Mint.....	$4,500
For salary of Treasurer.....	4,500
For salary of Assayer.....	3,000
For salary of Melter and Refiner.....	3,000
For salary of Coiner.....	3,000
For salary of Assistants and Clerks.....	17,500
For labor.....	50,000
For acids.....	100,000
For contingencies.....	15,000

Mr. HIBBARD. I raise the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. McCORKLE] is not in accordance with the provision of any statute, and is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must overrule the point of order raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire. At the present session of Congress a bill has passed establishing a Mint in the State of California. This amendment proposes to appropriate the money necessary for the purpose of executing that law.

Mr. HIBBARD. Has the act establishing a Mint in California become a law?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HIBBARD. Has it received the signature of the President?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that it has.

Mr. McCORKLE. I will state, that the estimates for the appropriation contained in my amendment have been sent in by the proper Department, and I believe have been handed to the Committee of Ways and Means. They were not, however, sent in time for that committee to report this amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. No estimate for these appropriations has been before the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. McCORKLE. The estimates came to the Speaker of the House, as do all such communications intended for the Committee of Ways and Means. Those estimates I copied from that communication, with the permission of the Speaker. I supposed that that communication had been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HIBBARD. I am not aware that these appropriations have been before the Committee of Ways and Means, or before any committee. I understand they have not. The regular appropriation for the establishment of the Mint, as proposed here, amounts to $300,000, and the other items, I believe, to $200,000, making the sum of $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, in addition to $300,000 for the establishment of the Mint, provides for the salary of the Superintendent of the Mint, and of the other officers, and also for other purposes.

Mr. HIBBARD. The whole amount is about $500,000, if I understand the amendment aright. Besides the appropriation of $300,000 for the establishment of the Mint, there is an appropriation for the salaries of its officers. It strikes me that that part of the amendment at least, is premature. If the Mint is established by law—and such is the fact from the statement of the Chair—it may be proper for us to make an appropriation; but we ought to ascertain, through a committee, upon examination, what the appropriation should be. It has not received the examination of any committee, and it can receive no examination except that cursory and imperfect examination which it will have here. The amendment certainly proposes to go further than we should go. It provides now for the salaries of officers who do not exist—who have not been appointed and may not be appointed for six months to come. I would not be understood as being opposed to a proper and rightful appropriation for the building of the Mint; but I am opposed to allowing, at this time, the appropriation as asked for. In the course of the deliberations upon this bill, in this and the other branch of Congress, there will, doubtless, be time for due and proper consideration, and I cannot give my assent to this amount at this time, and I hope this committee will not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to strike out of that amendment all that it appropriates beyond the $300,000 for the erection of the building. I do it for the purpose of saying that if the committee think proper to appropriate that amount now, it can do so; but it is evident that there is no necessity in the world for making an appropriation for the salaries of the various officers of the Mint, and for other purposes. That will not be called for until the Mint is erected and put into operation. The law creating that Mint says that it may be established, provided that the cost shall not exceed $300,000; and the law was so specific that it went on to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury should make contracts which should be approved by the President of the United States, not only for the building of the Mint, but for the entire machinery. Everything was to be contracted for, and to come within the $300,000. They cannot make a contract for building a Mint within less than a year, and I do not know but it will take more than that time. It is evident that under no circumstance can they want this appropriation for salaries of officers before the next session of Congress. I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to ask the gentleman if there is not an assay office already established there?

Mr. HOUSTON. There is; but as a Government we have no connection with it. It is in the hands of and conducted, as I understand, by those who have obtained it under contract from the Government; and we are under no obligation to furnish anything at all for it. The next Congress will meet before the contract shall have been made, much less before the building is completed. Why, then, appropriate for the salaries of officers who will not enter upon the discharge of their duties short of twelve months? I did not at first know that such an appropriation was contained in the amendment of my friend from California, [Mr. McCORKLE.] If this House is disposed to appropriate the $300,000, so as to put it in the power of the Secretary to procure the machinery, &c., if he chooses, I shall have no objection; yet to that I think a proviso ought to be attached, providing that the money shall be applied under the law by which the Mint was created. But there can be no necessity for this additional appropriation of $187,000, which, I understand, is the amount contained in the bill above the $300,000.

Mr. McCORKLE. These estimates I had supposed the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means fully understood had been sent in, and were to form a part of this amendment. The first appropriation asked for in this amendment is for the building of the Mint, and the construction of the machinery; and I appeal to the gentleman's intelligence, to his common sense, to know whether it is not necessary that the officers of this Mint—the Superintendent, the Coiner, and the Assayer—should be appointed now to superintend the manufacture, or make a selection of the machinery necessary for that Mint?

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman propose to have these officers appointed now, and let them commence drawing their salaries from the time of their appointment?

Mr. McCORKLE. That is proposed, and the necessity of the case requires it; as the Secretary of the Treasury is determined to put this Mint under contract at once. That being the case, there is an absolute necessity for the appointment of these officers. Does the gentleman expect them to serve without a salary?

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no necessity for their appointment now.

Mr. McCORKLE. Why not? The machinery must be selected, or manufactured, and these officers must perform duties in connection with that. They are supposed to understand it; and the contractor, who may assume to construct the building of this Mint, and to furnish the machinery, should not have the selection of the machinery.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Secretary of the Treasury makes his contract for that.

Mr. McCORKLE. But it is supposed that the Secretary of the Treasury may erect temporary buildings for the purposes of coinage. If this is done it will be necessary that these officers should be appointed; and, if so, it is necessary they should have a salary. There are coining establishments in California which can be rented cheap, for any length of time, and until the Mint itself goes into operation. They have nearly all the materials necessary for that purpose.

But, rather than defeat the passage of the amendment at all, I am willing to separate it so as to have a vote first upon that part making the appropriation for the erection of the building, and then a vote upon the appropriation for the salaries.

Mr. HAMILTON. The proviso should be stricken out; it conflicts with the law.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think the proviso is in conflict with the law. The proviso reads:

"Provided, That no contract for materials, or for the purchase, lease, rent, or erection of the building, shall be made except to the lowest bidder, after sixty days' advertisement in at least three newspapers, two of which shall be published in the State of California."

The law by which the Mint was created did not direct whether contracts should be with the lowest bidder, or otherwise, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. It only provided for contracts; and I suppose this provision may be consistent with the law. But then there is this fact about it: The second proviso ought to be a restriction, so as to provide that the expenditures shall not exceed the amount authorized by the act for the establishment of the Mint. The Secretary of the Treasury might, by possibility, determine that Congress, by putting in this proviso, directed contracts should go to the lowest responsible bidder. He might determine it was such a change of the law as would authorize him even to exceed the $300,000. I would desire, therefore, of the gentleman from California, instead of this second proviso—which I do not think properly placed here—to make an additional proviso, that under no circumstances shall the expenditure exceed the sum authorized by the law creating the Mint. I move to amend the amendment by the addition of the following proviso:

Provided, further, That no contract or contracts shall be made for such Branch Mint and machinery, for an amount exceeding $300,000.

Mr. McCORKLE. I accept the gentleman's proviso, and modify my amendment accordingly. The question was then taken on Mr. McCORKLE's amendment as modified, and it was agreed to.

Mr. McCORKLE. I now submit the following amendment, to come in after what has just been adopted:

That there shall also be appropriated, for current expenses of the year, the sums of—
For salary of Superintendent of the Mint..... $4,500
For salary of Treasurer..... 4,500
For salary of Assayer..... 3,000
For salary of Meltor and Refiner..... 3,000
For salary of Coiner..... 3,000
For salaries of Assistants and Clerks..... 17,500
For labor..... 50,000
For acids..... 100,000
For contingencies..... 15,000

Mr. Chairman, with regard to that amendment I have simply to say this: that in the amendment which has just been passed, we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to rent an establishment in San Francisco, if in his discretion he thinks proper to do so, for the purpose of coinage. There is already there what is called the United States Assay office. There are also some two or three other private coining establishments there. They may, in fact, be called mints. If the Secretary of the Treasury deems it proper to rent one of these establishments, it will be absolutely necessary to have these officers; and I believe that I am not going too far to say—but I will not state that he did, although he ought to—that he will rent one of these establishments for the purpose of coining, until the Mint shall go into operation. In that event, as I have already said, these officers will be absolutely necessary. These salaries are fixed by the law already passed and approved. The three last items of my amendment are for materials which will be necessary in order to carry on the establishment, should he rent one. I see no good reason why the amendment should not be passed at once, and let this Mint go into operation immediately. I am not tenacious about the subject, however. It comes from the Department. That is the view they take of it, and I think it is absolutely necessary to the interests of the people of California to supply them immediately with an institution for the coinage of money, which this Congress has failed to do for so long a time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I remain in the same opinion I expressed a few moments ago. These appropriations are all unnecessary. The gentleman, by referring to the law, will see at once that the contracts have to be approved by the President of the United States before anything can be done. The gentleman from California speaks of renting a building and putting the machinery there. Why, sir, the purchasing of the machinery is to be a part of the contract which must come within the $300,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury cannot take a single step until he completes his contract and the President of the United States has approved it. There is no authority for renting a house for the machinery in the original law, and if the gentleman proposes to authorize such a thing, I shall object to his amendment as being out of order. If I understand him as proposing that we shall purchase machinery, aside from what is provided in the law, I shall raise that point of order. Congress will meet again within three months, and there will be ample time for the consideration of this subject.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN offered the following amendment:

For payment of losses by Indian depredations in New Mexico since that country was taken possession of by the American troops under General Kearny in the year 1846, the sum of $1,751,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, is that amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the Indian intercourse act of 1834 provides for compensating persons whose property has been destroyed by Indians. He does not recollect the exact provision of that statute, but feels, nevertheless, disposed to entertain the amendment.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is in strict pursuance of not an ordinary, but a supreme law of the United States. The 9th article of the treaty between the United States and Mexico of 1848, provides that—

"The Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time, (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States,) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction."

By this treaty, which is the supreme law of the land, the Government of the United States guaranteed to maintain and protect the people of New Mexico in the enjoyment of their property. Many of the inhabitants of that Territory have been despoiled of their property by the Indians. The amount of their losses as indicated in the amendment is taken from the census returns, which, of course, were prepared by the officers of the United States. It is not the exact amount, but falls short several hundred dollars. The case designed to be provided for here is an aggravated one. The people of New Mexico requested of the authorities of that Territory permission to take their own property away from the Indians, but were met with a refusal. They were refused permission to do so in the time of General Kearny, because we were then at war. Consent to their request was not afterwards given, from the fear that a border warfare would be the consequence. Yet I will undertake to assert that the people of no other portion of our country would have remained quiet whilst their property was being taken in their midst, although there might be a law to the contrary. If the people of Texas had a large portion of their property taken from them by Indians, and the depot of that property was within the limits of their own State, I undertake to say that the Government of the United States might have passed as many laws as it pleased, yet that people would have retaken their lost property. The law-abiding New Mexicans have obeyed orders, and relied upon the justice of the Government. It seems to me that this thing is very clear. The sum in the amendment is taken from the census returns. The whole amount is not absolutely appropriated, but only so much as may be necessary to meet the claims that may be presented.

Mr. CHASTAIN. The amount proposed by the amendment is a large one to be appropriated at one time, and, as for myself, I am not prepared to give my vote for it. I do not think New Mexico is worth that amount of money. [Laughter.] I want to know whether the gentleman will take New Mexico in part payment?

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I desire to state that this amount was returned by the officers appointed by the United States to take the census, and the return is not in gross. I had the honor once before of bringing this subject to the attention of the House. The return sets forth the number of horses, mules, and sheep carried off from the various counties since 1846.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Would he, if he had a vote in this committee, vote for the amendment himself?

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. Most assuredly I would.

Mr. HOUSTON. Here is a large claim that it is proposed to appropriate for in gross. From the reading of the amendment, I judge that the money goes to a great many people. The subject never has been before a committee. My friend from New Mexico is himself almost as uninformed upon the subject as we are, because I presume that he has not had an opportunity of investigating the case according to the proof.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman. I have stated the ground upon which my opinion is founded, so far as the amount is concerned. The whole amount is not appropriated, but only so much thereof as shall be necessary to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the assistant of the Superintendent of the Hall of the Exploring Expedition shall hereafter receive a compensation at the rate of $700 per annum, to be paid out of the same fund out of which he is now paid.

Mr. Chairman, I will only say, that this raises the salary of a deserving employee from one dollar per day to $700 per annum.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Who is he?

Mr. DUNHAM. The assistant of the Superintendent of the Hall of the Exploring Expedition.

Mr. STEVENS. He is the man who sweeps out the hall.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I offer the following amendment:

That the assistant constructor and draughtsman in the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repair, of the Navy Department be paid for his services, $1,600 per annum, in pursuance of the act of Congress of August 31st, 1842.

I offer this amendment with the view of directing the Navy Department to pay to those gentlemen the amount required by law. The act reorganizing the Navy Department, passed the 31st of August, 1842, provides a certain number of clerks for the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repair, and also provides for the employment of a draughtsman. The practice has been to divide the $1,600, provided by law for a draughtsman, between the clerk and draughtsman—thus making an additional clerk not authorized by law—and paying but $800 to the draughtsman and assistant constructor. I desire to direct the Navy Department to pay this gentleman, who is eminently qualified for his situation, the whole amount provided by law, to which he is entitled. I know of no other course to pursue than this—no other way by which to correct the error now existing. Here is what the law says:

"For the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repair, one assistant constructor and draughtsman, who shall receive for his services the sum of $1,600 per annum, and four clerks, one of whom shall receive for his services $1,400 per annum, and the others shall receive for their services $1,000 per annum each."

I read this from the Navy Register, published by the Department. By reference to it I find that the salary of Richard Powell, draughtsman, is $800 per annum, and that of D. R. Goodloe, an additional clerk, I suppose him to be, $800. It will be seen that there is no provision for any such clerk, and there is only a provision for an assistant constructor and draughtsman. Independent of that, I may remark here, that all the other draughtsmen in all the other bureaus receive $1,000. The salary of $800 is not sufficient to pay the expenses of this gentleman and sustain his family. I do not desire to consume the time of the committee longer. I could read certificates of his ability to perform the duties of his office from the head of the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repair, as well as a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, requesting that the compensation of this gentleman might be fixed at a larger amount than is now paid him.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am opposed to the amendment. I wish to say that the Committee of Ways and Means have reported every cent estimated for by that Department, for the pay not only of the Bureau clerks, but the draughtsmen, per act of the 31st of August, 1842 and 1845, $9,400. The very case to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] refers is marked down and included in the estimates of the head of the Bureau, by which the amount is made up for the Navy Department. We have appropriated all they asked. They made their estimates under those laws, and we reported to this House the amount they asked; and this committee have agreed to it. The amount which the gentleman now asks to be appropriated must be a sum beyond any knowledge on the part of the Secretary of the Navy. If the Secretary intended to ask additional compensation, why did he not do it in his regular estimates? Why did he not submit a proposition to the committee?

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not ask that any additional sum shall be appropriated. I only ask that the sum required by law, to be paid to this gentleman, shall be paid him.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then the gentleman does not ask us to give any additional appropriation, but asks that we shall instruct the Secretary of the Navy how to apply the money which we appropriate to him. The law directs him how to apply it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have submitted the case clearly.

Mr. HOUSTON. We are bound to presume that the Secretary of the Navy and the heads of these Bureaus carry out the law. If this salary of $1,600 is divided between the draughtsman and the clerk, I take it for granted that it is upon an agreement with the draughtsman, and as such he ought to be bound by it.

The question was then taken upon Mr. FLORENCE's amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to offer the following amendment:

For the payment of Caroline M. Fleury, the widow of Louis A. Fleury, deceased, $280, due said Louis A. Fleury, as clerk connected with the Delaware breakwater from the first of January to the last of April, inclusive, 1834.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. GORMAN. I can explain it in a very few words.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the question of order submitted by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] must be sustained. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the amendment is out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. GORMAN. It is for balance of pay, and would really come in as a deficiency.

Mr. HOUSTON. The debate is out of order.

Mr. GORMAN. I was only about to state the nature of the case. I think the amendment is not out of order, because it is an appropriation for services already performed, and services which were authorized by law. The services have been performed, but the young man being dead, the money cannot be drawn under the present law, unless letters of administration be taken out by the widow. This is the only reason why it is brought here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is in the nature of a private claim; and, therefore, sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the following amendment:

That the Library Committee be authorized to sell any works in the Library which were rendered imperfect by the late fire, and to appropriate the proceeds of said sale to the purchase of other works.

Mr. Chairman, the fire in the Library last winter destroyed a part of a number of sets, leaving us different volumes, which are valuable to the collectors of volumes, but of no use to us. We have not felt ourselves authorized to sell them, without such authority as is proposed by this amendment to give us. We simply ask, therefore, by this amendment, authority to part with them at fair prices, and to purchase other books with the proceeds.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BISSELL. I offer the following amendment:

And that the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay to William H. Minnix, the stationery and petition clerk, the same compensation annually, which is paid to the assistant clerks of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, from the commencement of the present Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I think that this amendment contemplates a very evident act of justice, and I hope there will be no opposition to it. I am satisfied myself in regard to it, and I would not have offered it if I were not satisfied that it is reasonable and just.

Mr. HOUSTON. What is the salary of that clerk?

Mr. BISSELL. Two dollars and a half per day.

Mr. HOUSTON. In what department is he employed?

Mr. BISSELL. He has charge of the stationery, and also of petitions. His duties are somewhat miscellaneous.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. A word only in reply to the inquiry of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. HOUSTON.] I am somewhat conversant with the duties of the gentleman who is referred to in this amendment, and I know that they are very responsible and laborious. He has charge of the petitions and memorials which come to this House; and he has the distribution of them to the committees.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is doubtless true; but the statement which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] makes, in regard to this officer, may be made in regard to all the officers of the Government. They all have responsible stations to fill and duties to perform. If they have not, the offices ought to be dispensed with; they should not exist at all. I do think if we intend to interfere with the salaries of the officers about this Capitol, this city, or elsewhere—salaries which have been established by law, and which have existed for years—we ought to take up that subject separate and apart from all others, and remodel the whole system.

Mr. BISSELL. It was not my intention to say one word upon this subject. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] consumes the time of the House, in an argument in opposition to this little amendment. It is a simple proposition of increasing his pay fifty cents a day, and there is not a more laborious man about the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not wish the gentleman to consume my time.

Mr. BISSELL. You are consuming my time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] submitted an amendment. Having submitted some remarks in favor of his amendment, he ceased to speak, and the Chair supposing he had finished the remarks which he designed to offer, assigned the floor to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] When the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] rose and interrogated the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair stated that the gentleman could do so by permission of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will detain the committee but a moment longer. I have no special knowledge of this particular case, and therefore I do not intend that my remarks shall apply to it solely. This may be a very just case—and I have no doubt that in all the Departments there are cases where the compensation is not large enough. I am not complaining of this particular case. I am presenting the whole question to the consideration of the committee, whether they will in this very unsatisfactory manner take up this important subject and legislate upon it, or whether it is not our duty to refer it to some committee—if not this session, at the next—to bring forward a plan which will put all the officers of the Government upon a proper and equitable basis. It does seem to me that this plan of taking up isolated cases is a very unsatisfactory mode of legislation. Every member of this body has some favorite whose salary he would be glad to see increased. I have, I know.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to offer an amendment. After "Minnix," insert the words "the messengers of the House of Representatives."

The object of this amendment is this: The messengers of this House, as we all know, are officers who are in the daily performance of important duties demanding labor and attention, and I believe, so far as my own knowledge is concerned, I can certainly say that they have performed and do perform these duties faithfully. The original amendment, I understand, raises the compensation of the individual named to $3 per day. It is precisely the amount which is given to the messengers of the Senate, and no more. I conceive as our messengers have hitherto received but $2 50, there is an inequality which should be remedied by the adoption of this provision. I think the original amendment should pass, for I know the duties of that officer, and I know that they are well discharged. I know that his compensation will not be too high if it is put up to the amount asked by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL.]

I think, with regard to these messengers, that they should be put upon the same footing as the messengers of the Senate, because their duties are certainly equally responsible and equally arduous. I hope that the amendment to the amendment will prevail, and that the whole will be adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know that it is a very unthankful business for me to oppose increase of pay to officers who are around me here all day, or who are in this city in any of the Departments. But then I have a duty to perform, and I mean to perform it according to the dictates of my own judgment. I do not profess to be under the influence of the Senate quite so much as my friend from New York seems to be. I suppose that if the Senate were to pay $10 a day, the gentleman could, with just as much propriety, come forward and ask us to do likewise, because the Senate had done it, and that he would be just as willing to do it. It is enough for us to follow the good example of the Senate, but for God's sake let us not follow their bad example. We have been in the habit of paying our messengers the compensation that is provided by law. They knew what it was before they entered upon the discharge of their duties. Who does not remember at the commencement of this very session of Congress the turmoil and confusion and bickering and ill-feeling that sprang up here because officers in this House and about this House were displaced, and others put in their stead? There was a general scramble for the places, and now the very men who sought those places, and knew what compensation they were to get, are coming forward and presenting their claims to us, because their compensation is not enough! The gentlemen who came in, scrambled and contended very hard for the places, knowing what the compensation was, and the gentlemen who went out complained bitterly that they were proscribed from that compensation.

Now, it seems to me, as I said before, that if we mean to legislate according to our own sense of propriety, we must stand to the compensation as the law establishes it, unless we are given a good reason for increasing it, and that reason must not be that the Senate have increased the compensation of their employees, but it must be that a public necessity exists, this compensation is too low, and that therefore we must increase it.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to the fact that all the expenses of living in this city have vastly increased within a very short time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have heard that five hundred times, and I reply to it by saying that the expenses of living in almost every place in the United States have increased. And what reason exists for increasing the salaries here, that does not apply to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Charleston, New Orleans, and every other place where officers of this Government live?

I take my own State, for example: a year ago we could get the provisions of life at prices one third below what we have to give for them now, and will you not increase the compensation of your officers there, as well as of those here? There is not a reason which has been given for increasing the salaries of officers of the Government here which does not apply with equal force as well to officers of the Government elsewhere.

The question then being upon Mr. SEYMOUR's amendment to the amendment, it was put, and on a division the Chair announced—ayes 40, noes 58; no quorum voting.

Mr. HAMILTON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, and GOODENOW were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 60.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

To the three public folders, viz: John D. Utt, Henry McLaughlin, and John C. Mulloy, $2 50 each per day, from the commencement of the present session.

I have generally opposed these increases of compensation, but these men deserve more at the hands of this House than any other men employed about the Capitol. They have been here during the whole session of Congress; one of them has received $75 for his services, and another only $12. They are really deserving of this compensation.

Mr. GENTRY. I desire to remark, as a suggestion somewhat in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, that I have a proposition here general in its terms; one embracing all the employees of the Government, in the Executive Departments as well as here, and which proposes an increase of compensation to them upon a uniform principle. I do not know that I am opposed to this proposition, but I think this partial increase of compensation has a tendency to impair the probability of the adoption of the general one which I design to offer, and which I have been waiting for an opportunity to offer. I hope the gentleman will allow me, by common consent, to offer mine now. He will find that it covers all these cases in a satisfactory way.

Mr. HAMILTON. These persons to whom my amendment relates are not salaried officers of the Government.

Mr. GENTRY. My amendment provides for all such characters, whether employed at an annual salary or in temporary positions.

Mr. HAMILTON. Permite me to remark that these gentlemen are employed in folding public documents. They are not salaried officers. One of them has received $75 for his services, and another only $12.

Mr. GENTRY. My amendment will give them twenty per cent. on what they now receive.

Mr. HAMILTON. I only propose to give them $2 50 per day, from the commencement of the session.

The question now being upon Mr. HAMILTON's amendment to the amendment,

Mr. SMART demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. St. MARTIN, and CABLE of Ohio, were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 41; no quorum voting.

[Loud cries of "Call the roll!"]

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that there may be a recount.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be a recount if no objection be made.

There being no objection, the tellers resumed their places, and the question being again taken, the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 32.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. ORR. I ask that the amendment as amended may be read, with a view to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment as amended, as follows:

"And that the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay to William H. Minnix, the stationery and petition clerk, and the messengers of the House of Representatives, the same compensation, annually, which is paid to the assistant clerks of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, from the commencement of the present Congress; and the three public folders, John D. Utt, Henry McLaughlin, and John C. Mulloy, $2 50 per day, from the commencement and during the present session."

Mr. BISSELL. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me the floor for one moment to make an explanation.

Mr. ORR. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BISSELL. It is necessary, in order to carry out the intention of those who have offered this amendment, to add after the words "messengers of the House of Representatives," the words "three dollars per day."

The CHAIRMAN. That change can only be made by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to any modification.

Mr. ORR. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "the same compensation, annually, which is paid to the assistant clerks of the Clerk of the House of Representatives," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "three dollars per day."

My friend from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] in offering this amendment, stated to the House that the object of it was to give this gentleman the same compensation which is paid to the messengers, which is three dollars per day, but referring to the Blue Book here, it will be seen—

Mr. BISSELL. That is precisely the thing which I wish to get at now. It was an accidental omission of my own. I thought that on raising the compensation of this gentleman up to the salary paid to the assistant clerks of the House, it would be three dollars a day. That was my intention.

Mr. GENTRY. Then I understand it to be a mere verbal correction that the gentleman desires to make, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. BISSELL. My object is to make it the same as the salary paid to the assistant clerks of the House—that is $1,500. But with regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from

New York, in relation to the messengers, it is intended that they shall have $3 a day.

Mr. ORR. Well, I understood the gentleman from Illinois, in the remarks which he made, to say that the increase to this gentleman, Mr. Minnix, would make his compensation $3 per day, and I was not very averse to increasing his pay from $2 50 to $3 a day. But if the amendment stands as the gentleman framed it originally, instead of this officer's pay being $3 a day, it will be $5 a day, for the assistant clerks get instead of $3 a day, $1,500 per annum. I therefore offer the amendment which I have indicated.

I am not prepared to say whether the amendment ought to be adopted or not, for I have not examined into the details of the duties performed by this officer. I had examined into the duties of the officers for whose benefit I offered an amendment this morning. I know the extent of their services. I know that they worked from twelve to sixteen hours a day, hot or cold, summer or winter, and I thought their compensation ought to be increased. I have not investigated this case, and therefore I am not prepared to say whether this increase ought to be made or not. But unless the amendment which I have offered be adopted, you will increase the compensation to $1,500, instead of to $3 per day.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish merely to say, in explanation of my amendment, that I had the same impression that the gentleman from South Carolina had, and hence I offered the amendment in that form. Unless the words "three dollars per day," are inserted, it will be senseless, or else will give the messengers $1,500, which I did not intend. I stated that the object of the amendment was to raise the pay from $2 50 to $3 per day, and I presume that was the intention of those who voted for it.

Mr. MASON. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. I observe that the gentlemen who are offering and advocating these amendments are very little conversant with the duties of these messengers, and, therefore, are not prepared to make a distinction which ought to be made in their compensation. The Committee on Accounts, owing to the fact that we have had the superintendence and control of the contingent fund, have become acquainted with all these subjects, and have had this matter before us since the beginning of the session; but in consequence of the fact that the Committee on Public Lands consumed some months at the commencement of this session, our committee have never been called on, or we should long since have reported a bill regulating all these salaries.

Now, sir, Mr. Minnix, whose compensation is proposed to be raised, is a messenger, and there are three other messengers, making four to the Clerk's office. Three of these messengers have already, by these various resolutions, raising the salaries of particular incumbents in the various messengers' offices, been provided for—some by the House, and one by the Committee on Accounts. They have been raised to $1,500 per annum each. The gentleman who was Superintendent at the Library, a very competent and popular man, had his salary raised to $1,500 per annum. His successors, of course, claim the same compensation. If one man gets $1,500 for the performance of the duties of an office, the successors will, of course, claim and expect the same.

It was the same way with the reading clerk, Mr. Walker, who was in here the last Congress, and read for Mr. Campbell. He was allowed to receive $1,500 a year for his services. The present reading clerk, who has performed the same service, expects to receive the same pay. The Committee on Accounts are governed in these matters by the resolutions of the House. They had instructed him, or a majority of the committee had, to report a resolution giving each of these officers what they expect to receive.

Mr. BISSELL. I would inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if, with reference to Mr. Minnix, he does not, although he only ranks as a messenger, perform more clerical duties than any other messenger?

Mr. MASON. The duties that gentleman performs are those of great importance, and involve a good deal of responsibility.

Mr. BISSELL. But are not his duties, to a great extent, clerical duties?

Mr. MASON. The respective duties of these messengers are assigned them by the Clerk of the House. But it turns out that they all get their compensation raised to $1,500, and some of them want messengers to wait upon them. I believe one of the messengers has a boy appointed to wait upon him as his messenger.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted. Mr. MASON. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. MASON. I move to strike out "$3" and insert "$2 50."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not strictly in order, the committee having inserted $3 by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina. It is not in order to amend what has been inserted by the committee.

Mr. MASON. Would it not be in order to increase the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to amend, at all, what has been inserted by a vote of the committee.

Mr. MASON. Then I will move a proviso to the amendment. I move the following:

Provided, That no extra compensation shall be given at the end of the session to any of the clerks or messengers of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. MASON. The Committee on Accounts are expressly prohibited from allowing any extra compensation to any of the officers of the House. But it is not only unpopular but odious to go against this extra compensation; and I expect at the end of the session to see almost every gentleman here come up and vote for it. I will suggest that this whole subject needs revision. You have forty-odd clerks and messengers about the House, and many of the messengers are expecting to receive the pay of clerks. I will not say that Mr. Minnix receives full pay for the services he performs; but it is the duty of the Clerk to apportion these duties among the various messengers, so that no one shall have an extra amount of labor to perform. I do not know that this is done. I do not know but some of them perform a larger amount of service than they are paid for; but one thing is certain: I have no idea that any of them would vacate his office at his present salary; and if he would, there are a plenty more who would be glad of it. But what I wish to say is this: Of the two hundred and thirty-one members of this House, each one has all he can attend to in his own committee and in public, so that he could not possibly learn the duties which are performed by each officer of the House. The law allows eight clerks to be appointed. Speaker Cobb thought that six were enough. But you have now forty-odd messengers and clerks connected with the House. You have four messengers whose salaries are raised to that of clerks; and when a messenger is raised to the dignity of clerk he cannot undertake to do the ordinary duties of a messenger. We have seen that already in the messengers who are employed to take books round to the members at their houses. But having been raised to the dignity of clerk they scatter round the public documents upon the members desks, and the consequence is, that they often do not get them at all. That is the great difficulty in this whole matter. You place an obstacle in the way of a proper discharge of the duties by these messengers, although it is done with the best motives. It may be right that they should have some extra compensation and a little higher salary. I would be glad if every messenger, every clerk, every officer, and every member of Congress, and everybody else could have plenty of salary and plenty of money. I would be glad to see everybody have everything; but in representing our constituents here, who are to pay the salaries of the officers of the Government, we should remember that by the last Census our constituents are worth on an average but about $250 each. In Massachusetts they are worth but about $200. In Kentucky about $700; but the average is about $250.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I desire to say a word or two in relation to this matter. I suppose one great object is, to pay these clerks and messengers in proportion to the service they are required to perform, and the responsibilities their appointment imposes upon them.

Now, sir, in relation to Mr. Minnix, I suppose there are very few men in this House who are aware of the responsibilities of his office. He is required, in the first place, to take all the petitions that are presented here and enter them in a book; and he is then required to distribute them amongst the several committees. In addition to that, he is required to receive all the stationery of the House from the contractor, and to see that it is properly taken care of, or disposed of. There is great labor and responsibility attaching to that office. All the stationery of the House is under his control, and at his disposition; and he becomes personally responsible for it. Now, I ask every gentleman here, if there is not great labor and responsibility attaching to the position which he is required to fill by virtue of his appointment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to remind the gentleman, that the amendment before the committee is the proviso offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MASON,] that no clerks or messengers shall receive any extra compensation at the end of the session. The amendment, on which the gentleman is speaking, is not now before the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, sir, am I not showing why the proviso should not be adopted—that in the particular instance of which I am speaking, an extra compensation should be allowed?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman makes that application of his remarks, he is in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is what I am endeavoring to show, that in some instances this extra compensation should be allowed, by giving the case of Mr. Minnix. Now, in the case of the Librarian of Congress, I would not desire to take anything from him, but if we are to give compensation in proportion to the labor and responsibility attaching to the office, I should say Mr. Minnix was entitled to more pay than the Librarian. The Librarian remains in the room, and when gentlemen come there and desire books, they take them out and he makes the entry. There is no great labor or responsibility attaching to that position. I do not suppose he performs an amount of labor sufficient to entitle him to a salary of $1,500 per annum. So of some of the other clerks. My motto is, to pay men in proportion to the labor they are required to perform, and if Mr. Minnix does not present a case that entitles him to an equal compensation with the other clerks, then there is nothing in labor and responsibility which entitles a man to a reward, for there is no station connected with the House, to which more labor and responsibility attaches.

The amendment to the amendment having been reduced to writing, was read, as follows:

Provided, That officers, clerks, messengers, or employees in or about the Capitol shall not be allowed any extra compensation at the end of the session.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. DAWSON. This amendment as now amended will exclude the pages from any extra compensation. I trust it will not be adopted.

The question was put, and the amendment as amended was disagreed to.

Mr. GENTRY proposed an amendment as an additional section.

Mr. HOUSTON. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] is a section by itself, and it is not in order until the balance of the bill has been read. The second section of the bill is now before the committee, and I now call for its reading.

Mr. GENTRY. I submit the question to the Chair if my amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee read through the first section of the bill at the last sitting of the committee. All the amendments that have been offered since that time have been offered to come in at the end of the first section. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] now submits an additional section, which, if adopted, will read section two. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is in order at this time.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Sec. — Be it further enacted, That all clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers employed at an annual salary, or in temporary positions, in the executive and legislative departments of the Government in the city of Washington, whose compensation does not exceed $2,000 per annum, shall, in addition thereto, be allowed the following annual increase of compensation, commencing from the first day of the last fiscal year, viz: All whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,200, twenty per cent.; all whose annual compensation exceeds $1,200, and does not exceed $1,600, an addition of fifteen per cent.; and all whose annual compensation exceeds $1,600, and does not exceed $2,000, an addition of ten per cent.; and that the amount of increased compensation provided for in this section shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GENTRY. It is not needful for me to say anything scarcely in explanation of that amendment. It proceeds upon the idea, sir, that the facts set forth in the petition of some of the clerks of the Government, here presented a few days ago, are true—namely, that the cost of living in the city of Washington has been very much augmented. They ascribe it to the influx of gold from California. It is not necessary for me to go into a discussion of the causes. The fact is unquestionable. There is not a solitary individual in this House, and there cannot be one, who has given any attention to the subject, who can pretend to controvert that fact. Then, unless it can be successfully established that the compensation of these employees of Government has heretofore been too much, the conclusion inevitably follows that there is an appeal to our justice, which ought not to be repudiated, for increasing their compensation.

There are cases, Mr. Chairman, which have come to my knowledge, and which, were they known to this House, would, I am sure, prevent there being a negative vote. There are clerks in these Departments receiving an annual compensation of not more than $1,000, as well born, as well bred, as intelligent, as patriotic, as honorable, and as sensitive as any of us upon this floor, and more competent to be members of Congress than most of us. [Laughter.] I know a case of that character, of a man in whose bosom there beat as noble a heart as ever beat in the bosom of man, who had recently been a member of the Legislature of his State—a merchant in affluent circumstances, overtaken by misfortune, and who came here and accepted a little clerkship of $1,000 per annum, with the assurance that he would be promoted when there was a vacancy—who had a family of children depending upon him; but his proud heart chafed to death under the mortification to which his condition subjected him, and he died without the means of a decent burial, and his family was indebted to the charity of his brother clerks for the means of finding a place in the bosom of his mother earth. This case is but an illustration of things occurring monthly—almost daily—with men of like characters, like accomplishments, and like business qualifications—with men dying here, and having to be buried by the charitable contributions given by men who have nothing to spare.

Now, sir, this is no time for long argument or many illustrations. Allow me to state that in my country, if a gentleman starves his slave, it detracts very much from his respectability among the gentlemen in his neighborhood. I suppose in almost every part of our country, if a master workman should starve his employees and apprentices, he would lose caste among all respectable men.

Is the United States Government so poor that we shall starve the employees of this Government—starve them to death, and allow them to be indebted to the private contributions of the charitable for burial expenses? No man can assume that there is any extravagance or profligacy in my proposition; and if the facts are as I have assumed them to be, it is meanness not to change this state of things. And I repeat there is no extravagance or profligacy involved in it. It is a wise economy to give a fair compensation for the governmental employees. I hope no one will oppose this amendment. If the law has wisely graduated the salaries of the different employees of the Government in the legislative and executive departments whose salaries do not exceed $2,000, then I think that the proportionate increase which I propose is perhaps just, and wise, and right. If the amendment which I offer is adopted, a clerk who receives $1,000 per annum, will receive $1,200; one who receives $1,200, will receive $1,440; one who receives $1,600, will receive $1,840; and one who receives $2,000, will receive $2,400. This is a very small increase of expenditure to the Government, but it will give a vast amount of relief to these employees of the Government.

Surely, there can be no consideration urged against a proposition like this.

Mr. DUNHAM. While I freely admit that there is a necessity, perhaps, for some change in the salaries paid to many of our clerks, yet I must oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] because I do not think it is equal and just. In the first place, I think there must be a general reform in the present system of clerkships under Government. There is no propriety and no justice in the manner in which our clerks are at present engaged, and in which they are required to labor. Go into the Post Office Department, and I will show you in a dozen rooms, men sitting side by side, at the same desk, performing precisely the same duties, who receive, some $1,000, some $1,200, and some $1,500. And yet the gentleman proposes to increase these salaries at different rates, the highest being twenty per cent. His proposition will make the increase of the clerk performing the same duty at $1,500 per annum, as much as the increase of the man who receives only $1,000; for twenty per cent. upon $1,000 will not be as much of an increase as fifteen per cent. upon $1,500. Is that just and right? If a man cannot live here at $1,500 per year, most assuredly a man cannot live for $1,000; and it seems to me that you ought to bring up the pay of those receiving the most inadequate compensation, before you commence increasing those receiving the higher compensation.

If a man cannot live for $2,000, or for $1,800 a year, most assuredly he cannot live for $1,200, the amount which is now proposed to be given to those who now receive $1,000. It is sometimes the case that you appropriate a certain amount of money for the services of clerks in a certain Department, with the intention that the clerks therein shall receive $1,000, or $1,500 a year; and instead of appointing such a number as will admit of the payment of that salary out of the fund appropriated, they appoint a great many more clerks, and they receive but $500, $900, or $1,000.

The whole thing is wrong from the beginning to the end. By making the salaries too large we bring about another evil. We hold out inducements to those who are mere politicians to come here and ask for clerkships as a reward for political services at home—men who are most unqualified to perform the services which devolve upon them. We ought rather to adopt such a system as will bring men here competent to discharge the duties of a clerk. I think $1,000 is too little, and it ought to be increased; but there is no sense or propriety in the principle of increase proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY.] Let us first bring up the salaries which are most moderate. I know half a dozen clerks, all receiving the same salary of $1,000. Some of them do not save a single cent, while others of them save something out of the $1,000. The difference arises in their habits.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the salary from twenty to twenty-five per cent. of those clerks receiving less than $1,500.

I would not, Mr. Chairman, participate in this discussion, out that I feel it a matter of duty to those who have appealed, I was about to say, to the liberality, but I will say, to the justice of the Government. I feel, sir, that these clerks—especially those occupying subordinate positions—are in the present state of affairs very inadequately compensated. I have some experience in the matter of housekeeping in the city of Washington, and I come forward to bear my willing testimony to the fact that no genteel family numbering half a dozen persons can subsist in this city upon $1,000. In my judgment, it is utterly impossible for them to do it. Why, sir, do gentlemen know what is the cost of marketing in Washington? Those who are not housekeeping do you know that the article of beef is selling in market for from fifteen to eighteen cents per pound; that chickens are selling at forty, and even as high as fifty cents the pair; and that everything else has been, and is now, selling at like proportion? How is it possible that a housekeeper can pay his rent and market for his family upon $1,000? You may say, it is true, that these clerks can go away. Many of them are so poor that they cannot get away.

I assert again, that many of these clerks cannot get away if they were disposed to leave. And is it the policy of this Government to crowd your public offices with men incompetent to discharge their duties? Is it the policy of your Government to bring men here and then put them upon the pauper list? A man who lives in the country and who is in the habit of keeping his family at cheap rates of living, knows but little of what the cost of subsistence in a city is until he has once tried it. The man who comes here is entitled to sufficient to enable him to live, not extravagantly, but to live at least respectably. Gentlemen may say that they are not bound to support the extravagance of the family of a clerk. Is it the policy of the Government to crowd your offices with young men who are notoriously more neglectful of their duty than married men? They have the endearments of their family around them. They stay at home when they are not engaged in the public service, and have additional inducements to go to their work. That is my experience in the operations of life, and feeling, as I do, from my observation and knowledge of affairs in Washington, that these clerks ought to have an increase of their compensation, I will vote for this proposition with a great deal of pleasure. I am not willing to make it permanent, because I do not know but that in the course of twelve months things will come back to what they were two or three years ago, and this increased compensation may not be necessary. But I believe there is a necessity for it now, and so believing I am willing to support the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this and all amendments upon the subject, and I take the ground in the outset, that these salaries are high enough now. I will take the further ground, that if we raise the salaries of clerks in the city of Washington, we should raise them in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, and New Orleans, and everywhere else. If the cost of living here has increased it has increased in every city and every village in the land. If salaries are not sufficient here, they are not sufficient in all the other places where clerks are employed. If California gold, sir, has increased the cost of living in this city, it has had the same influence elsewhere—everywhere—east, west, north, and south.

Gentlemen have spoken of their experience in housekeeping in Washington. I have a precedent, therefore, for alluding to that subject. During the last Congress, I was a boarder, and boarded in two of the best houses I could find in Washington, and lived well enough. But during this session I have been a housekeeper, and have lived better than I did during the last Congress. And I can say the salary is ample. The salary of a member of Congress, which is about $700 for the short, and about $2,000 for the long session—averaging about $1,500 a year—notwithstanding the many expenses to which he is subject, is ample. As members of Congress, it is our business to serve the country, not to acquire riches. I am aware that the prices of living here are high; but high as they are, if gentlemen will practice frugality, economy, and temperance, and not be extravagant in their outlays, they may live well in Washington, as housekeepers, and lay up $500 upon a salary of $1,500; and then do better, vastly better, than nine tenths of our constituents do all over the country. If the clerks, and other employees of the Government, are not satisfied with their present positions, there are thousands upon thousands who would rejoice to take their places, and even to pay a handsome percentage for the privilege.

In regard to this matter of raising salaries, let us come right up and take the bull by the horns, [laughter,] and look at it as a whole. If the salary of the President of the United States, and the secretaries, and the judges, and all the other officers, ought to be raised, let us do it; but let us not begin with these clerks in Washington. Let us take the whole subject up, and if it needs revision, let us make that revision in a bill brought in for the purpose, and embracing a system that will touch every part of the country. Sir, we need economy; we need frugality; we need temperance here in Washington, and elsewhere, and everywhere, and the rulers should set the example. The salaries are high enough in my judgment. I go against all this special legislation for the purpose of accommodating a few gentlemen. I am willing to say that these clerks ought to be well paid. I know that some of them are men of worth—men of laborious habits. They serve the country well. I do not know but that this is true of most of them.

If their salaries ought to be raised, I say again, let us regulate them in a bill brought in for that purpose, and not in this partial and hasty manner; let us act with due consideration; not under the influence of sympathy raised by the eloquence of my honorable friend, who always speaks with such fascinating power; I allude to the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY.] I wish I had his strong voice, and his power of illustration and of impression, that I might reach every ear in this Hall. I am sure it would not be in vain, with such power, to plead in this presence the cause of justice and right, and to conjure the representatives of the people, to look well to the rights and interests of the people.

I will maintain the principles of justice and right, in their application to all men—especially to the frugal and the industrious. The men who labor with their hands upon the soil, in the workshops and the factories, ten and twelve hours a day, should first receive the favor of this House, rather than those who are occupied five or six hours in the bureaus of this city.

The question was then put, and the amendment of Mr. Brown was disagreed to.

Mr. DEAN. I move the following proviso, by way of amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That this section shall not extend to any person receiving a salary for discharging the duties of more than one office at the same time, or to any person who does not actually discharge the duties of the office for which he receives such salary, or to any person engaged in prosecuting any claim before any of the Departments or Congress; and that in case any paying or accounting officer of the Government shall pay said additional percentage to any such person, it shall be a misdemeanor in the person knowingly paying or receiving such additional percentage, rendering him liable to indictment, and punishment by fine and imprisonment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed strongly to resist the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] to add to the remuneration of the clerks who are legitimately engaged in the various departments of the Government. I have no doubt there may be instances where that remuneration should be increased; and if the section can be so guarded that the heads of Departments and of Bureaus cannot further abuse the power now in their hands, I shall vote for it. If I am correctly informed, however, there are individuals now, pets of the heads of Departments, who, in the face of laws which have been passed, commencing in 1842, and reenacted year after year since, are receiving the salaries of at least three offices, the duties of none of which they adequately discharge.

Mr. GENTRY. I know the objection which the gentleman states is an objection with many, and, as a consequence, an argument for voting against this additional compensation; but we cannot correct executive abuses. It is our duty to put it in the power of the Executive Government to do right, and to impeach them if they do wrong.

Mr. DEAN. I want to guard the proposition of the gentleman, so that no head of a Department of this Government, or head of an executive Bureau, can pay to his sons, nephews, cousins, or favorites, salaries to the amount of $2,000, $3,000, or $4,000 each. By the passage of the gentleman's proposition without a provision of the character I have indicated, we shall increase the salaries of these pets to a greater extent. If there be any proper object for the increase of the salaries, it is to enable those men permanently engaged as clerks in the various departments of the Government in this city with families, to support them with respectability; it is not for the purpose of increasing salaries, but to reward labor adequately, and for that only can I support it.

Another abuse will be corrected by that proviso, very prevalent, I am informed, in the Departments—the allowing of persons to take a clerkship at four dollars per day, who hire, for the discharge of its duties, other individuals at one dollar per day, while they spend their time around the hotels, the gambling houses, or the lobbies of Congress to press claims through here or smuggling them through the Departments. My provision is designed to reach cases of that kind. If there be any, it will prevent their continuance and repetition. If there be none, there will be no harm in the adoption of the amendment. It is intended, also, not only to reach those paying, but those receiving two salaries. There is an express law, passed in 1850, prohibiting any person from receiving two salaries except the Superintendent of Public Buildings. I understand the Attorney General, the law officer of this Administration, has given it as his opinion that there is no objection whatever to the giving of a man two salaries. How he could give such an opinion I cannot understand. The Secretary of State and the Attorney General, within the last year, have given their certificate to a man as entitled to $3,000 for doing nothing, or discharging the duties of an office which did not exist, while he was at the same time receiving $2,500 for another office. I desire to have it provided by law that any person who shall receive more than one salary shall be liable to indictment. That is the only way in which the evil can be eradicated. If my amendment be adopted, I am willing, as a temporary expedient, to vote for this or some increase of compensation. I believe the expenses of living have increased here as well as in other places; but still, sir, it will be an unpleasant matter for us to meet our constituents, and to tell them we are voting increased salaries to clerks in Washington, whilst clerks in the various offices of our counties receive only $500 salary, and yet lay up a portion of that. This amendment should not apply to young men, who have no families, receiving a salary exceeding $1,000 per annum. If that will not support them, I fear their expenses are not such as we should countenance or encourage.

Mr. GORMAN. I am opposed to this amendment. I have had occasion to look into the opinion of the Attorney General upon the subject of paying the officers of the Government, when they perform the duties of two offices. I had occasion in the last few days to present the question before the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, and give my views, humble as they were, at some length. The Second Comptroller decided, as indeed the former Comptroller has decided, that no person, under the existing law, can receive pay in two capacities. He has decided, if a clerk or other officer of the Government shall perform the duties of any other trade or office, that he cannot thereby get the additional pay. That decision has been made, I say, by the Comptroller, and the Comptroller of the Treasury has overruled, to some extent, the decision of the Attorney General heretofore made. But the Attorney General has not decided the point in the manner in which the gentleman states it. He has decided that an individual cannot draw the pay for two offices; but where a person is in any office, and is detailed to the discharge of other duties not incompatible with the duties of that office, he may receive pay for the duties to which he is detailed. While I am upon the subject of salaries generally, I may be permitted to remark that the salaries of our clerks have not been regulated for the last twenty or twenty-five years in the main. Rents have increased greatly in the city of Washington—property has increased in value greatly—the cost of living has increased greatly, and there is nothing which enters into the constituent elements of the expenses of a person living in Washington city but what in the main has increased. I am not to be told that an individual upon a salary of $1,000 in the city of Washington can live and save anything for his family. He cannot educate his children, keep his family, and pay his rent upon $1,000 a year and save one penny. He cannot do it upon $1,200, with an ordinary sized family. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] proposes to increase the small salaries to the greatest amount—say twenty per cent. to the large salaries. I think that where they are $2,000 they ought not to be increased at all, because the expense of living, the cost of house rent, and other expenses of living in the city of Washington, are as much to the $1,000 clerk as they are to the $2,000 clerk; and although the spirit of economy may get into this House, and may induce it to do injustice—

Mr. McMULLIN. I understand that the watchmen only receive $500 per annum. Why not let them live, as well as the clerks?

Mr. GORMAN. The gentleman's question answers itself. In every instance where the watchmen do not get more than $500, there ought to be a pro rata increase. By this amendment they get twenty per cent. increase. I say that in all cases where these salaries have not been touched for twenty years, they ought to be increased, and the good sense and judgment of the House will bear me out.

Mr. HALL. Why is it, that all these employees of the Government should have their salaries increased, and the members of Congress, whose expenses are much heavier, shall not have their salaries increased? No one proposes to increase their salaries.

Mr. GORMAN. The gentleman's mileage from the State of Missouri would pay for half of the messengers, or half of the clerks almost, in one of these Departments for a year.

The question was then taken upon Mr. DEAN's amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 83, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

That twenty per cent. be added to the per diem or monthly pay now received by all employees of the Government, who are engaged in any branch of mechanics or at common labor.

Mr. Chairman, we have witnessed various amendments which have been offered here with the view of increasing and extending the salary of everybody connected with the Government, save the man who labors and produces. The man who wears the dinge of the shop or of dust of the field upon his garments is never thought of or cared for by this House, except upon occasions when the Government needs taxes. When the Government needs men to fight its battles, then it calls upon this description of persons; but when money is to be voted out of the Treasury, without stint and measure, why this class of individuals is never regarded. I should like to know why the men who work in your navy-yards and forge your anchors—why the men who work in your navy-yards and build your ships—men who wield the broad-axe, chisel, and hammer, not only five hours in the day, but ten hours, at $1 50 and $2 a day, should not have twenty per cent. also added to their days' wages? They have not the time, after working ten hours a day, like others who are not employed five, to visit this Hall and besiege members of Congress with importunities, and almost in the attitude of supplicants, to increase their pay. They have to work almost from the rising to the going down of the sun; while others in the employment of the Government get much larger salaries, although their expenses of living are no more than those of the men who work at the anvil or work in your shops. Go, for instance, to your armory. Who says anything about increasing the pay of the men who are engaged in preparing the implements of war to protect your country in its hour of need? There is no twenty per cent. for them. When provisions rise, when meat and bread advance in price, and it is impossible almost for the laborer to support his family, where then is the powerful appeal of my colleague in behalf of this man, his family and little ones?

There is no talk then, in pathetic strains, about the funeral train and the charitable contributions by laborers to secure a decent interment of the remains of the over-worked and illy-paid laborer. Oh, no; the laborer has to toil on, struggle on, and there is no one to plead his cause before this House and the country. I say that it is time, when you commence expending—when the door of the Treasury is to be thrown wide open, and when a general invitation is to be extended to Government employees to come in and participate in this indiscriminate scramble, that the laborer, the man of toil, the producing-man, the man who creates as he consumes, should come up for once and have a chance at the spoils. When I talk about this increase of pay for the laborer, do not understand me as going against an increase of pay for these clerks. It depends entirely upon what you do with the amendment I propose. I say, that they are equally meritorious and worthy. While the sun rises and sets at the usual hour with this class, and while they work from the rising to the setting of the sun, there is another class of employees whose sun rises at nine in the morning, and sets at three in the afternoon; and yet they are worked to death—their burdens are too heavy—their expenses of living are too high. While a complaint from this over-worked class causes this hall to become vocal in pathetic appeals, the producing men, who give potency and character to your institutions, and constitute the physical power of the Government, may toil on, half paid and half fed, and they are never thought of or cared for.

Mr. GENTRY. In the appeal which my colleague makes to me in his very graphic and forcible description, he claims that a certain class of employees in the Government should be provided for in addition to those provided for by the amendment I have offered. He says, in reference to this case, "Where is the eloquence of my colleague?" I do not claim to possess that high gift of eloquence upon any occasion; but wherever and whenever, at all times and in all places, a case is presented to me that addresses itself to my sense of right, whatever eloquence I possess is at the service of any meritorious man, high or low, humble or poor, in the city of Washington or out of it, in the navy-yards, the army, or wheresoever he may be. Justice and right are all that I look at in reference to any case that comes before me as a member of Congress. I do not care where a man lives, what his employment is, or in what branch of the Government he may be employed, whether he is my friend or foe, to what party he may belong, if he will show me a just case, whatever eloquence I possess is at his command—always, at any time. Yes, sir, such eloquence as I possess, in a question of right, is always at the command of any man who needs it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I know my colleague will bear me witness that in the remarks I made I intended nothing personal. I knew that the impulses and feelings of his heart run in this channel, and I merely made the inquiry I did by way of reminding him that there were others who were entitled to and needed his sympathy.

Mr. GENTRY. I thank my colleague for his explanation. The amendment offered by my colleague is in the nature of an assault upon my amendment, a death-like attack. It is not intended to perfect my amendment—to amend it so that it will meet the approval of the House. His candor will not say that. Now, as far as individual motives go, I say that I am acting in conformity with the sentiments which I have always expressed. I know that about nine tenths of the persons benefited by this amendment have been denouncing me for six months. They have all been against me. They are Scott Whigs in the main—a good many Democrats, though. [Laughter.] And therefore if there is anybody here that can vote disinterestedly on this question I can. But I hope there is no gentleman who will judge and determine a question of this sort with such motives as that. Do justice—do right. One solitary young man from the county of Williamson, in my own State of Tennessee, constitutes the whole amount of Executive influence and patronage that I have obtained for my constituents, and he is willing to fight any member of Congress that will give him the slightest hint of an insult. [Laughter.] He is as independent as I am, and infinitely more brave. He is getting $1,000, and he is willing to lose that to-morrow. I have no interested motives in offering this amendment. I believe that nine tenths of those who will be benefited by it have done me gross injustice, time and again, and are habitually doing it; but it is right, and it ought to pass.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will merely say, in reply to the remark of my colleague about that constituent of his being ready and willing to fight anybody, that I do not assume that attitude. I belong to the peace party.

Mr. GENTRY. So do I.

Mr. JOHNSON. But if the gentleman's constituent is of that independent and high-minded character that he represents him to be, I think he is detracting from his position by holding on to his office, when he has to assume the attitude of a suppliant for an increase of pay. He should act as a high-toned man would—quit the employment of the Government, and seek other employment.

Mr. GENTRY. I only intended to say that he was a young man, and that his office was nothing to him. I intended to convey the idea, that so far as personal friendship went, I could have no motives in offering this amendment. Certainly, I had no intention of presenting the idea that my young constituent would like to fight my colleague. [Laughter.]

The question now being upon Mr. JOHNSON's amendment to the amendment,

Mr. JOHNSON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. FOWLER and McMULLIN were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 70.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move, Mr. Chairman, to make the addition to the highest rate of wages eight per cent. instead of ten per cent., and in doing so I desire to offer a few remarks upon the general question. The remarks which have fallen from my honorable friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. FOWLER,] and of my brother Caius from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who always out-Gracchies me in popularizing a measure, have an application that should not be general. It is enough for us to legislate for the Departments on this matter, and not, by adding to the wages of others who do not thank us for those wages, disturb the balance of business. When, a few days since, some of the hard-handed mechanics from the yard asked me to assist them in procuring an augmentation of their wages, I asked what they needed, and they told me they needed what others got. They wanted no more, (they would scorn to ask for more,) and they were entitled to it, and did receive it. There was no necessity for legislation. But the persons who are employed by the Government here have no means by which their wages can be regulated. The carpenter in the navy-yard knows that he is to receive the highest rate of wages that is paid in the next yard to him. The blacksmith and every other mechanic is paid as much there as the best mechanic can earn elsewhere. But here when a clerk is employed, when his whole life is given to the examination and knowledge of that clerkship, then he finds himself midway in life, cut off from those enjoyments which he has a right to calculate on, and which every other man—the mechanic or the merchant—is sure to attain with economy and with that enlarged enterprise which belong to our country.

My honorable friend from Massachusetts talks of temperance. Temperance can be practiced elsewhere as well as here. It is a very good thing, but it is best not to be too temperate even in our temperance.

My honorable friend from Massachusetts says that he finds himself comfortable with his income of $8 a day, and that, therefore, a clerk should be comfortable with his $3 a day. Let me say that this business in which we are now engaged, is not the profession of our lives, but the accident of our position. While a clerk may be content with $3, and we might be content with that sum, we still should have the great advantage over that clerk, that we have our employments, our pursuits, our incomes elsewhere; and we have, sir, besides, what every man here, I presume, will estimate above the mere price, mere hiring wages, the consideration of being the legislators of the nation, and telling how much the clerk shall have for his services. Why, sir, are we to stand here and measure the incomes of other persons by the per diem that we receive? or are we to elevate our position, or to consider it elevated by the pinnacle upon which our constituency has placed us? Sir, the clerk in one of these Departments has to pay enlarged prices for his food from the very fact that we are here eating the market out; those who come to legislate, and those who come to direct legislation, all have to feed, and every pound of mutton that they eat adds to the price of the mutton that the poor clerk eats.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that I am already branded with being illiberal by my opposition on other occasions to propositions of this sort. But, sir, I hold this doctrine, that I would rather have the credit of being just than liberal. It is for that purpose that I rise here upon this floor to advocate carrying out principles of justice, not of liberality. What are we asked to do here upon this floor? To be liberal with what? To be liberal with the money of the people of the United States. If we wish to show our generosity, let us put our hands into our own pockets, and we will practice generosity that will be our own. Sir, who pays these clerks? Whose money pays them? How is it raised? Is it picked up in the streets like stones? If so, I would vote them the largest sums they could demand. But, sir, whilst I am upon this floor, I cannot forget that I represent the mechanics, and workmen, and farmers of a State where there is not one man in a thousand who can make $500 a year; and it is their money that you now call upon me to take out of their pockets to increase the salaries of these men who get $1,000 a year. I ask honorable Representatives on this floor to represent their constituents at home. We are here to represent our districts, and the whole people. We are here to stand up in the face of an opposition arrayed against us by the inhabitants of this District, that paralyzes the arm of almost the boldest of us. But, sir, I intend, as all the other Representatives of this nation should do, to look to the interests of the whole country. There is not in the whole United States, taking the whole country over, one man in a thousand who can earn $500 a year. How do they live? The prices of provisions have risen everywhere, all over the country. The gold of California acts on every section of the country. Why, then, are we asked to take money out of the pockets of the people, and to decrease their means of livelihood, for the benefit of these men? Talk about sympathy with the laboring man, and at the same time put your hand in his pocket and increase his taxation, for the benefit of a few individuals, who only work five or six hours a day! Why, sir, these laboring men, who only earn from $300 to $500 a year, work ten, twelve, and sixteen hours a day. And is this your generosity? Is this generous? I appeal to the nation if it is generous to tax the whole country for the benefit of a few individuals—favored politicians, who seek for places? They tell us that they cannot live here. Well, let them leave, and live as people do in other portions of the country. We can find plenty of men to fill their places, and do their work for what they now receive, and be glad of the job.

Then, sir, I ask that justice shall be done to the whole country—justice, even-handed justice. If men wish to be generous, let them put their hands in their own pockets and give their own money. Is there any generosity in giving away other people's money? None at all. It is injustice; and it is upon that ground that I oppose it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If there be no objection, I will now withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I object.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CHANDLER's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. CARTER. I move to strike out all of the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, except that in relation to the $1,000 clerks. If I understood the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] this amendment is proposed under the emergency of the increased price of living in this District, that has supervened during the current year, and that may reach into the future. I have offered this amendment for the purpose of making the provision correspond with the intentions of its honorable mover. The amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, seems to contemplate a difference between the demands of the different clerks for food. If the reason assigned by him is the correct reason for introducing it, still, there does not appear to be a correct mathematical ratio established in this amendment for the grade of the stomachs of these clerks. [Laughter.] It provides, for the $1,000 clerks, an increase of twenty per cent., and for the $1,200 or $1,600 clerks, an increase of fifteen per cent. Now, has the honorable member from Tennessee ascertained that this is the precise difference between the stomachs of the $1,000 and the $1,600 clerks? [Laughter.] For if he has not ascertained that fact, his amendment involves over-justice or under-justice. It is doing justice to the $1,000 clerks, and over-justice to the balance. Now, sir, when these clerks were appointed, a physiological examination was made. Now, we had no idea that the $1,600 clerks had larger stomachs than the $1,000 ones. [Laughter.] We supposed they were all placed upon the same common physiological platform. [Great laughter.]

But, sir, if I am correct in this hypothesis that the same physiological laws are common to them all, then the $1,600 clerks have obtained their allowance already. If it is true that the $1,000 clerks require twenty per cent. more to fill their stomachs, then it is equally true that the $1,600 clerks have got theirs full, and a little more already. [Laughter.] Now, I am willing to take it for granted that the honorable mover of this amendment took his measure of the stomachs of the $1,000 clerks, and found that it would require twenty per cent. more to fill them. If that is so,

I am willing to vote them this twenty per cent. in addition to what they already receive; but I am not willing to force the $1,600 clerks to gormandize. [Renewed laughter.] It is all wrong, sir. I think there is a little fund of natural philosophy in the amendment I propose, and I trust the mover will see it in the same light.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that Congress found it necessary in 1812, 1813, 1814, and 1815, to make an addition to the salaries of the clerks in the Departments. The same addition was again made in the year 1837, under the auspices of the Hon. Cave Johnson, who is known to be a renowned economist. In that year a law was passed adding from ten to twenty per cent. to the salaries of the different clerks, where the salaries were less than $2,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the present state of things, I have an entire conviction that it is absolutely impossible for a clerk with a family of five or six to live—notwithstanding the calculations and testimony of my honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FOWLER] to the contrary—on less than $1,200 a year.

I now propose to institute a comparison between a captain of the Army, of the cavalry corps, living here in the city of Washington, and one of the clerks in a Department, having five or six children. A captain in the Army, including his pay of $50 per month, receives from the Government provision for his rations, his quarters, his fuel, pay for his servant's clothing, and forage for two horses, amounting in all to $1,965. Now, take a clerk at Washington who is a husband, with a family; allow him $250 for rent—suppose there are six persons—allow them 20 cents per day each for marketing; for clothing $30 each—the same as is allowed a servant in the Army—and it will require $1,194 75 in order to bear his expenses, allowing nothing for riding in omnibuses in rainy weather; allowing nothing for occasionally asking a friend to come and take tea with him; in short allowing him nothing for any personal indulgence. Add to this, there is a law of the United States prohibiting the clerks in many of the Departments from participating in any other business. I do not know whether this regulation extends to all the Departments or not, but it certainly does to the Treasury Department. Now, sir, there are few having the financial experience and tactics of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. FOWLER,] and until we have all become learned in the same school of economy, until we all have the same degree of wisdom, and until we have all been brought up in the same honorable state with the gentleman from Massachusetts, we are not qualified to live upon the same per centum with him. For one I am prepared to vote for the amendment of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] to increase the salaries of the employees of the Government who are salaried officers, bound down by their duties to a particular place, and who are not permitted to seek any other employment. They should be preserved from temptation, by affording them a reasonable compensation; for men who have the fears of poverty staring them in the face cannot serve the Government faithfully; men who have these temptations constantly surrounding them, living in want, can scarcely be honest if they have money intrusted to them. If they are fiscal agents they must be raised above want. If they are accountants they must be placed beyond the temptation to make false accounts. I say, therefore, that it is economy as well as justice for us to increase the salaries of all persons having salaries less than $1,200; and I believe the proposition of my friend from Tennessee to increase the salaries of clerks with salaries up to $2,000, is a reasonable and proper one, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon Mr. CARTER's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. GOODENOW and HART were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 61.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRENTON offered the following amendment to the amendment:

And that from and after the 4th day of March, 1853, it shall be the duty of each of the heads of the Executive Departments of the Government so to arrange and classify the clerkships in said Departments as to make three several classes, according to the nature of the business in which said clerks are employed, and the qualifications required for the same.

The said clerks to serve in their respective classes for the term of four years, and all vacancies occurring by removal or otherwise, in either of the higher classes, shall be filled from the class next below it, and no clerk shall serve in any one of the Departments for a longer period than twelve years. The compensation of the first or lower class of clerks shall be $1,200 per annum; of the second class $1,500 per annum; of the third class, $1,800 per annum. And no removals shall be made except for incompetency, or cause shown to the satisfaction of the President of the United States.

And in the selection of said clerks, they shall, as far as possible, be taken from the several States and Territories in proportion to the number of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates from each in the Thirty-third Congress.

Mr. GENTRY. I desire to make a suggestion in reference to the amendment just voted on by the committee. The adoption changes the whole phraseology of my amendment. I think the Clerk ought to be required to reduce the amendment to writing; as it now stands, I do not think we can proceed understandingly, unless the phraseology of the amendment is changed, so as to make it conform to the last vote taken. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] is rather in the nature of a substitute than of an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that his attention was not called to the form of the amendment at the time it was offered.

Mr. GENTRY. I only suggested it because I think it is necessary that we should understand what we are doing as we go along.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee as amended.

The amendment as amended was read by the Clerk.

Mr. GENTRY. Will the Chair now state the precise condition of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] moved to strike out all in the amendment except so much as related to the clerks receiving the salary of $1,000.

Mr. GENTRY. The word $1,000 does not occur in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is right; but the Chair did not observe it at the time the gentleman from Ohio offered his amendment.

Mr. GENTRY. If the Chair will permit me to make a suggestion, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is in the nature of an entire substitute, and must be reduced to writing in order to make it intelligible. We cannot proceed understandingly until this is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again say that he did not at the time notice that the words "$1,000" are not in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. He will now suggest, as the easiest and best remedy, that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to reduce his amendment to writing, and allow another vote to be taken upon it.

Mr. HAMILTON and others objected.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. My question is, that the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio was no proposition at all. [Laughter.] It is not recorded, it is not reduced to writing, and it has no pertinency to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. I hold that it cannot be considered as any proposition at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not for the Chair to decide whether the amendment makes sense or not; the fact may have its influence with the committee in their votes. But the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was entertained by the Chair, and propounded to the committee, and a vote was had upon it by the committee.

Mr. CARTTER. I see no difficulty about the matter. The substance of the amendment was, that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee should only apply to the employees of the Government who were in the receipt of not more than $1,000 per annum. It would then provide that those clerks who received a salary of not more than $1,000 per annum should receive an increase of twenty per cent. upon their present salaries. That was the amendment, or the substance of it.

Mr. STANTON. The Chair did not state my point of order correctly. It was not that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio did not make sense, but that there was no amendment in any tangible form at all. There was nothing embodied or applicable to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee; and therefore I submit that the whole proceeding in relation to it is a nullity.

Mr. GENTRY. I desire to add a word to what my colleague has said. The state of facts now presented show that we have failed to observe the rules necessary to be observed, in order to give validity to legislative proceedings. Mr. Chairman, you do not know what the amendment is; you cannot state what it is. The Clerk cannot state what it is. The gentleman from Ohio has moved an amendment to my amendment in the nature of a substitute, which we have adopted without its being reduced to writing. Now, it seems to me that the only proper course we can pursue is that suggested by the Chair—to allow the gentleman to reduce his amendment to writing, and take another vote upon it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is this debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not strictly in order, but the Chair was willing to hear suggestions in relation to this matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I dislike very much to interfere with gentlemen, but I am exceedingly anxious to get through with this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Let us vote the whole amendment down.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I move that the committee do now rise.

Tellers were called for upon the motion, and ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and MOLONY were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 50.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee (Mr. PHELPS) reported, that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and especially House bill No. 196, making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1853, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. We have now only about sixteen working days, and if we should appropriate every day to the appropriation bills, there are only about two days to each bill; I therefore move the resolution that the five minutes debate upon this bill be terminated, in half an hour after we again go into the Committee of the Whole upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the reception of the resolution, and it is received.

Mr. STUART. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will my resolution come up to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. Not in the morning hour.

Mr. BROOKS. If the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] does not prevail, I want the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BROOKS. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. FITCH. There was objection made in this quarter of the House very distinctly, to the reception of the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] and I insist upon the objection being recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the objection.

Mr. FITCH. That is not our fault. We spoke very loud and distinctly. If there was noise between us and the Speaker, that fact ought not to prevent our objection from being recognized.

Mr. HOUSTON. The resolution was received, and I ask a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must state, in regard to that matter, that it is impossible very often to preserve order in the Hall, such order, at least, as will enable the Chair and gentlemen to hear what is passing. The Chair did not hear any objection, and entertained the motion.

Mr. FITCH. I have no doubt that the Speaker did not hear the objection, but it was made here.

Mr. BROOKS. Do I understand that the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] has prevailed?

The SPEAKER. It has not, but has been entertained.

Mr. BROOKS. Then I call for tellers upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ORR. Will the resolution come up to-morrow?

Mr. BROOKS. Will the Chair tell us when it will come up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide questions as they arise.

Mr. ORR. The vote upon the adjournment will depend upon the decision of that question.

The SPEAKER. That is an argument, and is not in order.

Mr. FITCH. Will the Chair tell us the present condition of the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston?]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that the resolution was received by unanimous consent; and the question now before the House is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ASHE. I opposed the reception of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The only question before the House is on the adjournment.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw the call for tellers, if I understand that the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama was received.

The SPEAKER. It is entertained, but has not been acted upon.

Mr. BROOKS. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. BROOKS. Then I ask for tellers.

Mr. CARTTER. Is it not in order to move to adjourn at any time?

The SPEAKER. That is the pending question, upon which tellers are demanded, and the Chair is very anxious to ascertain whether gentlemen wish to adjourn or not.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and CARTTER appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, a. m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions and memorials were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. STANTON, of Ohio: The petition of C. S. Hamilton and sundry other citizens of Union county, Ohio, praying the establishment of certain post routes in Union, Franklin, and Hardin counties, in the State of Ohio.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of James McDonald, for a register for the British brig Susannah.

By Mr. HARPER: The petition of Thomas Wallace and 66 others, citizens of Muskingum county, Ohio, asking for the passage of the bill introduced by Mr. STANLEY, in aid of the colonization of free people of color in Liberia.

By Mr. DISNEY: The memorial of sundry citizens of Cincinnati, asking Congress to aid in the colonization of free blacks in Liberia.

By Mr. PARKER, of Pennsylvania: The petition of David McKinney and 34 others, citizens of Blair county, State of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to pass the bill introduced into the House of Representatives by the Hon. EDWARD STANLEY, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money directed to be made with the States by an act approved June 23d, 1836."

By Mr. BRIGGS: The memorial of J. A. Whitlock & Co. and others, citizens of the city of New York, asking Congress for the passage of a law for the better protection of lives on board of steamboats.

Also, David Smith and others, for the same;

Also, David Morrison and others, for the same;

Also, Charles Hopkins and others, for the same;

Also, Edwin Braun and others, for the same.

By Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE: The petition of Alexander F. McGill, A. W. Black, Thomas F. Dale, and 102 others, citizens of Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to pass the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by the Hon. EDWARD STANLEY, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money directed to be made with said States by the act approved June 23d, 1836.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 11, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, I find in the report of the proceedings of the Senate on Monday last, some remarks of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, which contain statements made inadvertently, I presume, that require correction. The honorable Senator was commenting upon a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the "amendment to the apportionment bill" as it is called, or the supplementary act on that subject, and in speaking of that bill, he says:

"I am not at liberty, perhaps, to say who prepared it; but it was no doubt prepared at the Census Bureau, and adopted at the instance of Mr. BRADBURY; and I suppose the responsibility must be shared between the head of the Bureau, the Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. BRADBURY."

In regard to the responsibility here alluded to, I shall presently have a word to say. It is sufficient to state, in the first place, however, that the bill was not reported by me or at my instance, as the honorable Senator would have known if he had been present. He was necessarily called away during the action of the Senate on that subject, and has been misinformed in regard to it. The bill containing the clause alluded to was reported by the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS], in behalf of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary, which gave California but one Representative in Congress. I was in the minority of the committee, and presented a counter report to that of the honorable Senator from Louisiana, and moved an amendment to the bill providing for two Representatives for California. After debate, the amendment offered by me was adopted. It only related to the representation from California, and changed the bill in no other respect. Upon examination it was seen that the language of the bill and the amendment was somewhat incongruous, and I thereupon redrew that section of the bill, which related to the California representation, so as to give that State its two Representatives, and left the other sections in the form and words reported by the honorable Senator from Louisiana, so that the provision of the bill which was the subject of the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina on Monday last, was presented by my friend from Louisiana, and not by me.

I think, however, that an unnecessary alarm has arisen in regard to the construction of that bill. My own impression is, that the bill as reported, and the phraseology adopted, which related to the compensation of the Superintendent of the Census Board, is not liable to the construction which has been placed upon it; and that it did not need the supplementary resolution which has been recently passed by the Senate. But inasmuch as there has been supposed to be some responsibility attached to the phraseology of the law, I desire to stand right upon the record. In making these remarks, I desire to say, that I have no doubt but that the honorable Senator from South Carolina made his statement upon information which had been given to him, and upon which he relied.

Mr. BUTLER. I rather suppose, after so many explanations, it will turn out that nobody prepared that clause at all. [Laughter.] It certainly was prepared by somebody; either by Mr. Kennedy, the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS], or the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BRADBURY], for I do not believe Mr. Stuart prepared it. I did not prepare it, for I can prove an alibi. Now, the remarks I made to the Senate, were exclusively made upon information derived from the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS], that the bill itself came from the Department. I was advised to let Mr. Whittlesey settle it; but I said, no; if there is any inadvertency from any source, I, as the representative of the committee, must be held responsible to the public, for no one will know who reported the bill, and I feel concerned that some explanation should be given. When the debate took place, in consequence of the joint resolution, very properly proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS], I felt bound—no other person being present to make the explanation—to make it; and perhaps, in making it, I may have thrown more blame upon Mr. Kennedy—for I shall mention names now—than should be attached to him.

But as to the way that the amendment came, it seems to be now that the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. DOWNS] is to be held responsible for it. Well, sir, that Senator told me that it came from the Department. I have no doubt that it did not come from Mr. Stuart; and I have no doubt that it did come from the head of the Census Bureau.

That gentleman—I mean Mr. Kennedy—informed me when he came to me to explain—and I was very willing that he should explain, as I had no disposition to do him injustice—that he did not know whether he prepared it, or whether one of the committee prepared it, but he rather thought he had a letter from the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BRADBURY], asking his attention to this subject, and in consequence of it, it was prepared.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope I am understood by the Senator. I have sent to the document room, and have the bill which contains the censured phraseology, and I trust it will be satisfactory to the Senator to read the caption:

"In the Senate of the United States, March 10, 1852, Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report, [number 113,] accompanied by the following bill; which was read and passed to a second reading."

I might go on and read the bill which contains the clause that gave rise to the remarks. Now, the Senator has seen fit to say that the amendment was prepared by somebody—either by Mr. Kennedy, by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS,] or by myself. I thought I had stated, with sufficient distinctness, that I was unfortunately in the minority, and opposed to the bill reported, and moved an amendment to it, which was finally sustained by the Senate. I repeat again, that I do not think the bill itself is liable to the objection which has been raised to it.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a question of fact who did prepare it.

Mr. BRADBURY. The question of fact is settled by the record.

Mr. CASS. As both the Senate and the House of Representatives have passed the bill into a law, I think all are responsible.

[Here the conversation dropped.]

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of C. B. Clusky, praying compensation for a plan and estimate made by him for the extension of the Capitol, and for the time spent in explaining it, and in giving his views on the subject; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STOCKTON presented the petition of Mary C. Hamilton, widow of the late Captain Fowler Hamilton, of the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of R. Nicholas, executor of Jonathan Nicholas, praying to be allowed his father's pension for the time his name was stricken from the rolls; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHASE presented two petitions of citizens of Magnolia, Ohio, praying that the bill now before Congress, commonly known as the homestead bill, may become a law; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers, reported it back with sundry amendments.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred a memorial of citizens of Paducah, Kentucky, praying that that town may be made a port of delivery, reported a bill to constitute Paducah, in the State of Kentucky, a port of delivery, and for other purposes; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the petitions of John Gray and Wyer G. Sargent, praying to be allowed fishing bounties, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Harman Blannerhasset and Joseph Lewis Blannerhasset, praying indemnity for injuries done to property of their father by troops of the United States in 1806, have directed me to submit a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief. When this bill comes up for consideration, I shall ask the Senate, particularly the older members of it, to vindicate the truth of history in one or two particulars.

The bill was read a first time, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Joseph Smith, sen., praying compensation for services rendered and property furnished the United States in the Black Hawk war, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of James P. Delacour, only son of James Delacour, praying to be allowed bounty land for the services of his father during the last war with Great Britain, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of George Barrell and S. V. S. Wilder, in behalf of themselves and other heirs of the owners of the ship Columbia and sloop Washington, and the petition of the widow of Captain Robert Gray, the first discoverer of the Columbia river, praying the confirmation of their title to certain lands purchased from the Indians in 1791, or to such compensation as Congress shall think proper for their discoveries in those regions, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill granting lands in Oregon to Martha Gray and others; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

NOAH HANSON.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred a resolution relative to the pay and funeral expenses of Noah Hanson, late a messenger of the Senate, to report the same back with an amendment striking out the part which provides for the payment of the funeral expenses. I ask that the resolution may now be considered.

No objection was made, and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution. The amendment to the committee is to strike out the following words:

"And also to pay the funeral expenses of said Hanson, as heretofore paid in similar cases."

The resolution, if so amended, will read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Maria Hanson, administratrix of the estate of Noah Hanson, late a messenger of the Senate, the usual per diem compensation for his services from March 27, 1850, to June 1st, 1851, and from October 1st to November 1st, 1851, the time of his decease."

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, do I understand that the proposition is to continue the salary after the death of the man?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will explain the resolution. Mr. Hanson was a messenger of the Senate for the space of eighty or ninety days, or at least for the precise number mentioned in the resolution. He performed the services of a messenger in the document room, in filing and preparing documents. Just before the commencement of this session of Congress he died. I drew the resolution, therefore, to pay him for the time he was employed, for which he had not had his pay. I included in it, also, the clause, which was to pay about $150 for his funeral expenses—precisely what has been done in three or four other cases. If the Senate see fit to strike that clause out, I do not rise for the purpose of making objection; but still I think that item ought to be paid, as in other cases.

FALLS OF THE OHIO.

A motion by Mr. BRIGHT, that five thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Roads and Canals, in relation to the construction of a canal, and the establishment of an armory and foundry, at the Falls of the Ohio river, and the relinquishment of the stock held by the United States in the Louisville and Portland canal, be printed for the use of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. BADGER. I laid upon the table of the Senate, some seven or eight weeks ago, a resolution proposing to amend one of the rules of the Senate, to which I referred yesterday. Its object is to get rid of the difficulty which perplexes us every time we have an appropriation bill before us to settle what is a private claim. I move that the Senate take up that resolution for consideration.

Mr. CASS. I must express my hope that the Senate will not take it up. We shall enter into a metaphysical discussion of, at least, an hour; no man can foretell the end of it. If the honorable Senator will allow a vote to be taken without any discussion, I will cheerfully acquiesce. But there will be more metaphysics introduced than the world has seen since the days of the Stagirite. I hope it will not be taken up.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest to my friend from Michigan, as he has given us such a luminous exhibition of my resolution, that it does not propose any explanation of what a private claim is, but its object is to amend the rule so as to get rid of the difficulty altogether, of having to decide whether an amendment is for a private claim or not, when it is presented.

Mr. BADGER's motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which was submitted by him on the 25th of May. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the 30th rule be amended, by striking out therefrom the following words: "And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

The 30th rule, which is proposed to be amended, is as follows:

"30th. No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to amend the rule, for the purpose, as he says, of getting rid of the discussions in relation to what are private claims. I appeal to every old member of the Senate, to say whether we did not have those discussions, and much more frequently, before the adoption of the rule than since; whether it has not been always considered a valid objection to an amendment to an appropriation bill, that it was a private claim. Why, sir, before we had this rule, we had two classes of arguments whenever these amendments were brought forward. In the first place, they were generally opposed by those who had the care of the bill, on the ground that it was improper to put a private claim upon a general appropriation bill, and, as a general rule, I have never heard it doubted. We had, therefore, the argument in relation to it, to ascertain, first, whether it was a private claim; and afterwards, another class of arguments to show, that, admitting it was a private claim, yet there was some special reason, some good ground for excepting the case from the general rule. If, therefore, this provision of the rule shall be expunged, the Senate will not escape a discussion in relation to the character of the amendment. You may rely upon it, when we shall have had a little experience in the practice of the Senate without this rule, it will be found to be necessary to do something in order to prevent us from loading down appropriation bills with private claims. Why, sir, there is a peculiar propriety for such a provision in relation to general appropriation bills. The result of admitting private claims to be offered as amendments to them is, that any committee can pass whatever private claim it chooses. If we take up a private claim as a separate measure, upon a private bill day, when we do not understand it, if it requires investigation, we can ask that it may be postponed until we can investigate it. But if it is offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill, we can make no such request. We cannot lay over an appropriation bill to obtain an opportunity to examine a claim. No, sir, we must take the word of the committee which offers it, and we must vote without any explanation, or without any adequate opportunity to examine the claim. The result would be, that any committee could put any private claim it chooses upon a general appropriation bill.

But this is not the worst of it. The general appropriation bills will become a sort of omnibus—a log-rolling arrangement in relation to private claims. "I will not vote against yours, because I may have one which I want to get up;" and this arrangement will be made like those internal improvement bills, by which claims will be passed as amendments to the appropriation bills that never would have been passed separately and as independent measures. Now, if the Senator wishes to prevent that evil, he had better aid me in doing something to make the rule more definite, if it is not sufficiently definite for his purpose. The whole objection he raises amounts to this: that you cannot give any definition of a private claim which would be sufficiently distinct to enable the Senate to practice under it without difficulty. I acknowledge it is a subject of some difficulty; but I do not admit that you cannot give a definition to enable the Senate to practice under this rule. If the Senator would give us his assistance in this regard, I think, after a little practice, we should be able to define what are private claims in such a manner as to get rid of all dispute in relation to their nature. Sir, I believe we can do it by referring to what should be a general appropriation bill. A general appropriation bill should make provision for laws and treaties, for obligations incurred by laws and by treaties, and for the current service of the year. If, instead of saying, "No amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate," we should say that no additional appropriation should be offered, unless it were to provide for some obligation created by law or by treaty, or for the current service of the year, then the rule would define itself; and I believe we should be able to practice under it without difficulty, and with benefit to the dispatch of business by the Senate.

I know, that if this provision is stricken out of the rule, and we are thrown at sea in relation to it, where it will end. We shall go on adding private claims to general appropriation bills, until the Senate will feel the necessity of doing something to guard the business of the country against this improper admixture. We shall then have the whole subject to go over again, and probably it will end in the enactment of some other rule. It would be better not to amend this as proposed; for the honorable Senator from North Carolina must know that it is improper to put a private claim upon a general appropriation bill; and that, unless we have some rule guarding it, there will be constant efforts to do it. And if we admit one, it will be considered favoritism not to admit all. We shall then have the only portion of the business which is conducted with tolerable certainty and dispatch by Congress, so embarrassed, that that probably, in the end, will fall through.

Why, sir, the House of Representatives might well object, if they send us appropriation bills relating to the general interests of the country, and we should load them down with private claims, send them back, and say: "You shall not appropriate for the general public service of the country without passing this or that private claim." It is a sort of coercion, of which they might and would well complain. If it shall result in this, that we are to do no legislation except upon general appropriation bills, those bills will break down like everything else, and the business of legislation become almost impossible. I say this, because I foresee the consequences of repealing that rule. I know the inconvenience which arose before; and, although the rule which it is proposed to amend has caused some inconvenience, because it required practice to define and settle its meaning, I think we have passed over the worst; and I believe, if we continue a little further, we shall be enabled to make it sufficiently accurate to proceed with definiteness and dispatch to the public interest of the country. I recollect well, that before it was adopted, half the debates on amendments offered to general appropriation bills, were upon the question as to whether they were for private claims; and then, if they were for private claims, whether they were such as ought to constitute an exception. We shall certainly get rid of all that last branch of the discussion, by retaining such a rule as this. It is, however, for the Senate to say. If they prefer to go without it, I have nothing more to say in relation to it.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, the rule, a portion of which I seek to strike out, is only two sessions old. The Senator from Virginia says if the amendment I propose prevails, the general appropriation bills will be loaded down by private claims; that there will be a system of log-rolling introduced by virtue of which one Senator will vote for a private claim in consideration of other Senators voting for a private claim that he favors.

Now, sir, in the first place I say that I cannot conceive such a thing as any member of this body voting knowingly for anything that is wrong. Therefore I consider the allegation as not admissible. In the next place it is refuted by the whole experience of the Senate. This rule, as I say, is but two sessions old. When have the appropriation bills been loaded down, as the Senator supposes they have been by private claims? They have never been, in a half century's experience of the Senate. When the Senator from Virginia offered his amendment to the rules, it was for the purpose of relieving us from this difficulty. I did not oppose it, but we immediately found that we had opened a new source of discussion and consumption of time, which was a great deal worse than any difficulty that could be supposed to arise out of the admission of such amendments; for though the Senator says we always had the question raised as to private claims before, and always shall have hereafter, if this proposition of mine shall be adopted, one question we never did have, and never could have raised, except for this rule, and that is the question of order—a question whether the amendment can be considered. That is the question we have sprung upon us—that is the question upon which we occupied two hours yesterday in determining whether an amendment was in order or not.

Now, I think after striking out the portion which I propose to strike out the rule will be sufficiently guarded. No amendment of any kind can be offered, unless under the circumstances prescribed by the residue of the rule; one of these is the one that might be supposed to apply most generally to private claims, and is, when an amendment is moved by order of a standing committee of this body.

I think if we cannot trust ourselves to pass upon amendments proposed to us by the standing committees of the body—if we are obliged to tie ourselves up so that we cannot look at proposals of that kind, coming from a standing committee, we shall have lost a considerable portion of that respect we ought to have for ourselves, and that consideration which we ought to have for the country. However, I have no personal anxiety about the matter. I served in the Senate three sessions before we ever heard of such a rule, and I never found the difficulties, the log-rolls, and the weighing down of appropriation bills by private claims, which the Senator from Virginia supposes will exist. But since the adoption of the rule I have found, and so has he, a great deal of difficulty and waste of time in determining whether the Senate can consider a proposition or not. That is what I want to get rid of.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to make one single remark as to a matter of fact. If the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] will consult any of the older members of the Senate, or the Committee of Ways and Means in the House, or the Committee on Finance in the Senate, or the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL], he will learn that the connection of private bills with a general appropriation bill is a serious evil, and much more felt before the adoption of the rule than it has been since.

Mr. BADGER. That must have been before I was in the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to make one remark. Each House has before it a variety of petitions upon the subject of private claims. Each House matures its own action upon the petitions presented, and after doing this, presents its action to the other House for consideration. Now, suppose we put upon a general appropriation bill, all private bills which the Senate has matured, and send the bill back in that shape to the other House; or suppose the House should take a similar course, and put all its private bills upon a general appropriation bill, and send them to us, what chance has the Senate to mature all the private bills that may be put upon the general appropriation bills in this way? It will amount to a one-sided legislation. Each House will have to adopt just the same measures which the other has seen fit to pass, and without examination. Are you prepared for that? At this period of the session, it will be impossible for us to examine all the private bills from the House, or for the House to examine all which we might send them—under such circumstances. They will be taken upon trust and passed, therefore, simply because the one or the other House has passed them. That will not be constitutional legislation, as it seems to me. We are not so organized that each House should consider maturely all the legislation of the other. These remarks do not apply to the general provisions in pursuance of standing laws for carrying out the public measures of the country. Both Houses of Congress may be presumed to understand what the necessities of the country require, and are prepared to act in pursuance of general laws, to meet those necessities; and should be prepared to act whenever those subjects come before them. I therefore think it bad policy to incur a general appropriation bill with individual measures, and I shall vote against the resolution. The question was taken, and the resolution was not agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The hour of twelve m. having arrived, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill from the House of Representatives "making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30th, 1853."

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I offer the following amendment:

For payment to James W. Marsh, to cover the loss of his property destroyed by a band of Sioux Indians in the month of July, 1849, while extending "the second connection line" of the public surveys in the State of Iowa to the Missouri river, under contract with C. H. Booth, Surveyor General of the United States, $1,200.

In relation to this amendment I have fortified myself with much information which I have sought and obtained from the sources that are accessible to me; but probably I shall husband the time of the Senate by causing to be read a paper from the Indian Department, which is appended to the amendment rather than giving a verbal explanation myself:

"Extract from additional estimate of funds required for the service of the Indian Department within the present fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852:

"This claim is presented under the seventeenth section of the intercourse law of 1834, which promises restitution or reparation by the United States for depredations committed by Indians who are not in the receipt of annuities from our Government. The proof furnished by Mr. Marsh to this office establishes conclusively that the depredation was committed upon his property, and that the offenders were Sioux Indians of the Wahpacoota band, who receive no annuity from the Government of the United States.—See vol. 4, U. S. Statutes at Large, page 729, chap. 161, 'An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes,' &c., section 17."

Mr. HUNTER. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say, that he had a communication from the Indian Department explanatory of this amendment?

Mr. JONES. Yes; the explanation has just been read. It shows that the appropriation is asked for under the intercourse law of 1834, which was passed for the purpose of preventing difficulties between citizens of the United States in the Indian country and the Indians themselves, and for property which might be stolen or destroyed by them. This is a case in which the property of a deputy surveyor of the United States was stolen by the Sioux Indians. These Indians have no annuities out of which we can take the amount of which Mr. Marsh was robbed; and the intercourse law of 1834 provides, that where persons are robbed, or have their property stolen, remuneration for such property shall be made by the Government of the United States. I think this is, beyond question, a case which is covered by the law. The matter was submitted last session to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as well as to the Commissioner, and both the committee and the Commissioner were of opinion that it was a proper appropriation to be made in the Indian appropriation bill, it not being a private claim.

Mr. HUNTER. If I understand this claim, it originates under the seventeenth section of the intercourse law, which would have been paid by the Department if there had been any appropriation to meet it. This is clearly a claim originating under the law of 1834; and if that be so, it is not a private claim. I do not know anything of the merits of the claim itself.

Mr. ATCHISON. I know all about it.

Mr. HAMLIN. How much is it.

Mr. ATCHISON. Twelve hundred dollars. It is for property taken by the Indians in the Territory of Iowa. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which this claim was referred, were of opinion that under the general intercourse law, the party was entitled to receive it, if he had pursued the course pointed out by the law. If he had gone before an Indian agent, or the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and made proof of his loss of property, he, of course, could enforce the collection of his claim against the Indians if they received annuities. But they received no annuities, and hence the Treasury of the United States, under that law, is responsible. This is the whole case. It is a public claim, if there be any such thing as a public claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to offer the following amendment:

For payment to the citizens of the States of Alabama and Georgia, for depredations committed by the Creek Indians on their property, and for the property taken by the troops of the United States, and the friendly Creeks in the years 1836 and 1837, $355,797, to be distributed according to the schedule returned by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress, approved 3d March, 1837.

Mr. HUNTER. I should have raised a question of order as to whether this is a private claim, but after the decision on Mr. Hart's claim yesterday, I do not feel that it is expedient to do so. It seems to me that this claim is no more a private one than that—both are private claims, in my opinion.

This question has been already under the consideration of the Senate, having been moved as an amendment to the deficiency bill, and was argued pro and con. by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] and the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL.] I did not think that it was a fair case for an appropriation then, nor do I think so now; but I do not think it is necessary to repeat the arguments used on that occasion, as they must be fresh in the recollection of every member of the Senate.

Mr. CHASE. I would like to have the question raised, and I will raise it for the purpose of taking the sense of the Senate, whether this is a private claim or not?—for I think we are in a fair way to accomplish the object of the Senator from North Carolina by indirection, if we are not prepared directly, to repeal the rule. These claims do not professedly arise under any law of the United States; but they arise, as was stated on a former occasion, upon the application of an equity to these particular claims. There is no law by which any provision for the payment of these claims is made; there is no contract in pursuance of any law, and there is no treaty by which they are recognized or provided for; so that they do not come within the category in which the claim, yesterday decided to be a public claim, stands. That was a claim arising in pursuance of a law or of a treaty, which is the supreme law of the land.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is very unwilling to decide, where there is the slightest doubt, in a matter of this kind; and has, therefore, on several occasions, submitted to the Senate whether such a proposition, as that now made, came under the rule or would be excluded. Under a decision reversing a decision of the same case, which occurred on the deficiency bill, the Senate determined yesterday that a claim, it had formerly pronounced a private claim, was not a private claim, although the Chair, if called upon to decide the question, would have decided otherwise. The Chair is, therefore, unwilling to exclude any amendment which, by any possibility, may not be strictly a private claim. The question is now raised again upon this amendment, and it is for the Senate to decide whether it is a private claim under the rule.

Mr. CLEMENS. I have certainly no objection to the Senate deciding this matter again, although they have decided it once. The Senate decided, when the deficiency bill was under consideration, that this was not a private claim. I have no wish to discuss the question. I want to vote on the merits of the case. I believe that every Senator understands it. It is a case arising both under treaty and under law. It is a case which is provided for by law; it is one which has been recommended by the Commissioner as well as by the President of the United States; and much the largest portion of the claim is for food and fodder furnished to the troops of the United States. As I have already stated, it is a case arising not only under treaty but under law—one which was recommended by the Commissioner appointed by Congress to ascertain the amount. The Senate has once decided that it was not a private claim, and I presume it will so decide again.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, whether the amendment can be received under the rule.

Mr. CHASE. This claim arises out of depredations committed by the Creek Indians on property in Alabama, and, I think, in Georgia. The law to which the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS,] refers, directed the appointment of commissioners for the purpose of ascertaining what depredations had been committed before hostilities, during hostilities, and subsequent to hostilities, distinguishing the claims into three classes—those which came within the provisions of the Indian intercourse law, those which came within the provisions of the act of 1816 and its amendments, and those which did not come within the provisions of either of those acts. Now, this amendment provides for the appropriation of $355,797, for the reimbursement of claims which are all enumerated under the third class, and none of which come either within the intercourse law or the act of 1816; and so far from being provided for by the act to which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] has referred, they are expressly excluded by its terms. So that my original statement was correct. These claims do not arise under any act of Congress, or in pursuance of an act of Congress, or under any contract, or any treaty; and to test the sense of the Senate on the question whether this amendment can be received, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall vote against this proposition, not because I am convinced, but upon the ground that the Senate has ruled it out. I voted before differently perhaps from what my vote would be now.

Mr. DAWSON. I beg to state, that when this same proposition was presented before in the deficiency bill the same point was made, and the same decision made, by the present presiding officer, and the Senate decided that it was proper to be admitted as an amendment. Are we going to change, or to give a vote over again every time the proposition comes up? I trust we will at least remain consistent upon this point.

The question was taken, and resulted—yeas 16, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Borland, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Clemens, Dawson, Foot, Geyer, Sebastian, Smith, Stockton, Upham, and Weller—16.
NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Bright, Brodhead, Chase, De Sansure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Felch, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mediwether, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Spruance, Underwood, and Wade—20.

So the amendment was not admitted under the rule.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and I am of opinion that it is for a claim that will not come within the prohibition of the rule, as it arises under a treaty. It is to insert:

For satisfaction of the claim of Robert Greenough, arising under a clause of the second article of the treaty made with the Menominee Indians on the 3d day of September, 1836, which clause was rejected by the Senate by way of amendment to the treaty, the sum of $20,000: Provided, That no part of the above sum of money shall be paid without the consent of the Menominee Indians duly obtained.

The PRESIDENT. From the reading of the amendment, the Chair is under the impression that it is to provide for what is strictly a private claim. That article of the treaty having been rejected, there is no ground under the treaty for the claim. If the Senator is not satisfied with the decision of the Chair, he can take an appeal.

Mr. ATCHISON. I dislike very much to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I shall not do so; but I shall fulfill my duty towards this claim by introducing to-morrow a bill for its satisfaction, and though I am satisfied in my own mind, that it is a public claim, I shall not appeal.

Mr. WELLER. I have an amendment to offer, which is to insert the following:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be authorized and empowered to examine and allow any amounts which may be presented for any depredations committed by Indians in the State of California, with whom the commissioners negotiated treaties: Provided, That satisfactory proof shall be adduced of the value of the property destroyed, and that the same was destroyed before the rejection of the treaties by the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I would inquire of the Senator from California, whether there are any estimates for that appropriation?

Mr. WELLER. There are not.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment cannot be received, if there is no estimate to base it upon. The rule expressly requires that there shall be an estimate from the head of a Department, or that an amendment shall be reported, by direction of a standing committee. Therefore the amendment cannot be received.

Mr. CASS. There is a proposition which I will make, with the assent of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which I indicated the other day, and that is, to provide for the payment of the expenses of the Shawnee delegation who came here to obtain the claim which we have rejected. The equity of making this provision, I believe, every Senator acceded to. At the suggestion of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to insert $1,500 to pay the expenses of the Shawnee delegation.

The PRESIDENT. Is that amendment offered by the direction of a standing committee?

Mr. CASS. No, sir; but I propose to appropriate $1,500, that sum being indicated by the honorable chairman, for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Shawnee delegation to and from the seat of Government.

The PRESIDENT. Is there any estimate for it?

Mr. CASS. There is not.

The PRESIDENT. Then the Chair cannot receive the amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I understand that the Committee on Indian Affairs have agreed to it.

The PRESIDENT. No such report has been made.

Mr. BRIGHT. Perhaps it is proper I should state that, anticipating that this amendment would be offered, on Friday last I asked the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whether, in his judgment, it would be proper that this amendment should be offered? He said, he thought so, and gave me a statement of what he supposed to be the necessary amount. I think he made it $1,425.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot receive a statement of the acting Commissioner. The rule requires that an estimate shall be received from the head of a Department.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended. And after a conversation as to the manner in which the Senate should proceed, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in, with the exception of the clause providing for presents and provisions for Indians visiting the California superintendency, and the provision in relation to the claim for the removal of the Choctaws, on which separate votes were desired.

The first question was on concurring in the following clause, adopted as in Committee of the Whole, in relation to the California superintendency: "For presents and provisions for Indians visiting the superintendency, $3,000."

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I move to strike out that clause, and to insert the following:

For the purpose of purchasing supplies and presents, to be distributed to the Indians in the State of California, under the direction of the President of the United States, the sum of $100,000.

In my judgment, this appropriation will be absolutely necessary, in order to prevent a large body of Indians in California from starving during the approaching year. They have been brought down from the mountains, from their accustomed homes, and settled upon the reservations that were made by the Indian commissioners, in the eighteen treaties that were negotiated with the different tribes. Those treaties have all been rejected by the Senate, and it is therefore necessary, in my judgment, that some provision should be made for them, in order to avoid hostilities. It will be a very difficult thing to explain to these Indians how it comes that these treaties, which they entered into with persons who represented themselves as agents of the Government, have now been repudiated. They will be compelled, as a matter of course, in consequence of the rejection of the treaties by the Senate, to leave these reservations upon which they have been placed by the Indian commissioners. It is, therefore, proposed in lieu of a confirmation of those treaties; the object being to appease the Indians by providing them with subsistence. They have been driven, as I said, from that section of the State where it was their habit to live on acorns and the fruits found in the woods, and they must inevitably starve unless some provision be made for them. For that purpose, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will inquire how much was the amount of the appropriation originally proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The PRESIDENT. Three thousand dollars. It is proposed now to insert $100,000.

Mr. WELLER. Allow me to say that I have offered this amendment in this place, because it was the only place where it could be gotten in. The original provision was simply for supplying the Indians who visited the superintendency. My provision is more comprehensive, and is one which looks to the support, to a limited extent, of these Indians.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would inquire of the honorable Senator from California, whether I understand this amendment precisely. If I do understand it, I think we ought to adopt it. If it is true that there is no appropriation contained in this bill for the large number of Indians in California, it seems to me that it would be right to adopt this amendment. If I understand the honorable Senator from California correctly this is the case. If this be the case I shall have to vote for the amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, I rise merely for the purpose of ascertaining the principle upon which this amendment is proposed. As I understand it, it is an appropriation of money to subsidize the Indians. It is to be the commencement of a policy by which they may avoid labor, and depend for their support upon this Government. The proposition is to appropriate $100,000 to buy provisions for Indians in the State of California—Indians, it is said, who may visit the agency for their own purposes, or for the purposes of the Government, which purposes are not designated, nor is it material that they should be designated.

The great question is this: Shall we, by our policy, adopt a course calculated to induce these Indians to avoid the necessity of labor? Shall we lead them to believe that their indolence will be provided for by our appropriations? I believe it to be very bad policy. In my judgment, instead of benefiting the Indians, it will be an injury to them. Instead of preventing the inhabitants of any State or Territory from being troubled by them, it will increase that trouble, for the Indians will leave their hunting grounds and the patches around their huts, and go entirely within the limits of the State; because they will know that the Government will feed them. I think the policy is a bad one, and I think it should be considered fully before we adopt it; for, where we take one step in this way, it would be very difficult to retrace it.

I observed yesterday, when an appropriation of money was proposed for Indians in New Mexico, that it would be economical to the Government if such an appropriation were made for the purpose of bringing the Indians within our country, in order to see the power of our Government. But I never, for a moment, supposed that our kindness, or our benevolence, would impose upon us an obligation to provide means to sustain them. If these Indians are perishing and dependent, the fault is not ours. I do not believe that the Government brought this condition upon them. But I suppose the Indians of the State of California have been induced to believe that they would be fed under a treaty, and that may be the apology for it. But those California treaties were not confirmed by the Senate, and these people, I suppose, have long since returned to their residences, and to their hunting grounds; or, if they have not returned, they ought to be induced to do so, and not be encouraged to remain, waiting for an appropriation of money by the Government to subsidize them. These are my views. But I should like to hear from the honorable Senator from California, and know why we should adopt the provision.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I do not think that my friend from Georgia has put the propriety of this appropriation upon its true ground. If I understand the case, it is this: certain treaties were negotiated with these Indian tribes. Under those treaties, they entered into the possession of certain reserved lands and certain benefits accrued to them. Now, the treaties have come here to us, and have been rejected. In the mean time it is obvious that, not only these Indians, but our own people (who ought to have known better) in California have gone upon the idea, that the treaties being made by the agent of the Government and agreed to by the Indians, it was proper to put them into execution. Thus, as the Senator from California says, these Indians have been left in this condition for want of food, with starvation staring them in the face, and they can understand it in no other way than as an act of bad faith on the part of this Government. It is the most natural thing in the world that they should so understand it. How can they understand the complex machinery by which,—after the treaty was negotiated after it was put into execution, after large steps were taken to consider it as subsisting,—all of a sudden they are informed that the treaty does not bind us, and that they are to be turned out of their reservations, deprived of all the advantages proposed for them, and left in a starving condition? Their passions and hostilities must be inflamed with a sense of gross injustice and perfidy on the part of this Government; and the natural consequences will be, in all probability, an outbreak in that country. If that should be the result, we all know what the consequences will be to the Government—that it will cost us a great deal more to suppress the outbreak than it would, by a timely application of food, to prevent it from commencing.

Besides, I would suggest to my friend from Georgia, that all this money is not of course to be applied to these Indians. We appropriate that amount, and the President is to use it, as he sees occasion, for the support of the Indians. Of course, the President will use it solely for the purpose of preventing the mischievous consequences to which the Senator from California has alluded. It seems to me that this is a particular and special case, in which the necessity for intervention has arisen in consequence of the acts of our agents, and the act of the Government. It is not entering into any general system of feeding Indians; but it is a small appropriation to avoid an Indian conflict that will involve the Government in a large expense, besides the necessity of taking the lives of some of these poor creatures, and also the probable consequence of the loss of the lives of our own citizens. It seems to me that it is a very wise and just precautionary measure; and that the amount is small enough.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say in answer to the Senator from Georgia. I am not in the habit of voting for extravagant appropriations, whether the money be expended in California or elsewhere. Nor would I have submitted this amendment had I not been perfectly satisfied that, unless some provision be made for these Indians, they will be driven by starvation into hostilities with the whites. The Senator from Georgia says: "Let them return to their hunting grounds." Their hunting grounds! The white man is there. The white race is scattered all over the State of California. There is not a gulch or a mountain where your miner is not engaged in his toil and labor. How, then, will the Indian go back to that spot where he was accustomed to obtain his food? The miner is there, and it is utterly impossible for the Indian to return. He has come down upon the reservation which was made by the agent of your Government, in conformity with the treaties made with him. The Indians believed that they were to be secured in the undisturbed possession of that portion of territory which had been allotted to them under the treaties. Those treaties required the Government of the United States to feed these Indians—to furnish them with a large amount of beef, and various other articles, which would have involved the Government in a most extraordinary expenditure.

Public policy demanded that those treaties should be rejected; but they have been in part executed by the commissioners upon the one side, and by the Indians upon the other. We have rejected them, and therefore we are under a moral obligation to make some provision for the support of those who have been disappointed by their rejection. The Indians are now on the reservations. They cannot return to their fishing streams where they were in the habit of obtaining some of their food. They cannot return to the acorn trees from whence they derived a part of their support, because, as I said before, the white man has gone there, and he will not suffer the Indians to remain near him.

We who represent the State of California were compelled, from a sense of duty, to vote for the rejection of the treaties, because we knew that it would be utterly impossible for the General Government to retain these Indians in the undisturbed possession of these reservations. Why, there were as many as six reservations made in a single county in the State of California, and that one of the best mining counties in the State. They knew that those reservations included mineral lands, and that, just so soon as it became more profitable to dig upon the reservations than elsewhere, the white man would go there, and that the whole Army of the United States could not expel the intruders.

It was, therefore, under this stern necessity that we were compelled to reject the treaties; and now, after the Indians have complied with them—after they have done everything in their power to execute them in good faith, by coming down out of their old homes and occupying the reservations, I only ask that an appropriation of $100,000 should be made for their temporary relief—for their support under the circumstances in which they have been placed by the rejection of the treaties by this branch of the Government. If I did not believe it was an appropriation demanded by absolute necessity, I would not have asked it at the hands of the Senate. It will be hard indeed to explain to these Indians how it came that the formal treaty made with your accredited agents has been violated. They may not understand, as well as you and I, that the President and Senate alone, under our Constitution, have the power to conclude treaties.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman inform me, if he pleases, whether, by these treaties, any provision or any promise was held out to the Indians, that if they did come down and occupy the reservations on the country set apart for them, they would be provided for?—and what provision was to be made for them?

Mr. WELLER. Every one of those treaties required, amongst other things, that the Indians should be supplied with a certain quantity of food in the year 1851, and in the year 1852. That which was to have been supplied to the Indians in 1851, of course has already been delivered to them, and a considerable portion of that which was required to be delivered in 1852, has also been turned over. But there remained, according to these treaties, a large quantity yet to be delivered; and the rejection of the treaties has stopped the delivery of beef. We did undertake, under those treaties, to supply the Indians with beef to a very large amount during these two years. I believe that four or five of the treaties required us to deliver more than $100,000 worth of beef during the year 1852; and if we are to look at it as a question of dollars and cents, we shall make money by giving $100,000 now, instead of furnishing the beef which we had agreed to furnish under the treaties in 1852. In other words, an execution of these treaties would have required a much larger expenditure of the public money than is proposed by this amendment.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of justice in what the Senator from California has observed, but the amount proposed to be appropriated is greater than I am prepared to vote for. It must be recollected that the Indians have already received food to the value of $800,000 or $1,000,000 during the year 1851 and a portion of 1852, without the slightest consideration having been paid to us. The treaties have all to be made over again. I am willing to make some appropriation under the circumstances of the case, but I should think the amount proposed by the honorable Senator from California, considering the expenditure which has already been made, and the amount that the Indians have already received from citizens of the United States, is too much.

Mr. WELLER. The Government only paid $50,000.

Mr. CASS. I understand that perfectly. I said the Indians were furnished by citizens—not by the Government—to the amount of nearly $1,000,000.

Mr. WELLER. The amount appropriated by the Government was $50,000. But the Indians obtained from citizens of California, beef and other provisions to the amount of nearly $1,000,000, and my learned friend from Michigan the other day took occasion to inform the Senate that under no circumstances would he vote for paying that amount. If he does not intend to vote it out of the National Treasury he ought not to charge the Indians with having received it from the Government. But I put this proposition upon the plain ground that if you had executed these treaties and gone on and delivered the beef which the treaties stipulated should be delivered to the Indians, it would have cost the Government more than the appropriation now asked.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that this amendment is moved with more than ordinary intelligence on the part of the mover, because it comes from the honorable Senator from California, who perhaps understands this subject better than any one else here. But an amendment of this kind, which indicates a source of expenditure from the Federal Treasury for an object which is certainly new to me—when it has not had the sanction or investigation of a committee—I must receive with some distrust. I do not say that a committee would examine the subject or bring forward a proposition with more intelligence than the honorable Senator from California; but from his statement I see that this is but the commencement of a system of expenditure for the subsistence of the Indians in California. If we make this appropriation of $100,000, it will be holding out inducements to these poor, deluded, expelled creatures. The white man will drive them from their lands; and how are we to feed them? Are we to feed them from the Treasury? Shall we commence a system of this kind, and commence it in reference to its operation on the Federal Treasury? I do say that there ought to be some more investigation than the motion of a single member, and I say it with great respect for the honorable gentleman from California.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think this is a matter of a good deal of consequence, and that we ought to deliberate on it well before we adopt the amendment. Yet I am not altogether certain but that the amendment ought to be adopted. My friend from California, if I understand him, predicates it upon the ground that by the invasion of the Indian territory by the miners already, and by the prospective invasion of the miners, the game of the Indians has been destroyed, and the usual source of subsistence upon which they rely has been cut off. I have no doubt of the truth of that in a great degree. But, sir, it presents to my mind this consideration, that here, our people, without law, go into the Indian country, destroy the means of the Indians, disperse their game, or kill their game, interrupt their possessions and their means of living, and then Congress is called upon to make provision for that state of things.

I admit that it is wrong to these people to invade their possessions, and cut off their means of subsistence; and if we, as a Government, tolerate it, we ought to make them some allowance; and in that point of view the amendment of my friend from California commends itself to my favorable consideration. But while I look at it in that aspect, I cannot forget that it is based upon a wrong—I cannot forget that it is based upon a thing which we ought to have moral courage, and which I think we have physical courage, to prevent. The territory of the Indians ought not to be thus invaded. We ought not to allow their means of subsistence to be taken away from them, against law and without law; so that the National Treasury is called upon to prevent these poor wretches from starving.

Now, how all these objects are to be obtained, and what it is best for us to do, under the circumstances, is a very grave question, and, as the Senator from South Carolina says, it requires grave consideration. I acknowledge that, for myself, I hardly know what to do. The idea of allowing these poor creatures to starve to death, when we, in a great measure, have brought that condition upon them, is horrible to humanity, and I cannot well tolerate it. But, then, the consequences of engaging in this state of things, that we are to feed all the Indian tribes, and put them upon the Treasury for support, is a consequence equally alarming. I should be very glad if the matter could be weighed further, and if we could have the report of a committee, and some more deliberation on the subject. I confess that I hardly know what to do.

Mr. ATCHISON. Mr. President, there is some difficulty in my mind in relation to this matter, not as to the amount proposed at all, but because I doubt very much whether it will answer the purpose of feeding forty thousand Indians in California, or such number as it may be necessary to feed.

Mr. WELLER. There are seventy thousand Indians in California.

Mr. ATCHISON. There may be seventy thousand, but my information and my belief on that information is, that they cannot exceed forty thousand. At least, that was the estimate before we acquired California. By those best informed, it was estimated that the whole population of California, red and white, did not exceed sixty thousand, though that is a point about which I am not so well informed as the Senator from California.

It is truly said that but $50,000 have been appropriated by this Government for Indian services in California. Those $50,000 are gone, and not one dollar for the benefit of the Indians, as far as I can ascertain. Hence the only objection in my mind to this appropriation is as to the manner in which it is to be disbursed, and as to who is to disburse it, and whether the Indians will derive any more benefit from these $100,000 than from the $50,000 already expended. Why, there are claims now before the Committee on Indian Affairs from California—and just claims, which this Government will be compelled to pay—for beef furnished and for services rendered to the commissioners while engaged in making the eighteen treaties which have been rejected by the Senate—claims for the very purpose which those $50,000 were appropriated to pay, the expenses of negotiation. Claims, I do not know to what amount, but certainly to the amount of several thousand dollars, are now before the Committee on Indian Affairs for transporting the Indians from one place to another, and feeding them while holding the treaties, in addition to the $50,000 expended, no man can tell for what. But if we could have the least assurance in the world that these $100,000 would be well appropriated, and justly appropriated, for the purpose of feeding these Indians, and perhaps of clothing them, I would not hesitate for a moment to vote for it, or even for an appropriation of $200,000.

Some gentlemen wish to cut down this appropriation to $50,000. Why, according to the lowest estimate I can make, you will have to furnish forty thousand, or, as the Senator from California says, seventy thousand Indians with provisions. If you feed them with beef—and I suppose that this is the cheapest article of food with which you can supply them—how many head of cattle could be furnished to these seventy thousand Indians? Only two thousand head of cattle to feed seventy thousand Indians, or, according to my estimate, forty thousand Indians. I estimate cattle at $50 a head, and I suppose they cannot be had in California for less. Some gentlemen who negotiated the treaties, I am informed, gave from $80 to $100 a head, in some instances, for cattle, and in others, I believe, $50 a head; but I think the honorable Senator from California will bear me out in the assertion, that beef cannot be furnished to those Indians at less than $50 a head. But I would not hesitate for a moment in voting $100,000 or $200,000, if I had the least assurance that the money would be appropriated for the purposes intended.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, this is a subject of great difficulty. I know, as was said by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] that the Senator from California speaks upon this subject with more intelligence than any of us. I feel the full weight of all that he has said, and yet, at the same time, I cannot but be impressed with the weight of what has fallen from the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. DAWSON.] I am unwilling, on the one hand, to assume for this Government the obligation of supporting these Pueblo Indians, if they should be dispossessed of their lands by intruders from the State of California; and I am unwilling to vote any appropriation which may, by implication, bind this Government to pay debts contracted by the agents who acted not only without orders, but contrary to their instructions. I should not, therefore, be willing—if I were to come to the conclusion that some temporary provision ought to be made in order to furnish these Indians with supplies—to vote for the proposition, unless it were guarded in such a manner as to exclude the conclusion that the United States were making this their permanent policy, or resorting to it for more than to meet a temporary emergency. But it is a very grave question, and one which is destined hereafter to embarrass us very much in relation to what is to be done with these Indians in California—where are they to go? It seems that they are dispossessed by intruders, driven from their homes, and compelled either to join the roving bands of the mountains, or to become in their turn marauders to visit again upon the whites the injuries which were first inflicted upon them.

I do not see—and I am not sure that that would answer—any way out of the difficulty except this: The Government certainly does own lands in California, and it may own lands in some positions in which a place of refuge might be afforded to these Indians. And if we are to look to any permanent policy—that is to say, to any policy which may serve our turn for fifteen or twenty years to come, for I am aware that nothing can be called a permanent policy in relation to these Indians—it must be by looking to some such provision as that to which I allude to enable them to find a habitation and an abode; and I think that the Indian Department should turn its attention to this matter. I would be willing to vote—perhaps not $100,000, for it seems to me that, as there is no estimate for it, that may be too much—but I do not know that I should object even to that amount, if the Senator from California will guard the amendment in such terms as to say that it shall be a mere temporary provision to meet the existing emergency, and shall not bind the Government to the future policy of supporting these Indians whenever they may be dispossessed. I am utterly opposed to that; but I think some provision ought to be made upon the public lands to furnish these people with an abode, if it be possible. I know there is one other resource. The State of California has a deep interest in not dispossessing these Indians, and having them wandering about its borders. I do not know but that if we do not take this obligation upon ourselves, they will be forced to make some provision; and it does seem to me that they ought to make some provision by which to prevent these intrusions. California is a State, and has power to prevent these intrusions to some extent. But I am willing to discharge that portion of the obligation which falls upon the United States. I am willing to take a portion of the public lands, (if a portion can be selected which would suit the views of the people of California, and satisfy the Indians as well as the interests of the Government,) on which they may be settled. That is the only plan that I see. As to this idea of feeding them when they may be dispossessed, year after year, it can result, as the Senator from Georgia well says, in no good either to the Indians or to the whites.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the difficulties seem to increase the more I think about this matter. It does seem to me that we have not all the facts before us which it is necessary to understand in order to have judicious and discreet legislation upon this subject. Since I addressed the Senate before, I have heard it stated that there are seventy thousand of these California Indians.

Mr. WELLER. I say so now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend says he repeats it. Now, take it for granted that there are seventy thousand, how are they situated? Are they scattered over a large extent of country, or are they concentrated in towns and villages, so that you can reach them directly? If they are scattered over a large extent of country, and you put these $100,000 into the hands of agents, how are they to reach the seventy thousand Indians scattered over the country? How are they to make provision for the Indians, when they occupy hundreds of square miles? How are they to be concentrated so as to be paid? These are difficulties which have arisen in my mind as the discussion has progressed.

Suppose, however, that you have the seventy thousand Indians congregated together, so that they can be reached by the agents having the $100,000 to distribute among them in provisions: As soon as you congregate them, you deprive them of their ordinary and usual mode of subsistence by hunting. If they are now scattered, you withdraw them from their little patches of vegetables and other agricultural products, on which they may, to some extent, look for a subsistence; and if you bring them all together, and deprive them of their ordinary means of supply, your $100,000 will be nothing. It will be but a drop in the bucket—but a little better than a dollar apiece. If you are to congregate them in that way, and thus deprive them of their hunting pursuits, a million or two millions of dollars would not sustain them for a year at California prices.

Mr. DAWSON. This amendment would not give them a dinner apiece.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose it would not at California prices. I have now presented the subject to the consideration of the Senate in two aspects—the one presuming these Indians to be scattered, as I suppose they are, all over the country, relying to some extent upon fishing and hunting, and their little patches of vegetables, for subsistence. The other is as congregated and brought together. And I ask the Senate, how are these one hundred thousand dollars to benefit the Indians, situated in either position? It seems to me that the subject deserves a great deal of consideration before we make the appropriation. In one aspect, in the scattered condition of the Indians, it seems to me that it would do no good; and in their aggregate condition, in which I have contemplated them, it will not be anything like an appropriation which will be of value to them.

Under this difficulty, it seems to me that the appropriation can do but little good; and if these Indians, as I presume they are, be scattered, in the way I have contemplated, and you divide the $100,000, and put it into the hands of half a dozen agents, I am afraid that the agents will get the most of it before it gets into the hands of the Indians. These are the difficulties which I have, and which present themselves to my mind as operating against the amendment.

Mr. BELL. I have listened to the suggestions on both sides of the Chamber in relation to this proposition, and it seems to me that there would be some propriety in enlarging the appropriation contemplated by the amendment adopted by the Senate in quasi committee, but I think the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from California is unnecessarily large, contemplating the object which he does, because Congress will sit again in a very few months, and we shall then, perhaps, be better informed as to the necessities of the Indians in California, and the propriety of enlarging the appropriation, or making an additional appropriation.

This proposition is based, as I understand the Senator from California, for the most part, upon the idea that treaties having been made with these Indians, or the most of them, and they not being able to comprehend why the Government of the United States has not ratified the treaties—being disappointed in their expectations—relying, as they may have done, up to this time, upon the provisions of these treaties for their future subsistence, in part—irritation, mischief, and hostility may grow out of it, unless the Government adopt speedily some course to reconcile them to what has been done by the Senate. Hence, it is proposed to pacify them by distributing presents and provisions among them to keep them quiet until we shall settle upon some policy in regard to them. This is what I understand to be the object of the Senator from California. I think it is a very sensible, and a very wise suggestion.

Now, were we to go into the discussion of what should be our policy with regard to these Indians, none of us would be prepared to say what ought to be done, and what policy ought to be pursued. But, considering that we have rejected these numerous treaties, and that some compensation may be due to the Indians for provisions which will not be furnished according to the treaties made by the commissioners, which have not been ratified, I apprehend that some new treaties will have to be made with the Indians, and that the commissioners, under proper instructions from the Government, will have in view some permanent policy, and that some provision—some just and reasonable, and, if you please, liberal provision—will be made for the subsistence of the Indians, considering the circumstances of their being deprived of their old and accustomed modes of subsisting themselves. I am, therefore, perfectly willing to enlarge the appropriation as originally presented by the Senator from Missouri, going upon the estimate of the Department. I think it is prudent that we should make some larger provision for presents to these Indians, and for subsistence, to be as judiciously applied as we are able to have them applied, under the circumstances of the case, to prevent irritation and outbreaks, until we can have new treaties made, as I hope, by commissioners of more discretion and more judgment than those whom we have recently trusted with our Indian affairs in California. I think, therefore, if the Senator from California would reduce his proposition to $30,000 or $40,000, or even $50,000, to be expended until Congress shall sit again, for this solitary purpose, I shall not object. Certainly it is idle for us to consider here, with the information we have on the subject, as to any permanent policy. By voting this moderate amount, I think that we would not be committed ourselves, nor would the country, nor the Indians hold us to the policy of undertaking to subsist them hereafter, to discourage industry, and lead them to depend wholly upon the bounty of this Government. If the Senator from California would reduce his proposition to a more moderate amount, I should vote for it with pleasure, and think that would be enough for two or three months to come.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I agree with the honorable Senator from Tennessee, that we are deficient in the requisite amount of information upon this subject; but at this late day of the session it must be evident to every Senator that it is perfectly impossible that we can obtain any information in time to bring this measure into any tangible shape; and unless it be passed in the form in which it is now presented, it is probable it will not be passed at all. I think we have about two days to devote to each of the general appropriation bills, and that we can properly devote no more than two days to each of them. I suppose, therefore, that this measure cannot be presented and passed as a distinct and separate one; and conceding that we are deficient in information, still I am unwilling to let that stand in the way of this measure, because it seems to me to be so expedient that, from the little knowledge I have had of the Indians, I think it ought to be adopted. The Senator from California, who is, perhaps, as familiar with the matter as any Senator on the floor, can give us all the light which we can derive from the investigation of a committee. He comes here and tells us—that which must be self-evident to every man who has ever had anything to do with the Indians—that the Indians have been dispossessed of their hunting grounds; that they have been driven back; that they are in a starving condition; and more than that, he tells us that they have been led to believe that the United States, through their agents, would in part provide for them in this condition. Now, what is it that has induced the Indians upon our settled frontier, in every section of our country, to make war upon the whites? It is precisely this condition of things. The Indians have been dispossessed of their hunting grounds, and been driven to agricultural pursuits, which they have had to pursue immediately, without preparation, or starvation was inevitable. Whenever the experiment has been tried this has been the result. Yet we are, from day to day, endeavoring to force the Indians upon the cultivation of the soil, upon the spur of the moment, without any previous preparation, and withhold from them the small pittance which might perhaps prepare them for that kind of life.

What is it that is daily driving the Indians on the frontiers of Texas into hostilities? Why, they are gradually driven back by the white settlements. They never take life if they can possibly avoid it. Their first resort is to steal cattle, and when they take life it is for the purpose of concealing the robbery. If the subject were to be investigated, I undertake to say that the Senate would find that when a company of volunteers is called out to quell an Indian insurrection, the pay of that company would feed twelve times as many Indians as there are whites in the neighborhood; and that by feeding them the rupture would have been entirely healed, or would not have taken place.

I hope that the sum proposed by the Senator from California will not be decreased, because the appropriation of less than $100,000 cannot be expected to be sufficient to feed seventy thousand Indians; nor would that sum feed them all. I apprehend that the Senator from California contemplates no such thing as that the whole seventy thousand Indians shall derive the benefit of this appropriation. Why, it would not divide among them much more than $1 40 a piece, and would feed very few of them. One hundred thousand dollars, at the rate of soldiers' pay, would feed about fourteen thousand Indians for one year. Now we will suppose that no more than fourteen thousand Indians are to be paid—fourteen thousand Indians are sufficient to keep the frontiers of California in a state of consternation for an entire year, and they would cause the destruction of thousands of valuable lives. The Senator from California tells us that, unless some provision be made, war is inevitable; that these men, driven to starvation, will make war upon the frontier settlers, unless their reasonable expectations are answered. His assertions are borne out by our experience in other portions of the country. I, for one, in this state of things—when we, by our agents, led the Indians to believe that we would interfere in their behalf—am willing to extend this pittance of $100,000, and probably it will prevent Indian hostilities; and in that probability it is a mere pittance, and I trust will not be decreased.

Mr. HUNTER. I have prepared a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from California, which I hope may be received.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition of the Senator from California is an amendment to an amendment, and an amendment to that proposition cannot be received.

Mr. HUNTER. If it is read, perhaps the Senator from California will accept it.

The PRESIDENT. It will be read for information.

The amendment was accordingly read, as follows:

For the temporary relief of the Indians in California, until permanent arrangements be made for their future settlement, the sum of $50,000: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to imply an obligation on the part of the United States to feed and support the Indians who have been dispossessed of their land in California.

Mr. HUNTER. I can leave the amount blank if the Senator wishes it.

Mr. WELLER. I have no objection to the proposition of the Senator from Virginia, except as to that provision of it which names the amount to be appropriated; and I would agree to the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] were it not for the fact, that I am perfectly satisfied that I have already fixed the amount at the very lowest sum that will produce any practical good. I know that there are other gentlemen who understand fully this question, who have desired an appropriation of $200,000, and I have been told by gentlemen who know the condition of the Indians now in California, that a sum less than $200,000 will not prevent the Indians from starving during the present year. But, hoping that the proposition might meet the approbation of the Senate, I fixed it at the very lowest point at which I believed any practical good would result—$100,000. I desired, of course, that the appropriation should be based upon the idea that, as the treaties have been rejected, it was necessary to make some provision for the support of these Indians, until we should adopt some permanent policy with regard to them. Their temporary interests I am now seeking to advance, whilst I am looking to the maintenance of peace upon the frontier.

I undertake to say that there are seventy thousand Indians within the limits of the State of California, although I should not like to make a question of veracity with my friend from Missouri. In California their number is variously estimated at from 100,000 to 150,000. The Governor of that State two years ago addressed a letter to the President of the United States, which is to be found among the public records, affirming that there were 100,000 warriors within the limits of California. I doubt not that this was an exaggeration. But the whole number of souls I have estimated at 70,000. This opinion is based upon my own observation, as well as the information derived from others, and I think may be relied upon.

You have appointed a Superintendent of Indian Affairs in California, against whose integrity not one syllable has ever been uttered. He is a gentleman of irreproachable character. He has been sent out during the last week for the purpose of exercising supervisory control over Indian affairs upon the Pacific. You have also recently appointed an Indian agent for California, (Major Reading,) a gentleman well known not only there, but here, of irreproachable character, of general intelligence, and excellent habits—a man whose integrity has never been questioned anywhere, and who stands high in the estimation of all who have known him, and who, from a residence of eight years in that country, knows the location of every tribe of Indians; and if the appropriation were placed in his hands, relying, as I would most implicitly, upon his honesty and integrity in its disbursement, I should feel an assurance that every dollar that was appropriated would be expended properly for the support of the Indians. Sir, he would have no difficulty in getting these Indians to the points where it would be necessary to distribute the provisions. His knowledge of localities would prevent him from experiencing any difficulties from this source.

But if this appropriation is not made, what do you propose to do? You have rejected the treaties after they had been partially executed—after the Indians had abandoned their hunting grounds, and come into the valleys, upon their reservations. The white man has gone and taken possession of the grounds which they have themselves abandoned. He is engaged there now, toiling in the mineral section of the State; and what are you to do with these Indians? Do you propose that the State of California shall be compelled to save them from starvation? We have been compelled to fight them since our admission into the Union. You have taken care to send your Federal troops somewhere else; and when these Indians have invaded our frontier, and when they have destroyed the property and the lives of our people, we have been compelled to rely upon our own troops for our defense. The State of California has expended $1,000,000 already, in repelling the assaults of these Indians; and you now propose that we shall be compelled also to feed them. I say, sir, that your past policy has called upon us to sustain the whole expense of these Indian wars; and if this amendment be rejected, you compel us to feed the Indians besides, or to see them starving; for starvation is inevitable, unless they are fed by you.

My proposition is simply to make a provision for them temporarily, until this Government can adopt some system for the relief of the Indians. Sir, it has been the policy of the Government to drive them to the West; but the white man is now in the West. He stands upon the shores of the Pacific ocean. He has commenced pushing the Indian back upon the Rocky Mountains. The Indian is placed in between the upper and nether millstones, and he must be crushed! The fate of the Indian is irrevocably sealed. He must soon be crushed by the encroaching tide of emigration. The hand of destiny has marked him, and soon he must fade away. The reflection to every humane heart is a melancholy one, but it is unavoidable. In the providence of God they must soon disappear before the onward march of our countrymen. Humanity may forbid, but the interest of the white man demands their extinction.

Now, I do not undertake to say what policy ought to be adopted. I am not in possession of the information necessary to enable me to give any opinion in reference to the future policy to be adopted by the Government in regard to these Indians. I have not, of course had an opportunity of hearing from that country since the rejection of the treaties by the Senate, and I cannot speak of the effect that that rejection will produce; but I am almost certain that that State will be involved in an Indian war just so soon as the Indians are driven from their reservations, if no provision whatever be made for them. If you are involved in a war, who is to pay the expense of that war? Take it, sir, as a question of economy—who is to pay the expense of that war? The General Government is bound to extend its protecting hand over all its people; and if the man who stands upon the shores of the Pacific ocean is as much entitled to the protection of the Government as he who stands in the center of the country, that protecting hand can only be extended there at the expense of the National Treasury; and you will be compelled to expend hundreds of thousands of dollars in repelling the assaults that will be provoked by a refusal to give them this small pittance.

The condition of affairs in that country is, it is true, singular. The white population is scattered all over the State. The great body of these Indians are found congregated in the northern section of the State. They are easily gotten at. You have already deprived them of the ordinary means of subsistence. The miner is upon the old ground, and he will not suffer the Indian to conflict with what he conceives to be his interest. You are compelled, then, to legislate as you find things, and not as you desire them to be. It may be a very hard thing that the miner has gone into that region and driven the Indians out of it, but it was your population, it was your countrymen, it was the citizens of your State who have gone there. I say to the Senate in all seriousness, that if they are determined that the State of California shall not only feed these Indians, but that she shall be compelled to fight them with her own troops and at her own expense, and in the mean time you are taxing the very necessities of life which they consume, the very bread which they eat, the time will come when there will be a spirit of disaffection upon the shores of the Pacific; when they see their friends and relations butchered by the Indians in cold blood—when they see their coast unlighted, their harbors unimproved, and their commerce unprotected, they will naturally inquire whether this is the same sort of justice extended to the other States of the Union.

Sir, if you desire to maintain the peace and harmony of the Union, you must take care to do justice to all its parts. You must not adopt a policy which will alienate the affections of the people, and make them feel the full force of the fact that they are far, very far away from you. They feel enough of this now. They feel oftentimes that there is a want of sympathy on your part towards them; that they are regarded as a remote cousin, for whom no particular affection is entertained by the parent Government. If a course of policy of this sort be adopted, you will increase that disaffection, until they will be compelled to take care of themselves. If you desire that the people now located upon the shores of the Pacific shall take care of themselves, withdraw your custom-house officers, and my word for it, they will soon do it. However unwilling they may be to withdraw from the Union, they will never agree to sacrifice their honor. Stern necessity may compel them to pursue a course at variance with all their feelings and sympathies.

I am asking no more for the people of California than I am willing to accord to the citizens of any other State. I do not urge this appropriation because the $100,000 are to be expended in the State which I in part represent; but I have advocated it from a solemn conviction that unless some provision of this sort be made, a large portion of California will be involved in a desolating war with the Indian tribes, and these Indians will in the end be exterminated. Such will be the result. It is like the question of death—it is a mere question of time with them. They must soon be crushed—they will be exterminated before the onward march of the white man; but in the mean time, as a matter of humanity, let us do all we can to soften the blow that strikes them to the earth. If necessity, which is generally the plea of tyrants, requires us to drive them from the graves of their fathers and the homes of their ancestors, let our plans be tempered with mercy. Let us not forget that the time will come when the Creator of the white and the red man will pass upon our conduct. Although they may be the poorest of his creatures, injustice to them may not, will not go unpunished.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from California whether he accepts the proposition made by the Senator from Virginia in lieu of his own?

Mr. WELLER. If the Senator will strike out the sum named in the amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. HUNTER. I leave the sum in blank.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Virginia, and accepted by the Senator from California.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the blank in the amendment be filled with $100,000.

The PRESIDENT. Then the first question will be on filling the blank with $100,000.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest and a good deal of attention to what the honorable Senator from California has just said. That most of what he says ought to impress us cannot be doubted, and will not be disputed by any one. The only thing to which I object, is to the conclusion of his remarks. I dislike all prophecies or threats of what a particular section of this country will do in a given event, before the necessity is forced upon it. I wish that had been unsaid. But, sir, that the time is fast approaching when the great catastrophe of the Indian tribes is to arrive, is to be witnessed, and to be suffered, none of us can doubt. He that has looked into the condition of that people, must have come to the conclusion, that when the white people lapped around them on the west, the finale of their fate was not far off.

What strikes me as astonishing is, that the proposition of the Senator from California should be deemed at all adequate to the emergency. Why, upon what ground does he place it? He tells us, what we knew before, that the Indian agents in California made treaties with these Indians; that whilst treating they had supported them, and that in the treaties made with them—and which they had a fair and good right to presume would be ratified—promises were made to them of subsistence to stand in lieu of the resources which they had heretofore had—the acorns of the country, the game of the country, and whatever else there might be to which they had previously resorted for subsistence. He says that these treaties were rejected, and consequently that their terms have not been complied with. What is the remedy? Why, he tells us that from now to the next session of Congress, and as long thereafter as may be required, Congress should make an appropriation of $100,000 to satisfy the Indians and to feed them.

Now, if we take the number to be what he himself says he has stated it to be—70,000—it would give to them $1 42.6 apiece, provided the whole $100,000 go entirely to their benefit, and were received by them in full. If we deduct, what we may rationally suppose to be necessary to be deducted in that country for the expenditure of that sum—twenty per cent.—we have but $80,000 to be appropriated to their use. That distributed among them, would give them $1 14.2 per head. I know not what is the price of beef in that country, but from the examples we have had, I apprehend it will not be less than six cents per pound. Put it at the low rate of six cents: what would that give them? It would give to each Indian under the first computation, supposing they get the whole amount, twelve pounds of beef; and deducting the twenty per cent., it would give them nine and three fifths pounds per head. Yet this is to be the grand pacificator for three months, and during, perhaps, most of the next session of Congress, to be applied in California! This is to preserve the peace! This is to allay the excitement of these Indians! This is to prevent a war! Why, sir, it will not do it.

I do not charge any Senator here, much less the Senator from California, with folly; but if we do this, as a body, we shall be committing a folly. It will not pacify them; it will not keep down a war, if they entertain a belligerent spirit.

Then the nine and three fifths pounds or the twelve pounds will be exhausted among these Indians, who look to that alone as the resource for life, in three or four days; and they will begin again to inquire with more asperity than they now inquire, "Is this all?" And the honorable Senator from Virginia proposes that we shall expressly declare to them that it is not to continue to be the policy of this Government. Why, sir, this will but exasperate them. I as sincerely believe that you will exasperate them by this course as I believe anything upon which the convictions of my mind are settled.

I shall regret to see such an appropriation made, because I think it will be disastrous. But there does arise a question, What are we to do with these Indians? It is one that is melancholy in its character. It presents itself with a harsh tone to the human understanding. The all-wise Creator, Provider, and Governor of all things can alone see what it is proper that we should do. But that this would not be sanctioned by his wisdom I am very confident, for one, with the poor wisdom which I have.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose you give them a homestead.

Mr. WALKER. The Senator intimates something about a homestead. Sir, it is a wise suggestion. All you ever can do with these Indians is to bestow upon them a homestead, and that as quickly as possible. But $100,000 will not provide for them until you give them a homestead. If they will not use the homestead for the purposes of self-subsistence, they will be but in the condition in which the rest of mankind have found themselves when they failed to subsist themselves from the bosom of the earth; and I venture to say that many of them will pass away before they ever do it.

The imputation of cruelty will long rest upon this country before the remnant of these tribes are brought to subsist themselves. But this imputation will be erroneous; it will not be just—it will not be merited by us. But still we cannot escape it. All that you can do is to give them a homestead; and I thank the honorable Senator from South Carolina for that word. Yes, sir, give them a homestead, and that as quickly as possible. But, until you do it, nine pounds or twelve pounds of beef will not satisfy them—mark my word for it. I do not believe that if we appropriate $100,000 these Indians will get $80,000 of it. I do not believe that even $80,000 will reach them if we make this appropriation. I doubt whether the half of it will reach them. I doubt whether they will derive any material benefit from it. I very much doubt, as has been said, whether it would give each of them a good dinner of beef alone. And this is to pacify them! It will not do it.

It seems to me, that we had better do nothing, than make this appropriation. At all events, it occurs to me, that if we are going to appropriate anything for their subsistence, we must appropriate a sufficiency to subsist them; and, in addition to that, we must do what has been suggested by the Senator from Virginia, appropriate money to institute and carry on an investigation in regard to the future location of these Indians—a location in which they may not be disturbed. But $100,000 will not do that; and there is no proposition, in addition to it, to appropriate money to locate them.

I do not propose to give any advice in regard to this matter, except that this amendment should not be adopted. It seems to me, that a very few figures will show that it must be utterly futile. But if I were to give any advice, I would say let this appropriation go; but let them see that a prospect of something for the future is held out to them. Let them see that there is an interest felt by the Government for their welfare. Let them see that the Government has instituted an inquiry into their future condition, and for the purpose of bettering that condition. That is the only advice that I can give. How that end can best be accomplished, I leave to others. But I would advise, for one, that this appropriation be not made; but that our energies be directed entirely to their future location, and the support of a delegation in connection with the Government agency, to look out for that location.

Mr. WELLER. I have but a few remarks to make in response to my friend from Wisconsin. He seems to labor under the impression that the $100,000 proposed to be appropriated, are to be used for the purchase of beef, and that the beef is to be equally distributed amongst 70,000 Indians. No one has ever advocated that, and the gentleman might have saved himself the trouble of a great deal of figuring in regard to that matter. I only propose that that appropriation shall be made for the purpose of preventing a large portion of these Indians from starving, and in order to prevent hostilities. There are a great many Indians in California who are engaged in the mines, and others who are engaged in work of a different character. There are many of them who are located in sections of the State where they can procure their usual and accustomed food; but at the same time there are doubtless a considerable number of them who have been brought down from the northern part of the State, and settled upon reservations, who will absolutely suffer for want of food unless some provision is made for them by the Government. I do not propose that the money shall all be expended in beef, but that there shall be blankets and other presents, such as are usually made to Indian tribes who reside within our limits. If these things have not had a salutary influence in checking the hostilities of the Indians in past years, I know not why it is that the Government has been persisting in this policy from its foundation to the present time. In this bill, as well as in all other Indian appropriation bills which have been submitted to the consideration of the Senate, there are appropriations for the purchase of presents to be made to the Indians, and wherefore make the appropriations? What is the object? Is it not to gain the good will, to conciliate, if possible, the Indians? Is it not to prevent, as far as may be, the Indians from committing depredations on the white men? If the $100,000 be expended in that way—a portion in clothing, and a portion in food, as the necessities of the Indians may demand—I apprehend that it will contribute very much, notwithstanding the sneers of my learned friend from Wisconsin, towards preventing the Indians from committing hostilities on the whites.

It is by treating these Indians with kindness and affection—by extending to them the hand of help in the hour of need; by furnishing them with food, when they are suffering starvation; by making little presents, if you choose, to please their fancies, that you oftentimes avoid a war of the most revolting and disastrous character. I supposed that my friend from Wisconsin, who has seen something of Indians on the frontiers, understood this; but so strong was his desire to turn the whole proceeding into ridicule that he could not resist the temptation. It is far easier to ridicule than to reason.

I made no threats. I am not in the habit of indulging in threats. I only spoke of a state of feeling which existed upon the shores of the Pacific. There is a large proportion of foreigners there, and a very large number of those who have but little sympathy with our Government—they feel but little attachment as yet for it. They have known but little of it thus far except as a collector of taxes. Many would be ready and willing at any time to establish an independent government on the shores of the Pacific. There are men (I hope they are not numerous) in that State, and countrymen of yours, Mr. President, who are anxious for an opportunity of making incursions on some of the neighboring provinces—on the Sandwich Islands, or on the State of Sonora. There are men there who desire the establishment of an independent and separate government. It is to prevent these men from finding any excuse for conduct leading to a dismemberment of the Union that I have demanded that justice should be done. I have said, but not in the language of threatening, that the people of California have been neglected—ay, shamefully neglected. It is a very common thing, too, on this floor, whenever any proposition is introduced in regard to California to treat it as a miserable piece of humbuggery. Sir, there are certain Senators here who are in the habit of treating everything that comes from that section of the Union in that way. I was not surprised that my learned friend from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] was opposed to this appropriation. I anticipated that, for I took occasion to say to the Senate not long since, that although that Senator was sometimes liberal in professions, I had not seen any evidence of that liberality in his acts; and it is by acts that men are to be judged.

I trust the day will speedily come when a sense of justice will induce Senators to deal fairly with the people of that remote section of the Republic.

Now, sir, the Senator from Wisconsin would have the Senate and the country believe that I have threatened to dissolve this Union if you do not feed the Indians of California! I have said that that portion of the Union has been neglected in your legislation. I have endeavored to invoke the attention of Congress to the necessity of a spirit of liberality towards those separated from you by oceans and by mountains. I have implored you to do her justice. If you extend to them the same degree of liberality and protection that you extend to the other States of this Confederacy, you will find them the first in the field to maintain, and the last to abandon, the Union. No man desires more than I do to put down that spirit of disunion which pervades, or has pervaded, some portions of the country. No one, I am sure, is more devoted to the preservation of that Union under which we have so long and happily lived. If you establish the principle of justice—if you take care that the people of your frontier settlements receive the same protection that is afforded to other portions of the Union, you will have laid the foundations of your Government upon an immovable basis, and the winds of fanaticism, whether they come from the North or from the South, shall not prevail against it.

Sir, I have not been asking, because California contributes so largely towards replenishing your Treasury, because she has enriched other portions of the Union, that she shall have any extraordinary legislation for her benefit; but I have claimed, and I shall persist in claiming, that she shall have the same degree of protection, the same degree of respect, and of affection extended to her that is extended to others; that although distant, she shall be remembered in your legislation. This I ask—this I have a right to ask. The State of California has been compelled to make an appropriation for the relief of the starving emigrants, who have gone from the older States of this Union to California—men who have been driven out of the older States by penury and want, and who are wending their way to the shores of the Pacific, there to build up for themselves and their families a home in the mighty West. On their toilsome journey many of them have been stricken by disease, and in crossing the plains driven to starvation, and California has been compelled to appropriate her own money to their relief; and now you desire that she shall go a step further and feed these Indians, who are unfortunately placed amongst us, and then fight them at her own expense! She must relieve the starving emigrants; save the Indians from destruction, and repel them when they become hostile! And this I am told is justice!

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will be under the necessity of arresting this discussion, unless it is confined to the subject-matter. The debate has taken entirely too wide a range.

Mr. DAWSON. I trust the demonstration of the Chair was not made to me, for when I addressed the Senate before I confined myself to the subject.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair did not say that the honorable Senator was out of order. He merely adverted to the fact that the debate had taken too wide a range.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, I did not design, when I made objection to this amendment, to have involved this body in a discussion, nor did I think that the privilege I had of making opposition to any amendment which might be offered would have caused me to be charged with a want of liberality. The modesty of the State of California I freely admit. I admit that she is but a babe; and yet has learned to denounce and speak aloud without ever learning to coo. But when the allegation is made that we have acted unjustly towards California, and been guilty of illiberality towards her, I beg leave to say, that I think not. No Territory was ever more regarded by this Government than California, when a Territory; and no State has been better protected. The Army and the Navy, and the appropriations of this Government, have found their way to the shores of the Pacific. California is not yet, I think, more than two years of age, as a State; and when the appropriations which have been made to her shall have been added up, and the legislation that has been extended to her by Congress accounted for—when the unanimity with which the feeling has prevailed here to gratify and to satisfy California shall have been well understood, I think there will be no charge against this Government of a want of protection to the Pacific coast, and especially to California.

Now, Mr. President, can it ever be charged upon us that we have given offense to California even to suggest upon this floor a dissolution of the Union? Why, when she reflects upon the protection she has received, and the revenue she has taken from this country, she ought never to suggest the idea of a dissolution of the Union. She might have spoken of California retiring from the Union, but she can never dissolve it. But I know that the honorable Senator from California has no feeling of that kind, and did not intend to refer to it. I waive, however, all these things, and come to the point, on account of the admonition of the Chair to gentlemen to confine themselves to the subject.

When I made the first objection to this proposition, it arose out of this fact. Do not the good people of California understand what a treaty is, and when it becomes a treaty of this Government? Did not the commissioners on the part of the United States, who negotiated the treaties with Indians in California, tell them that they were not obligatory until constitutionally confirmed by this Government? Our people understood, and the savages of the State of California were undoubtedly made to understand, that the treaties created no obligation until they were ratified. They have not been ratified, and therefore no obligation exists.

But upon what ground is this appropriation asked? Upon the ground that the General Government, by its treaty-making power, has involved these unfortunate portions of creation—these various Indian tribes in California—in a wretched and unhappy condition. Now, let us examine the matter, and see whether that allegation be true, and whether our humanity and kindness should be called into requisition on this occasion. By the treaties negotiated, as I understand my friend from California, the Indians were to be subsisted for two years, (1851 and 1852,) and they were to be subsisted by being supplied with a certain quantity of beef. Is there a particle of testimony before the Senate that the supply of beef has not been delivered? Is there any complaint through the Indian agencies, or from the Indians, to the Government, as to that point. But in violation of the treaties—in violation of the knowledge which the commissioners and the people of California, and the Indians themselves, had of the obligations of the treaties, they have gone on to involve this country in a charge or claim against it on the part of certain contractors in the State of California to obtain $800,000 or $1,000,000 for food supplied, as is alleged, to keep these Indians from starvation. Claims to the amount of $800,000 for that object have already been presented. That amount has been expended in part execution of the treaties. Now, I ask, can the Constitution and the laws be violated in order to attempt the execution of a treaty before that treaty is ratified by this Government? And shall the confirming or ratifying power of the Government sanction the idea that the treaty-making power, through the commissioners of the Government, with savage tribes, shall incur obligations, and undertake, contrary to our constitutional rights, to execute the treaty, and we be called upon and be charged with illiberality because we do not execute it?

If gentlemen reflect for a moment, they will see that it is proposed that we shall tread upon the Constitution, and violate the law, under the apprehension that the people of the Pacific coast of this country may become dissatisfied with our adherence to the Constitution and the law, and may take it into their heads to go off. What is it that keeps the people of this country together? What is the binding obligation? What is the chain that unites us, but the Constitution of the country? And a faithful execution of that Constitution can alone guaranty to us perpetuity and unity. Yet we are called upon here to violate it, and step out of the line of our duty, for the gratification of those who hold up an apprehension to us that they will desert it.

I do not desire to say anything which may stir up any angry feelings, or insinuate anything unkind, or reflect upon any individual whatever; but, sir, I trust that my course of liberality, my course of conduct, my adherence, so far as I understand it, to the Constitution of the country, and the unity of this Government, is well understood and appreciated. No act of mine will ever blot one star, or even dim the luster of one star, forming the galaxy of the great and glorious constellation composing the Union.

What is the principle asked for by this amendment? Let me suggest that these treaties were made at the close of the year 1850, or the beginning of the year 1851. These treaties, it is said—I do not say it—have been rejected by the Senate. If they have been rejected by the Senate, they are as if they never existed. But it is said that there was an obligation in these treaties, by which the Indians were to be subsisted for two years. Two years from when? Two years from and after the ratification of the treaties. But in anticipation of those two years, they commenced it from the time of the signature of the treaties. These treaties have been carried into effect for nearly one year and eight months, and have been executed by the delivery of the food; and now we are called upon to do—what? First, we are asked to pay the gentlemen who furnished this beef under contract with the commissioners in violation of the obligations of the treaties—in violation of their duty, and with a perfect comprehension of the risks they were running. They have called upon us to pay $800,000 for the food furnished to the Indians. Can the Indians grumble at that? They have been fed for over a year, and there is evidence of it. But my friend says that these Indians are still lingering and tarrying; that they have come from the northern region, and are now about to starve. Have they been there ever since the treaties were entered into? Certainly not. The Senator says that these Indians have come from the mountains and gone into the valleys. Who brought them from the mountains to the valleys?

Mr. WELLER. Your officers.

Mr. DAWSON. The officers of the Government? Where is the evidence of that fact, officially through any Department or any Indian agency—in any form or shape whatever? Nowhere. Where is the evidence that the Indians have left the mountains, and are in the valleys in a starving condition? It has been said that their game has been run off and destroyed. By whom? By the whites. Why, sir, California comprises about 200,000 square miles. It is larger than all the New England and Middle States together, with a population of not more than 250,000. Have they destroyed all the game? How much can they occupy? Separate them as wide as you please, how many square miles can they occupy? Who, then, has destroyed the game? The men who were toiling in the mines? Not they, because they were engaged in toil, and would be glad to purchase from the wandering Indians the game that they might destroy. The game of the Indians would be a benefit to these men who labor, instead of being an injury to them.

What ground is there, then, for the suggestion that these people are to be driven into a state of warfare from starvation? What act of ours has led to this starvation? If I saw that it was to result from any act of ours, I would not even be restrained by my judgment, but I would reach out at once to save them from starvation—for the redemption of men even beyond our shores.

Now, where are these Indians? Where shall we hunt them? They are in the very country where they have been since we obtained California. Have they changed from the mountains to the valleys for agricultural purposes? No, sir. If they have changed from the mountains to the valleys, can they not return to the mountains in the pursuit of game? Surely they can, and certainly they have.

There are two classes of Indians in that country: some who subsist upon agricultural productions—the Pueblo Indians; and then there are the wild wandering Indians who live by the chase, and upon roots which grow spontaneously. Have they changed from the northern portion of the State to the valleys? Why, the treaties never contemplated putting the wild Indians in among the Pueblos, and making them live in towns. The Pueblos live in towns and villages, and subsist themselves by their flocks, or the products of the little gardens which they cultivate. Have they abandoned their possessions? I think not, sir. They did not live in the mountains. They were not supported by the chase; but they live upon the productions of their own strength, and of their own hands. Have they been changed? They are too intelligent, and the white people of California are too wise and kind and beneficent, to induce them to make a change before the treaties were ratified.

Then, if a change has taken place, there is no evidence of it here. Here permit me to say to my friend from California, that if I could save the lives of any portion of his fellow-citizens by this appropriation, from the Indian tomahawk, or the scalping-knife, I would vote $100,000 without a moment's hesitation. But I have no impression upon my mind that this appropriation is intended to relieve us from any such impending or anticipated difficulty. I say with the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, that if you hold out to these people the inducement that you are going to interpose the power of this Government to save them from what you call starvation by feeding them, your liberality must be very expensive, and it will induce the Indians to become indolent. It seems to be with them as with their white neighbors—grant ninety-nine favors, and refuse them the hundredth, and it will create bad feeling. Just so with the wild Indians. If you feed them for one week, and fail to feed them at the beginning of the next week, you will incur their malice and vengeance.

The proper course to pursue is this: Let us ask ourselves, has the Government of the United States, by any act of her own, or even through her Indian commissioners, involved herself in such a position as to call upon us to interfere in this affair? No, sir. Then, what are we bound to do under the treaties? My friend from California says appropriate $100,000 first to supply food. Why the $100,000 could not get there before the two years mentioned in the treaty would expire, and the Indians must subsist themselves till that time.

When last up, my friend made a suggestion which would have had a controlling influence with me, if it came here in a proper way; and that is, that it has been a practice of this Government to furnish Indians with presents; to show them acts of kindness, acts of liberality; to give them this, that, or the other thing—blankets, guns, and all facilities necessary to their comfort, and to procure subsistence for them. That is all right. But is that the ground upon which these $100,000 are asked? This subject belongs to the Indian Department and to the President; and whenever an appropriation is made to make presents, it is coupled with power to treat, and the instructions to treat are executed through commissioners. If this would gain the kindness and friendship of the Indians, I would make the appropriation in a moment. But let it come up as an appropriation for the specific purpose, and let it not be covered up in this way, upon the idea that it is to prevent an Indian war, and protect California from Indian depredations.

I trust my friend from California, notwithstanding his deep conviction of my want of liberality towards California, will not for a moment indulge the idea that any act here, which I could do, to prevent depredations there, would not be done. Surely, I would do it; and his suggestion to the contrary creates no excitement in my heart. But it leads me to appreciate the value of that old rule, that no man should be permitted to be a judge in his own case. For human nature is human nature, and it is rare to divest ourselves of the influence of circumstances around us.

For what are these $100,000 to be appropriated? To feed the Indians? Are they starving? We have no evidence of it here; and if they are starving, an important question arises as to the power of this Government, and the disposition of this Government, to interfere to save starving people who will not labor for themselves. If the Indians cannot live in California, with 200,000 square miles, and a population of less than 300,000 souls, all told, where in the name of Heaven can they live?

It is said, however, that the white man is taking possession of the Indian hunting and trading ground. Why, that cannot be so to any great extent, as my friend from California must discover, if he reflects upon the subject, because the white man is found toiling in the mines, frequently beneath the surface of the earth, and is never in the way of him who gains a livelihood either by hunting, or fishing, or shooting, or laboring in the fields. The miner wants the productions of the hunter, the fishing-rod, and the agriculturist, and he would not interfere with the Indian.

I have looked at this matter in every light in which it seems to me that it can be presented, and I cannot see why we should for one moment undertake the adoption of this dangerous precedent. Such was my diffidence when I made the original objection to this proposition, that I did not mean to go into an argument. I merely threw out the suggestion, that if we were to adopt a plan to support the Indians, and let it be known to the various tribes throughout the country, indolence would be the consequence; and we would see tribes from one section of this country to the other, telling the Congress of the United States that they were perishing, when they might have lands, hunting-grounds, and everything. And why? Because it is the nature of the more intelligent races of men, and surely of the most ignorant, to depend upon the labor of others, or to depend upon the spontaneous productions of the earth, whenever they can get a living in one way or the other. And my word for it, as long as these resources last, they will never labor. Our object should be to place these people in a condition by which they may learn the benefits of progress—by which they may be induced to cultivate the soil, and learn the advantages to be derived from domestic life. We must pursue that course; but this is the very backward track of that progress when we undertake to feed the Indians, and to tell them, and to proclaim throughout the country, "Come into our farms—come into our granary—we will supply you with everything necessary, and you may live without work."

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I approved of the proposition first made by the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] to amend the amendment now before the Senate, and I regret that he has seen fit to accept any modification of it whatever. It did appear to me, that the principles on which he founded his application, were based on such grounds as we may well suppose would govern the understanding and the heart of a distinguished American Senator or an American statesman.

Sir, I have not been much surprised at the course which the debate on this proposition has taken. Having heard the debates which have been going on in regard to these Indian appropriations, from the first, I was prepared for opposition to any donation to them. But I have been astonished, by the enunciation of some of the principles on which the judgment of Senators, relative to the course best to be pursued as to the Indians, has been predicated. It has been stated here that this Government is under no obligations, no responsibility, to the Indians; that my friend—the friend of the California Indians—seeks to obtain from this Government a donation for them, which the Government is under no sort of obligation to give. Ay, sir, the little which, by the great exertions of their friends, has been extorted from you, has been only yielded with growls and threats that you were under no obligations to grant it. I dissent from all the reasonings founded upon the proposition as amended by the Senator from Virginia. Sir, I go for that proposition which acknowledges in their length and breadth our obligations as American citizens to repair, as far as we may, the wrongs of an injured people. You have obligations which it is not quite so easy to get rid of, either in your national or in your individual character, as Senators or as Christians. Sir, let me tell you that you have responsibilities with regard to the Indians that it would be well for you if all the money in your Treasury could satisfy. Ay, sir, we might well thank God if money could enable us to appease the Great Spirit of retributive justice. The principle contained in the amendment, which negatively pledges us to do no more, is one which I repudiate from the bottom of my soul. Do gentlemen ask if we design by this amendment to establish a principle that shall govern this country in all time to come? I answer, and say Yes! I go further, and say, that so long as there is a dollar in your Treasury, half of it, if necessary, should go to relieve the distress of the aborigines of the country.

Mr. President, while I stand here in this Capitol and remember that it has been erected upon the soil, the blood, and the bones of the Indians, and on the ashes of their wigwams, am I to be told, here in this Senate, that the laws of the land—of this Christian land—will not permit me to vote money from the public Treasury to ease their distress and relieve the misery of that unfortunate race? Sir, under no obligations to take care of the California Indians! What do Senators mean? You are under most indissoluble bonds to take care of them. Justice—justice—inexorable justice demands it. It is not for me to express in words your obligations. They may be seen in bloody tracks over the mountains and across the plains—they are engraved on every Christian heart. Sir, it may do well, in the general course of legislation, for those who have a clean bill of health, to make such prescriptions for the body politic as may be found in the strict construction of the Constitution. But, sir, when we come here, in this temple of Liberty, our hands reeking with the blood of the savage, does it become us to prate about law, constitutional or divine in defense of violent aggression? No, no; we have nothing to do but to relieve, fully and substantially relieve, the misfortunes we have been the means (innocent, if you please) of creating, and feel consoled if in that way we can alleviate the distresses we have inflicted.

But, sir, with regard to the proposition now immediately before the Senate, I will say that, if I understand the object of the Senator from California, it is to place at the disposal of the President of the United States the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of preventing starvation among a certain portion of the Indians in that State. Now, sir, considering the responsibility of that gentleman as a Senator from California, and that this money is to be disbursed by the President, I am ready to give my vote for the appropriation of $100,000, or any other reasonable sum, for such a purpose. But we are told that this donation of $100,000 to-day, will establish a precedent which will bind this Government ever after to do the same thing. That is just exactly the thing I desire to do—the principle which I desire to establish. It is exactly the principle which I think we should proclaim to the world. Sir, wherever we can, with money, save the life of an Indian, or add to his well-being, we ought to do it. But, after all, the difficulty is not, as it seems to me, so much in any difference of opinion as to what is due the Indians, as how it is to be paid. The real difficulty has not yet been pointed out in regard to the Indians. The fault is not with the Indians, but in the Indian agents; and, sir, if money has been improperly expended, it is the fault of the Government officers or agents, and they should be held accountable, and not let the Indians suffer in consequence of their delinquencies. Will you, then, make the Indian suffer because your Government do not employ agents who are sufficiently just, wise, and honest, properly to expend the money which is appropriated? Certainly not; you cannot do that. You will not commit so great a wrong!

Mr. President, the simple question is, whether, under all the circumstances of this case, the Indians are entitled to our protection; and whether, if you cannot make him work, or keep the peace without, you are bound to protect and feed him? Sir, having taken his lands from him, how can you complain if he will not work and feed himself? Having taken all that you saw fit to take, you ease your conscience for taking what he did not want to give, by offering him some thousands of acres of land which he does not wish to receive. Sir, no one can appreciate the sufferings and sacrifices of the Indians, but those who, like myself and the Senators from California, have witnessed them in joy and in sorrow; who, like us, have seen them in their prosperity, in their freedom, and in the free enjoyment of all their possessions, given to them by God; have seen them in the haughty independence of their nature—and in their servile attitude of petitioners, bowing the knee to their white, despotic, and cruel masters.

Sir, if chance, or accident, or any other thing, had taken you across the Rocky Mountains some few years since, you would have passed through tribes of men—Indians you may call them—aborigines they are of this country; proud, hospitable, high-minded, noble, gallant men; men as free as I was—ay, sir, freer. The Snakes and Sioux were as free as the air they breathed, and walked with as proud and mighty a step as any of God's created beings. Let Senators not suppose that I am drawing on my fancy for this picture of the Sioux and the Snake Indians. They were at that time as gallant, as noble, as generous, and as hospitable men as any who live, or I know nothing of human life or character. I go further: they were in the full possession and unannoyed enjoyment of their hunting grounds, in the enjoyment of peace, tranquillity, and happiness, under the direction of their own independent and brave chiefs. From St. Joseph, in Missouri, to the Pacific, there was one great community of nature's children, happy and content. But, alas, what is their condition now? Sad, sad! Your armies of emigrants have traversed annually their territory, and drove away their game, and eaten up their pastures, until death and starvation stares them in the face. They have lost their game, and they are sorrowful; they have lost their country, and they are indignant and revengeful. I persuaded them to peace; they agreed, but implored that their great father—a father, indeed! as he had destroyed their hunting grounds, he would, at least, give them lands fit for agriculture, and implements of husbandry, and persons to instruct them in the art of raising bread. But what has the father done?

Sir, these people must all leave their usual hunting grounds, and who is to care for them? After these armies of men have crossed the mountains, and arrived in California, their first business seems to be, to drive off or kill the Indians. There is not a brute that walks on the face of the earth that has been so much contemned and despised and cruelly treated as have been these Indians from the time of the first invasion up to the present. These Indians in California are spread over the whole mountainous part of that State. When we took possession, we found them a kind and docile, but not a warlike people, comparatively contented and happy, and friends. We have driven them from their homes; have despoiled them of their property, and drove them from the mines. What wonder that they are hostile? From this very land of theirs we have taken millions on millions of gold, and now, when we are asked to appropriate $100,000 to save them from starving, the Constitution of the United States is invoked to prevent it. Yes, sir, that sacred instrument is invoked, and thrust between us and our consciences and our dearest sensibilities. It was invoked yesterday to save the white man, and to-day it is invoked to destroy the Indian. If the Constitution of the United States forbids me from aiding, by an appropriation of money, to save the California Indians from starvation—if it should step, with blasphemous intrusion, between me and those sacred feelings of our nature which God and nature's God has planted in the breast of poor humanity—then I say that my friends will know where to find me in regard to the construction of that instrument.

But, sir, the Constitution of my country tells me no such thing. Its whole spirit breathes a spirit of philanthropy and love to men everywhere. It is universal love, as well as universal freedom, which is taught by the Constitution of the United States. Sir, so far from considering this as a donation—so far from considering this proposition, which asks you to give but $100,000, as an extravagant donation, I hold that you are bound by all your responsibilities as men and as Christians, by all your responsibilities as Senators and statesmen, to protect them, cost what it may.

That there may be no misapprehension about this amendment, I will repeat what I take to be its object—its essence. It is to save the Indians in California from starvation. We are told that there are seventy thousand Indians in a starving condition in California. I believe it; and these are the Indians of whom I have endeavored to draw a feeble picture, and to whom I feel that we are so much indebted, and for whom we cannot do too much. But it is said that this bill has not come up in a proper shape; that if we pass this appropriation we shall be setting a precedent hereafter to be followed, and therefore that it ought not to be passed. We are further informed that even if it were a thing proper to be done, that $100,000 would not be enough to answer the purpose, and therefore it should not pass. Some gentlemen would not have it done because it is not entirely in accordance with their parliamentary notions and their technical ideas; others say that it is opposed to their views of proper economy in the administration of this Government. Sir, while we are endeavoring to settle those differences of opinion, let me again remind Senators that the Indians are starving.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I will also say that you have destroyed the homes of these people, devastated their villages; you have taken away their occupation, and you have extracted millions upon millions of gold from their mines; and the least you can do is to give them this $100,000; ay, sir, and $500,000 more, if necessary to preserve peaceful relations with them, or to keep them from starvation.

Mr. BUTLER. This amendment has brought to the consideration of the Senate many topics of great importance, as they affect the government of this whole country, and the government of California towards the Indians.

If the Senator from New Jersey supposes that I insist upon the parliamentary usages of this country, because they conflict with his sympathies for the savage race, he is mistaken. So far from doing so, I believe that, to treat the Indians properly, we ought to have an enlightened system for their protection against the robber. I will go as far as that honorable gentleman, or any other Senator, to provide land for the aborigines; for I never imbibed any sentiments of hostility towards them—sentiments which have become too general, owing to the savage warfare on the frontiers. I have had every inducement to indulge the feeling which has been excited by the eloquent remarks of the Senator; but this mode of temporizing with these poor creatures is not the proper way of meeting the difficulty, or relieving their sufferings. It is the worst step that could be devised; it is the way to promote that degree of degeneracy which wastes them away; and no man less commends himself to my mind than a degenerate savage. If you offer to feed him, the moment you do so you hold out a lure to come back to your precincts, and to abandon his own. In my judgment, it is the worst form in which you could propose to bestow a gift.

I would say to the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER,] in connection with his homestead projects, that I should be glad to see a large proportion of those public lands appropriated to the Indians out of the domain which he would partition out to foreigners who are invited here to drive them off. That is my view of the case.

I think that the Executive Department of this Government is bound by the highest obligations to send to Congress, for our legislation, some enlightened system for the protection and support of these poor beings. What is their fate? Heretofore they could take counsel with hope, and were not doomed to bitter despair. We could drive them, and drive them, from the east to the west, and in driving them from us there were still broad lands on which they could rest with some degree of hope. Their fate is identified in some degree with that of the buffalo. We have driven them off, and they have driven off the buffalo. What is their condition now? The last ray of hope is extinguished. They must look to despair in future. Yes, they must starve, and starve by the white man's injustice. What is their position at this time? We have commenced our settlements on the Pacific; where will you now drive them? Will you set apart lands for their own use? Where are the lands? And if we had them, how long would the Indian's rights be respected by the white man? If the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] will bring forward a plan by which land can be appropriated for the use of these wretched people, and which will set guards against the robber, I will go with him; but this temporizing, I repeat, is delusive.

If it were put to me as an abstract proposition, that these Indians, who have been grossly deceived, were likely to starve; if it were put to me in that shape, and I had bread in my hand, I would give it to them freely, and should make use of the Government funds for the same humane purpose; there is nothing in the Constitution which would forbid it.

I believe there is more wisdom in the instincts of a warm heart than in the devices of a crafty head. I believe there is more wisdom in instinct than in mere abstract reasonings; and, therefore, I fully concur in all the honorable and just sentiments of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON;] but before I indulge the dictates of that instinct, I must have some surety that they will not be abused. I know that it is from the instinct of that gentleman's heart that he takes counsel, but it must not be abused. What benefit will it confer on the objects of his solicitude if this money is appropriated only to be wasted, like the corn which the herdsman carries to the hogs, but which he scatters abroad on the ground before reaching them? That would be the effect of our donation. I have no confidence whatever that this sum of $100,000 would be employed for the benefit of the Indians. None at all. If this proposition is stated, the Indians will starve except this appropriation is made, then I say that the sum is insufficient, inadequate, for the end proposed. This amendment does not cover the ground taken by its advocates. The question is not treated in the manner it deserves by the proposal now made. It should have come here with a higher sanction; it should have proceeded from the Executive Department of the Government, after full investigation by the proper Department. If I conceived, however, that it was necessary, I would vote for it as it is; but as I believe it to be delusive in its nature, I cannot.

Mr. WALKER. One word in reply to the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina in reference to my homestead policy. I will battle that with him as long as he pleases.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not mean to battle it; but I would give more to the Indian than I would to the people to whom you would give it.

Mr. WALKER. I will not be drawn from my object by any side-bar remarks. The Senator from South Carolina says that he is in favor of a large area for the Indians, while he would curtail that which I would set apart for the foreigner. The first inference that might be drawn from that remark by those who did not know what I have been doing in the Senate would be, that I had set myself up as the peculiar champion of foreigners, and that I was in favor of voting a part of the public domain to their use. This, Mr. President, would be an unjust inference, and the Senator from South Carolina knows it as well as any Senator. He certainly could not have intended to use language from which such an inference could be drawn. However that may be, he has certainly used such language. I am as willing as he is to treat the Indian as well as I would treat the white man; although from the Senator's remarks he has intimated that he did not think so.

Mr. BUTLER. I certainly would not drive the Indian off with the view of letting any one else enjoy their lands.

Mr. WALKER. I have not proposed to drive the Indian off to allow anybody to come and take his place; but I have contended that in those States where the Indian title was already extinguished, the Government should no longer hold lands at $1 25 per acre, with a view of making a profit upon them, when they can make a much larger profit by making free grants. Have I ever proposed to go into the Indian territory, and drive away the Indians for the purpose of making settlements for the white man? Never.

I am glad that the Senator from South Carolina is so far a homestead man, that he is willing to provide a permanent home for the Indian. I am willing, this day, if a plan can be devised to carry it into effect, to vote to set apart a Territory to which the Indians may freely go—to which, if necessary, they could be compelled to go; and I am willing to provide further, that it may be made a capital offense if a white man should trespass upon them. Is the Senator from South Carolina willing to go as far as that? If he is, he is as good a homestead man as I could wish. But I am not willing to roll that Indian population back upon the States in which their title has been extinguished, and permit them to drive off the white man. And while I would not do this, I would not act the dog in the manger—without meaning any offense—and permit a white man to do what I would not permit an Indian to do.

I trust that Senator will adhere to his homestead notions in regard to the Indians; and I have some hopes of his coming over to the notion of the homestead in favor of the white man; that his noble generosity will prompt him to treat the white man as well as he would treat the Indian.

So far as the foreign population are concerned, to which the Senator has referred, I would remark that they are coming here, and we cannot prevent them. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina if he would prevent them if he could? Would he step back to the alien and sedition laws, and prevent these people from coming here? No; I think not. For what do they come here? For self-subsistence, and to contribute their mite to the support of the Government, and not for the purpose of doing harm, or for any other purpose, in consequence of which they may merit the stigma of being "foreigners." I am willing that they should come here; and when they do come, and have become American citizens, I am willing to do by them as I would by any other American citizens. As to the general policy of the homestead law, I am for giving the public lands to the people, so that they may become men of substance, and may improve the country, and thus contribute, in a much more effectual way, to the support of the Government than can be done by holding the public lands at $1 25 per acre.

Mr. HUNTER. I fear we are wandering from the discussion of the subject which is before the Senate. I am anxious to get through with this bill to-day. To-morrow is set apart for another topic. If we can get through with this bill to-day, those who have private bills to urge can have an opportunity to do so on Friday. I hope we may finish this bill to-day.

Mr. WELLER. I am very anxious to have the action of the Senate upon the proposition which I have submitted. Under other circumstances, as a matter of course, I should feel under some obligation, and probably would take great pleasure in responding to the terrible lecture which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] has given me. I had no idea, when I charged that Senator with a want of liberality towards California, that I should have provoked such a torrent of sarcasm and declamation as he has poured out upon my head and in the presence of the Senate. I did not hear distinctly his opening remarks—which were doubtless intended to be sarcastic—but I think he spoke of my modesty in connection with the proposition before us. I do not think that either that Senator or myself should boast about possessing a great deal of modesty. Neither of us has made much reputation in that way, and perhaps never will. The charge has sometimes been made against me; but I never heard the slightest imputation of that sort made against him. I don't think it ever will be. [Laughter.]

If the Senate were not already fully aware of the fact, I would undertake to show that the Senator from Georgia has been speaking about matters of which he is entirely ignorant. And here I may remark, that other things being equal, a man generally speaks better upon a subject about which he knows something! I could demonstrate, if it were necessary, to the Senate, that whenever that Senator undertakes to speak about the Indians in California, their wants, or locations, or the habits and customs of the "Pueblo Indians," he is most grossly ignorant of that with which I supposed every man in the country was familiar. He demands, in a stentorian voice, a voice exhibiting extraordinary lungs, where is the evidence that the Indians have been brought down from the mountains and have been collected in the valleys? I answer, that the evidence is to be found in the eighteen treaties rejected by the Senate; it is to be found in the correspondence of the Indian commissioners which accompanied these treaties. It is to be found in the public documents which have been laid before us. They inform you that it was their policy to bring the Indians down from the mountains to the valleys, where they would be surrounded by white inhabitants, and where they could not, if they committed depredations, escape to the mountains.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator must be aware that there are certain things which take place in Executive session, which are not to be referred to in open session. With regard to these treaties, the Chair is not aware that the injunction of secrecy has been removed.

Mr. WELLER. In answer to the suggestion of the President, I would reply, that I do not claim to be very familiar with the rules of the Senate. A few days ago, in open session, that subject was referred to, and I then asked a Senator of experience, whether it was proper to speak of these treaties after they had been rejected by the Senate; and I was informed, that after their rejection, there was no impropriety in referring to them.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will inform the Senator of the extent to which he may be allowed to speak in such a case. He can speak of the treaties having been made and rejected; but he cannot go into the proceedings upon them, unless the injunction of secrecy has been removed.

Mr. WELLER. I supposed that there certainly could not be any great impropriety in speaking of a matter with which everybody is acquainted. I have not, nor do I intend to go beyond the rule laid down by the President. These Indians were brought down from the mountains; and the whole correspondence of the Indian commissioners show that their object was to bring them from their fastnesses, in order that they might be surrounded by white men. That fact is well known, for it is most distinctly set forth in the correspondence. They did bring them down from the mountains. The Senator from Georgia asks why they do not go back to the mountains, if they cannot be secured in their present position? I told the Senator that these mountains are now occupied by miners who were scattered in the mountains, and that these Indians would not be permitted to roam amongst them. He says the miners are not there. Now, sir, the boldness of the Senator may have staggered some gentlemen. This assertion has been made after I have informed the Senate that their old homes are now occupied by our citizens—that they cannot return to their old hunting-grounds and obtain the food necessary to sustain animal life. In other words, that the white man, who never recedes from a position which he has assumed, is now where their rude habitations once stood.

You have the opinion of the Senator upon a subject of which he knows nothing, and you have my opinion of the same thing, of which I ought to know something, having traveled over the whole of that section of the State in which the Indians are found. I should suppose the Senate could rely with more confidence upon information given by a Senator who knows something about the facts, than upon the statements of wild declamation of one who knows nothing about them. Some men have a passion for talking vociferously about questions of which they know nothing.

There are other points in the singular speech of the Senator from Georgia to which I would refer if I had time; but I have no disposition, as I said before, to prolong the discussion. It is with great reluctance I trespass upon this body at any time. I am sure Senators now understand the grounds upon which my proposition is based, and I cannot doubt their disposition to decide this question fairly and justly. I can only regret that a sense of duty to my constituents required that I should occupy so much of the valuable time of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is with a great deal of reluctance that I would consume one moment of the precious time of the Senate. I regard the dispatch of business as important to the general interests of the country, as well as to the particular condition of the legislative business. I have therefore abstained, throughout the session, from occupying any portion of the precious time of this body; but I think that a principle is here invoked, to some extent, in consequence of which it will not be amiss for me to advert to some facts which have transpired, and to anticipate some of the probable consequences of this amendment. If it is necessary that the Indians should be supplied with provisions, there is no doubt that they have been reduced to that necessity by the conduct of this Government, or its officers. They are removed from their accustomed means of subsistence; they are taken away from their hunting grounds. They had another resource; they had the mines in the mountains from which they could supply their necessities; but they are withdrawn from these fastnesses of the mountains, and are placed by the action of this Government in a situation which renders it necessary that we should give them subsistence. That is the point which is to determine the justice and propriety of the action of this body as I suppose.

The question for this body to consider is, whether that which we design to appropriate for a generous and beneficent purpose, will be applied to the objects which we contemplate. It does not answer the question to say, that agents of the Government have heretofore applied money which has been placed in their hands in a manner contrary to the instructions which they have received. The Government has officers, commissioners, men of intelligence and probity, who can be intrusted with this money, and who will apply it to the purposes for which it is intended by the Senate. The sum of $100,000 is a very small one. Compare that with the consequences which will probably result to the Treasury, if it is not bestowed, and see what will be the amount saved by an economical discretion in its application now. You appropriate $100,000 for these Indians, and they will remain at peace. They are now withdrawn from the mines, and the condition of rivalry in which they stood, in relation to those who are now engaged in mining, has ceased. They are doing nothing to provoke the animosity of those men whose interests conflicted with theirs heretofore; and it is in conformity with what we know of the human character and of human feelings, to suppose that the miners will now sympathize with these poor Indians, and will desire to see that the means given by the Government for their support are not misapplied, but are employed in a way which will alleviate the necessities of the Indians. The condition of the Indians, then, will be such as to excite the humane feelings and the sympathy of a portion of the people of California, who will exercise a vigilance with regard to the manner in which the bounty of the Government is applied, and thus exert an influence which will be highly beneficial to the Indians.

Sir, I have had some experience with the Indians. It is no egotism in me to say that I, who have spent all my life upon the frontiers, am acquainted with their dispositions and their character—that I know the appliances necessary to peace, and that I know the provocations to war. I have seen Indian wars grow up; I have seen peace negotiated and disregarded; I have seen outrages committed by whites; and I have seen the Indian, in justification of himself, and in defense of his home, his family, and his all, repel the aggression of the white man. But it was always said that it was the Indian who was the aggressor; he had no telegraphs, no newspapers; he had no advocates among the whites; none to vindicate him. The white man had the influence; the Indian had possession of the land. The white man wanted the land; the Indian must relinquish, and give it up; and was always in the wrong whenever his rights were trespassed upon. So it will be.

Look at our condition upon the Texan frontier. I have despaired of receiving, and have forborne asking anything for Texas; but I entertain no doubt that the gallantry and the chivalry of the Texans will protect their own frontier. I cannot look to this Government or to this Hall for aid. It is our right, when we are infringed upon, to vindicate our own soil; and if your banner is torn, and your heroic Marcy is slaughtered, and his banner burned by the savage, look to it yourselves. It is not the banner of Texas; her star shall never fall when it is borne by the hands of her own sons to the field, and no savage shall strike it down. Our Governor has taken a course to protect our frontier against savage aggression.

What has led to this dire catastrophe? Why, sir, the perfidy of the Government and its officers—nothing else in the world. This is no fling at the Administration. It goes beyond all that. Texas, previous to the annexation, for more than eighteen months, had enjoyed perfect peace. No horses had been stolen; no slaughtered citizens were found in their houses; no scalps had been exhibited on Indian poles, around which to dance the war-dance. No conflagrations on the frontiers announced the savage depredations at midnight. We were at peace. After the annexation of Texas, you sent your commissioners there. The Indians confided in the integrity of Texas, because every promise had been maintained, and every pledge fully redeemed. The Indians would not even negotiate with the officers sent by President Polk. Through an influence in Texas they met, they consulted, they treated. At the head of that commission was the gallant and illustrious Butler, who so nobly fell leading on his legions at Cherubusco. He was at the head of the commission, but through indisposition he was rendered unable to attend to the duties of his mission, being prostrated in his tent by chronic disease. Another was associated with him, who cared not for the honor of his colleague, nor for justice to the Indians, nor for the mission on which he was delegated. He took upon himself, while his colleague was prostrated, to obtain a secret council with the Indians. The talk was held on a show of authority, which he took from Texas, which gave him credit with the Indians. He took this insignia, and exhibited it to them, and they heard him. His promise to them was that they should receive an annuity of $14,000. They were to keep perpetual peace—no horses were to be stolen, no lives to be taken, no habitations to be burned. The Indians, in perfect good faith, and in entire confidence from the terms which were held out, and the high character of their neighbors, the Texans, came in, and signed their names to a sheet of blank paper. The commissioner returned—his colleague, the gallant Butler, being at the time prostrated and detained by sickness—and attached these signatures to a treaty, which he prepared to suit his own purposes and designs, excluding the annuity entirely, and merely allowing a single appropriation of $14,000.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is very unwilling to interrupt the Senator, but must remind him that the proposition now before the Senate relates wholly to the Indians in California.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am aware of it, but I am anxious to show, if possible, that the appropriation of this $100,000 may avert a war, which would possibly cost as many millions as the Muscogee war, or the war in Florida. It is with that view that I am now speaking.

The Indians came at the appointed time to the place where they were to receive their annuity; the annuity was not paid them; enraged, they were about to plunder the frontier; a Senator from Texas received the intelligence while on his way to this place; and he wrote instantly to induce them to stay their hands for five days; the Indians granted the truce, otherwise the trading-house would have been rifled and the building burned. The express returned in time with instructions to pay them $5,000, and if that were not sufficient they were to receive $10,000. It was done, and war was averted for twelve months; the peace was prolonged for two years by means of promises; and thus a war was prevented which might have drenched the frontier in blood.

Then, sir, on the evidence of the vouchers of the merchants, Congress supplied them with $10,000, so that we yet justly owe to the Camanches $4,000. This is a fact. To what, then, has it led? No more annuities were given. A new Administration commenced. The agent who had been employed in Texas, and who was continued under the administration of Mr. Polk, remained there. On the advent of the new Administration he was removed, and men incompetent, both physically and mentally, were placed in charge of the Indians. The consequence was, that the Indians had not a friend to travel with them; one who had been associated with them in their hunts, and who had explored the route from Fredericksburg to El Paso, where the engineers had failed to establish a particular route for carrying conveniences of every kind. That individual was removed, and others were put in his place who were soon prostrated by sickness and disease. And what was the consequence? To this condition of things war ensued; and what did it cost us? For eight years you may calculate the expense of our military establishment in Mexico at not less than six millions a year; making a total of forty-eight millions. What would it have cost if you had paid this annuity to the Indians? It would have cost you $84,000. Compare $84,000 with forty-eight millions, and you will have an opportunity of judging what the advantage would have been to have given that annuity to the Camanches, so long as they expected it to be given, periodically. Had this been done, you would not have seen a hostile, act because it was their interest to maintain peace, and they being the most powerful tribe, would have constrained other tribes subordinate to them to keep peace also.

But they have been deceived; they have been deluded by promises; they have been defrauded by agents, and have been neglected by the Government itself. Now, go and ask Marcy's command; ask their friends what would reimburse them for their loss. Sir, until we do justice to the Indians—until we are truthful and righteous in our legislation in regard to them, we can expect nothing but that Heaven will cause retributive justice to fall, if not upon the offenders, upon the nation that spoils the poor Indians. It is time for the nation to arise as one man and vindicate the national honor and keep the escutcheon clean, and maintain our faith with the Indians. Be truthful, be just, and you will have them as friends. They will then neither disgrace your country nor dishonor your flag, but they will defend it. But they have now assimilated us with the Mexicans, whose perfidy, from the time of Cortez, has been traditional with the Indians, and has been revived through successive ages. We have to assume that these poor Indians have been deluded by the officers of the Government, who may not have been proved to be corrupt. Let not the sin lie at our door any longer that they are starving and famishing by the connivance of this Government or its officers; but provide the means, and trust to Heaven, if not to the officers, for their application to the good design.

Mr. WELLER. In order to conform to the opinion of some gentlemen for whom I entertain a regard, I will modify the amendment by substituting for it the following:

For the preservation of peace with those Indians who have been dispossessed of their lands in California, until permanent arrangements be made for their future settlement, the sum of $100,000: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to imply the obligation on the part of the United States to feed and support the Indians who have been dispossessed of their lands in California.

The amendment as modified was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was as follows:

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriations heretofore made for removing the Choctaw Indians from Mississippi, as estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $37,412."

The question was taken, and the President announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. CASS. Who presents that amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It is an amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and reported to the Senate, and the question is now on concurring in it. The Chair put the question, and the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BELL. I ask for a division. I do not think the Senate understood the proposition.

The question was again taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. COOPER. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That there be and is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be found due by the Comptroller of the Treasury, for carrying out that portion of the fifth article of the treaty of 1846, for the benefit of the western Cherokees, and that the sum so found to be due, be paid to the parties equitably entitled thereto.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator will not persist in pressing that amendment. It is a controverted and debatable matter, and I am anxious to get through the bill to-day.

Mr. COOPER. I have no personal wish to press this amendment upon the Senate. But a bill to carry out this provision was agreed to by the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported; and believing that the bill now under consideration was a proper place to provide for the appropriation I was directed to prepare an amendment to that effect, which I now propose. I do not feel at liberty to withdraw it; and I do not think it is a matter that will occupy the Senate in a discussion for any considerable length of time. I would be very willing to gratify my friend from Virginia by withdrawing it, if I were at liberty to do so; but I am not. I will briefly explain the circumstances under which the claim arises, and I do not believe that any one will be found to controvert its justice, if they understand the obligation of the Government as I understand it, and as the Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously understood it.

In 1850, an appropriation was made to carry out the treaty of 1846, made with the Cherokee nation of Indians. A large sum was appropriated for that purpose. There were, besides the Indians, other claimants upon the funds, attorneys whom they had employed. This sum is intended to pay the Messrs. Kendall, who were their attorneys under an agreement entered into in 1843, and ratified repeatedly since.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will allow me, I think I can save time. As I understand it, this amendment is not in order. He is not instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer it to this bill. They have reported a separate bill, but have not instructed the Senator to offer it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. COOPER. I will explain in a moment. In the first place a bill was reported and went upon the Calendar. Afterwards the claimants came to the committee and asked to have it put in this bill. There was no formal vote, but an agreement on the part of a majority of the members of the committee. I believe every one concurring out of committee that it should be offered here. So that it comes, as all other amendments of this kind do, with the approbation of the committee, one member only—who is now absent and sick—being absent. That is the position of it.

I was about stating how the claim arose. It arises from an agreement entered into in 1843 by these gentlemen to prosecute the claim of the western Cherokees upon the Government, and upon the other band of Cherokee Indians. They had a power of attorney; and five per cent. of whatever moneys should be recovered was the compensation which they were to receive. Accompanying that power of attorney there was an assignment of the fund and a direction to the Government to pay to the attorneys the five per cent. so assigned. But to the bill to which I referred, and which you will well remember, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] offered an amendment, directing that the Secretary of the Department charged with the disbursement of this money, should pay no part of it to agents or others employed in prosecuting the claim, but should pay it to the Indians per capita.

That amendment was agreed to, although it was suggested at the time that it would inevitably lead to the involvement of the United States in a claim upon the part of those whose services had been rendered, and for which an assignment of the fund was made, and a direction given to the United States to pay it. The parties prosecuted their claim, supposing that it was a right of which legislation could not deprive them; but the Secretary, obedient to the instructions contained in the bill, refused to pay it. They still prosecuted it; went west to Arkansas, and endeavored to procure it there from the Indians. They failed. They came back, and submitted their claim to the Senate. It went to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, as I have stated, a bill was reported for their relief. I presume that every honest man will recognize that here was a fund due to these men in consideration of services rendered, which the Government of the United States interfered to prevent them from receiving. It is, then, bound—having interfered to prevent their reception of it in the way pointed out in the agreement—to make good to the party the losses which they sustained by its act. It is a simple principle of law which would compel the payment of this claim by the Government, if the Government were, like an individual, subject to a suit. But it is not so subject. An appeal, therefore, must be made to its equity through Congress, and I trust that Congress will do these men justice. The amendment provides, through abundance of caution, that the claim shall again go to the Comptroller of the Treasury, in order that the amount may be ascertained, and whatever is found to be due be paid. This simple statement, brief as it is, will put the Senate in possession of the facts of the case; and an appeal to their justice, I am sure, is not necessary.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a question of order. Is not this a private claim, and, therefore, excluded under the rules? I think it is.

Mr. COOPER. I know that there have been decisions that would seem to warrant the opinion that this amendment falls within the prohibition of the rule; and I presume, from the decisions, or intimations, rather, made by the Chair, that that was the opinion of the Chair previously to yesterday. But you will bear in mind how it arises. It arises under a treaty. The Government paid out the whole fund, and they are now to make it good. It is absolutely to make good the treaty. Although it is a claim on the part of private individuals, it is substantially a proposition to carry into effect the treaty of 1846. It was in that view of it that I presented it. If it had been simply a private claim, and not intended to carry out the fifth article of the treaty to which I referred, after your admonitions, sir, I certainly never should have proposed it here. I would have done nothing after intimations of that kind, if I had regarded it simply as a private claim; for at this stage of the session, I would be the last Senator to take up any of the time of the Senate uselessly.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not understand that these gentlemen are interested in the treaty at all. The treaty contains no provision or stipulation in regard to the agents. It is an equitable claim they set up on account of the action of the Government in relation to the mode of payment to the Indians. They say that by the provision in the appropriation bill alluded to, which required the money to be paid to the Indians per capita, you deprived them of the mode of collecting their fees in which they had expected to collect them. It seems to me that it is a mere equitable claim, and rests upon the same ground as others which have been ruled out of order as amendments to the bill.

Mr. COOPER. A single word—I will not detain the Senate a moment. This is a part of the fund, substantially, that the treaty stipulated should be paid to the Indians.

The PRESIDENT. As a question of order is raised, the Chair must either decide it or refer it to the Senate, as he may think proper. On looking at the amendment, the Chair cannot discover from it that it provides for a private claim. It is in the following words:

"That there be and is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be found due by the Comptroller of the Treasury, for carrying out that portion of the fifth article of the treaty of 1846, for the benefit of the western Cherokees; and that the sum so found due be paid to the parties equitably entitled thereto."

From the reading of the amendment as proposed, the Chair is unable to say that it involves a private claim.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not rise to take an appeal. I submit to the decision of the Chair. But I rise to ask the Senate, in consideration of the circumstances of the case, not to put this amendment upon the bill. Certainly, it is one of those measures which ought to be considered separately. We, who desire to examine the claim, cannot ask the appropriation bill to be laid over to give us an opportunity to look into the facts. I do not know enough of the facts to be enabled to decide, with any degree of confidence, upon its justice; and I think I foresee, unless we should vote it down, that it may become the occasion of a long debate in relation to the propriety of the policy of this Government of paying agents or attorneys of this kind. I should be very sorry to see that subject introduced at this stage of the bill, leading to another long debate. I hope the Senator will not press it. He can bring it up as a separate measure. If we get through the bill to-day, Friday will be devoted to private claims, and we then can consider this measure separately. If it is still pressed upon us now, I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to vote it down.

Mr. WALKER. As this claim grows out of a matter of which I have a personal knowledge, it may be necessary for me to state the circumstances. I do not rise for the purpose of expressing any views whatever in regard to the justice or injustice of this act, or of the amount proposed to be appropriated. That I leave entirely to the Senate to decide after the circumstances are explained. Some two years ago, I think it was, when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration, I offered a proviso to the end of the bill—and I shall again offer it to this one—providing that the money appropriated by it should be paid directly to the Indian or Indians entitled thereto, and not to any agent or attorney whatsoever. We had treated previously with the Indians. We had stipulated to pay them money. We had neglected to pay it until it became a matter of complaint on the part of the Indians. They employed agents to prosecute their claims and obtain from the Government what was justly due to them. I knew nothing about this individual case at the time. It never had come to my knowledge that the Messrs. Kendall had any claim upon any Indians. But I felt that when the Government had stipulated to pay the Indians money, we ought not to deduct from it such large sums as I knew were to be taken from them and given to our own people. Feeling that that would be unjust to the Indians, I offered the amendment, which seemed to be thought just and proper by the Senate, and it was adopted. It was an expression of the sense of the Senate that the money ought to go to the Indians to whom we stipulated to pay it, and not to any of our own people for procuring it for themselves. I believe I was right in offering that amendment. I believe it was based in honesty and justice. I shall offer it again to this bill. We certainly have had developments enough to put us on our guard with relation to the manner of paying money to Indians; and now it is a question to decide whether, having placed that guard upon the bill, and persons having lost their fees in consequence of it, we will now turn round and, after having paid this money to the Indians, pay it over again to the agents who prosecuted the claim. This is the question to be decided; and this is the manner in which this claim arises.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I really cannot see, after having heard my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COOPER,] what foundation there is for this claim. If I understand it right, it is this: There were certain claims due to the Indians. Congress passed an act for their payment. In that act they provided that the money should be paid into the hands of the Indians who were entitled to it. Now, these gentlemen come here and say they made certain contracts with the Indians, which, but for that provision in the act, they would have been able to have enforced at the Treasury Department, and thereby have compelled the Indians to pay the compensation they had contracted to pay them; that they asked it, and that the Indians would not pay them. Then the whole resolves itself into this: That if the United States have a certain sum of money to pay to a number of Indians, they cannot order it to be paid to the Indians directly without incurring themselves with an engagement to pay all the debts connected with that sum of money which the Indians themselves ought to pay. It appears to me that the very proposition is on its face absurd. We certainly had the right to pay the money to the persons to whom we owed it; and if we did so, let the men who made the contracts settle them with the Indians. We have nothing to do with them.

Mr. ATCHISON. The question, it seems to me, is this: Were those Indians capable of making a contract with an agent, or lawyer, if you please, or attorney—I care not by what term you designate him? The Cherokees, through their council, had the power and had the right to employ an agent for the prosecution of their business here, with the Government, or elsewhere.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

Mr. ATCHISON. Very well; then these attorneys were employed to obtain this very money. When the appropriation was made, for the avowed purpose of preventing the Indians paying their agents or attorneys, the clause, requiring it to be distributed among the Indians per capita, was introduced, to pay four or five thousand different Indians, thereby placing it out of the power of the chiefs, or the council, or the public authorities of the nation, to discharge the debts they owed to their agents. That is the whole case. It was the act of the Government; and it was avowed, at the time the amendment was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, that it was for the purpose of preventing the Indians paying their agents the debt thus contracted.

Mr. WALKER. Not at all. The Senator is mistaken. The object was not to prevent the Indians paying it; but it was to obviate the difficulty in which we would run in stipulating to pay money to the Indians, and then paying it to our own citizens. It was not to prevent the Indians paying these debts.

Mr. ATCHISON. No, but it did virtually have that effect. It was intended to have that effect. If the money had been paid to the chiefs, or representatives of the nation, then it could have been paid in gross to their attorneys or agents, and all just debts contracted as a nation might have been paid. But for the purpose of defeating it—or if not for the purpose, such was the effect of so paying it—it was directed to be paid to 4,000 or 5,000 Indians, instead of into the hands of a few of them to disburse it, as had been the custom of the Government from time immemorial at the Department here. That is the state of the case. It is precisely so; and no other face can be given to it. Then it is for the Senate to determine whether there is a liability on the part of this Government to refund that amount of money or not.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator from Missouri is, I think, mistaken upon one point. The proviso which was put in the appropriation bill to which allusion has been made, did not require in terms that the money should be paid to the Indians per capita, but provided simply that it should be paid according to the terms of the treaty of 1846. Those who favored it held at the time, and hold now, that such a proviso was not, or should not, have been necessary to require the paying department of the Government to pay the money directly to the Indians per capita, because the solemn stipulations of the treaty provided that it should be so paid. But when it was discovered that in making these payments the terms of the treaty had not been complied with, it was deemed by those who considered they were binding upon the Government in doing justice to the Indians, that we should, by an express provision in the appropriation bill, make the disbursing officers of the Government conform to the terms of the treaty. That was the state of the case. It introduced no new matter. It always should have been so, because the treaty required it; and it was simply making an additional provision to enforce what we had, by the solemn stipulations of the treaty, agreed to do, and which had not, to the great injury and prejudice of the Indians, been done.

But, Mr. President, what I shall say now has nothing to do with the contract between these gentlemen and the Indians. It may have been a fair one. I do not question it. But that has nothing to do with the propriety of this appropriation. The question is, whether we shall undertake to pay money for the Indians to individuals with whom they contracted a debt, admitted to have been such. Is that an obligation of this Government? I think not. I can see no foundation in justice for it.

The Senator from Missouri has very properly said, that these Indians were capable of contracting a debt. If you admit that, you must also admit that they are very competent, when they have money in their own hands, to pay it, and that there is no obligation upon the Government, either to pay it out of the Indians' money, or still less out of money which does not belong to the Indians. It is just equivalent to making a treaty with the Indians, by which we undertake to pay them annually so much money per capita, and then going off and finding an individual, and paying him so much in addition, to come here and compel the Government to comply with its contract. That is precisely the proposition which is presented.

Again, without questioning the justness and fairness of the contract, I think the Senator from Missouri was mistaken when he said the proviso prevented the council of the nation from paying the agents or attorneys out of the money. Sir, the Indians did hold a council. They did appoint a commission, which sat upon and adjudicated the claims of these persons; and they did pay some and rejected others. A commission appointed for the purpose of examining these claims, did, last summer, positively refuse to pay this one. They did pay some claims. They paid the claim of Mr. Stambaugh, of Pennsylvania, and other similar claims. This claim they refused to pay. These gentlemen went before the commission appointed by the Indians, which positively refused to pay their claim.

Mr. ATCHISON. I was not aware of these facts. They may be so. I do not doubt them, if the Senator states them of his own knowledge. I understand him to say that these things have transpired since the last session of Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes, sir; and I state them of my own knowledge. I happened to be in the country when they took place; and these gentlemen have since told me that what I say is the fact, and that their claim was then rejected. They told me, in the tone of complaint, that by my vote I had put it out of their power to get their money from the Indians. I say all this without any feeling of unkindness to these individuals, without the slightest reflection upon their contract, or denying that it was a fair one. But, we know very well that these Cherokees are as competent to make a bargain as anybody else; and I believe it is generally admitted by all who know them that they are as faithful in the execution of their contracts. They are not my constituents; but they live upon the border of my State, and I know something of their character. I believe they hold themselves as much bound by their contracts as any other people, whether white or red. They refused this claim, saying that they did not owe it. Under these circumstances, unless I can admit that this Government is bound to pay all who may choose to go and make contracts with the Indians, which the Indians refuse to pay, I am bound to vote against this amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, it does seem to me that the ground assumed by the Senator from Arkansas, in regard to this claim, is a very singular one, to say the least of it. If the Indians had not refused to pay the claim; if they had paid it when the Messrs. Kendall went to Arkansas, they would not have been here to ask for it. But they refused to do it; they did, as the Senator says, refuse to pay it. But they had agreed that it should be paid; and they had agreed by the most solemn form of instrument, that it should be received from the hands of the Government itself. I trust I shall never come into the Senate and advocate a proposition that is legally ridiculous or absurd; and I did not come here now to advocate such a proposition. I come here after having studied this case thoroughly; after having examined the authorities as to whether we should be warranted in doing what the amendment proposes to do, or not. Now, sir, if the state of the case was as it is represented by my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] I admit that the claimants could not recover in a court of law, if the parties were both the subjects of a suit. But let us see what was the contract between the parties made in 1843, stipulating in relation to this very fund. They contract in these words:

"In consideration whereof, the undersigned, on behalf of the said Cherokees west, [going on to name a number of them,] covenant and agree to pay, or cause to be paid, the full commission of five per cent. to the said A. and J. E. Kendall, upon any sums of money, or whatever else of value may be allowed or appropriated in full or in part satisfaction of said claim, to be paid from time to time as appropriated or allowed; and the said delegates do hereby authorize and empower the said A. & J. E. Kendall as agents and attorneys in fact, of the said Cherokees west, to demand and receive from the Treasury of the United States, or from the proper officer thereof, one twentieth of all sums to be recovered."

Then there is a further clause authorizing them—
"To demand and receive from the proper office or officer a full title to the one twentieth part thereof; it being the true intent and meaning of the said delegates that the said A. & John E. Kendall shall receive five per cent. or one twentieth part of any and everything of value which shall be granted and appropriated on account of said claim, to be received directly from the United States without any further act or authority from the said Cherokees."

Now, sir, what does it matter what the treaty between these Indians and the United States covenanted? Can they go behind this covenant with their agents to defeat them? But this is not a new thing. This question, in a case where there was the simple attorney's lien, has been decided by an Attorney General of the United States—a learned one—although he had not, perhaps, as shining talents as some others, yet he was one in whose judgment I would as soon confide as in any other that has been in office in these United States for the last twenty years—I mean Mr. Gilpin—a conscientious man, who never could be brought to give an opinion which law, and justice, and conscience did not warrant. This is his opinion. After going on to state the claim, which was a mere ordinary attorney's lien upon the fund—I will not trouble the Senate with it all—he says:

"For certainly, when an attorney has performed an important service, collected the evidence, and been instrumental in securing a claim which otherwise might have been lost; and, when this is done under the stipulation or with a bona fide understanding that he was to receive the amount to which he was entitled, directly from the United States, he has an interest in the fund which the principal himself could not withhold, and which the Department is bound to recognize."

I think I have sustained my position. I have abundance of evidence here to show that it was through the industrious and constant attention given by the Messrs. Kendall to this claim of the Cherokees that justice was eventually done them. Mr. Medill so states; the present Secretary of the Interior so states. We know that Mr. Kendall gave notice to the Department of the Interior that he would hold the Government bound for this sum of money, if they paid it in despite of the authority, a copy of which was filed in the Department. Now, I ask any gentleman here—and above all, I ask my friend from North Carolina, whose legal judgment I have as much confidence in as that of any other gentleman here or elsewhere—if individuals stood in this relation, and a third party interfered to prevent the receipt of money when the party has an interest in the fund, the third party is not liable in law and equity? If that is so, here is a claim on the part of the Messrs. Kendall that is good. At any rate, Mr. Gilpin, the Attorney General, to whom I have referred, has so decided in an equivalent case—no, sir, not in an equivalent case, where there was an absolute power of attorney irrevocable, as in this case, an assignment of the fund itself, accompanied with a direction to the officers of the Treasury to pay it out directly—still, where there was a simple lien, he has declared his opinion that the Government was bound to recognize and pay it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There is one view of this case which has not yet been presented. These are meritorious persons, and they have no doubt an equitable claim for the services which they rendered. But the question is whether the claim is upon the Government. I understand the facts of the case to be, that these two gentlemen, with one other by the name of Stambaugh, prosecuted this claim against the Government, under separate contracts, however, upon which they were to receive so much. An amendment was adopted to the Indian appropriation bill, at the last session, I believe, which was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, and which has been referred to, that the money should be paid to the Indians per capita. At the general council—the chiefs being appointed commissioners to receive it—one of these agents, Stambaugh, by some means or other, I do not know whether right or wrong, obtained some forty-odd thousand dollars. They paid forty-odd thousand dollars for the prosecution of this claim. That is a pretty large fee. Now, I propose that Stambaugh divide it with those who rendered the service to the Indians. That is the equitable claim to which I referred.

Mr. BADGER. As my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Cooper] has referred to me on this subject, I feel bound, out of respect to him and to the subject, to bring a little more distinctly to the attention of the Senate, the miserable ground upon which this claim against the United States rests. Let us inquire, first, what was the action of Congress upon which the claim is based? It is, that when the appropriation was made, we directed the money to be paid according to the terms of the treaty. The terms of the treaty required that it should be fixed per capita, to the members of the tribe. Then, it is alleged, on the part of the claimants, that we had become bound to pay them certain moneys, because, by causing the money to be paid according to the terms of the treaty, which constituted our obligation, we have deprived them of one of the liens or remedies by which they would have forced their principals, the Indians, to pay the compensation which they had contracted for. This is the ground of their claim. Now, I say that the case is exactly similar—as my friend referred to the case of individuals—to this: Suppose you, sir, owe me a sum of money; I appoint my friend from Missouri my agent to collect it; and you come and pay the money to me, and refuse to pay him any compensation for his services; and he sues you upon the ground, that, in consequence of your paying the money to the principal, instead of to the agent, you have deprived him of one of the means of securing the payment of what was due to him. That is this case; and no human ingenuity can give it any other aspect, so far as the claim is upon this Government. We were bound to pay the money according to the terms of the treaty, which required that it should be paid to the principal, and by our act which directed that it should be paid according to those terms, it was paid to the principals; and now we are gravely told, that if we had allowed the money to go into the hands of the agent, the agent would have deducted his compensation, and everything would have been straight; but inasmuch as we paid it to the principal, and the principal refuses to pay the agent, we are bound to make it good. Then the whole question resolves itself into this: If A is an agent to collect a debt due to B, does that disable the debtor from paying the debt to the principal, B? That is the whole affair.

Now, my friend has referred to the treaty, and he says, what does it signify what the treaty contains, for here is the contract? I ask, in return, what does it signify to us what the contract is? The United States were no party to it. It is an agreement between the Indians and their agents, for the prosecution of a claim. Does that affect the United States? Does it invalidate the treaty? Does it estop the Government? Does it alter our relations to the party to whom we owe the money? Certainly not. The Government cannot be estopped. That is a principle of law; the sovereign is never estopped in any case. But no individual could be estopped here.

But, again, according to the rule adopted in the Department, in paying moneys, such persons could have had no claim under the contract, even if the provision, of which complaint has been made, had not been put into the statute. What is this claim? The Indians covenanted and agreed "to pay, or cause to be paid, the full commission of five per cent." They "authorize them to demand and receive from the proper office, or officer, the full title to one twentieth thereof," &c.; "it being the full intent and meaning of the said delegates that the said A. and John E. Kendall shall receive five per cent., or one twentieth part, of anything and everything which shall be granted and appropriated" by the United States. Now, the rule of the Department is this: They do not undertake to enforce such contracts; they never assume any such jurisdiction. What they have done is this: They sanction, by the usage of the Department, that when there is an actual assignment, in terms, transferring to an agent, in consideration of services rendered, a certain proportion of the claim, they have considered him as the equitable owner of that portion of the claim, and have paid it to him, not in virtue of the contract, for the services, but as an assignee. But the Department never undertakes to enforce the contracts of principals to pay money to their agents. As long as it rests on a contract alone, the Department does not touch it; but when there is an assignment, they consider that assignment as passing the property over to the agent. Then the result is this: Say there is an assignment of ten per cent. to the agent; he being the assignee of one tenth, is considered by the Department as the owner of one tenth, and it is paid to him, and the other nine tenths they pay to the principal. But if the principal, instead of making an assignment, enters into a contract to pay a compensation, the Department never assumes jurisdiction over that, and never allows it.

Then, sir, it seems to me that this case is stripped of every apparent ground for a foundation. If these parties had appeared at the Department, and the Indians had refused their assent or consent to the moneys being deducted, the Department would have exercised no jurisdiction over the question under the terms of that contract, because it is not an actual assignment of the Indians to the agents. Then we have two answers to this complaint. In the first place, the Government had a right to pay the principal, and the agents cannot complain that they did so. In the second place, the agents had no demand upon the principal which could have been enforced at the Department; and therefore the payment to the principal has occasioned no loss and communicated no wrong to him. Therefore it seems to me a perfectly baseless application to pay that which the Government does not owe in law, equity, or morals.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think that some Senators are laboring under a misapprehension of the facts of this case; and I think that this remark applies with particular force to the honorable Senator from North Carolina, because I believe he could not have ventured the legal opinions which he has ventured—and we all concede to him abilities of the very highest order in that department—unless he had mistaken some of the facts of the case. I am the more particular in adverting to this, because in 1851, when this claim was first presented, I had the honor—or, I might rather say, that I was caught in the predicament—of reporting on the claim, and affirming precisely the legal proposition which has been advanced by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Cooper.] The history of the case, so far as the legal point is concerned, is presented in the facts to which I will now advert.

A long time since, the Old Settler Cherokees, having a claim against the Government, employed two sets of agents. One was Mr. Stambaugh, who eventually succeeded in obtaining a recognition of his claim and the payment of it by the Indians; and the others were Messrs. Kendall. Before the Messrs. Kendall engaged in the prosecution of the claim, they took from the Indians a contract, by which the Indians assigned one twentieth part of everything, whether land or money, which they might procure from the Government of the United States, and authorized them, as attorneys, to represent them at the Department of the Treasury, to obtain from the United States their claim. Now I ask the honorable Senator from North Carolina if, in a judicial proceeding where the United States could be made a party, their liabilities and rights are not to be decided by precisely the same rules as those of private citizens? Then I propound another question: Whether a power of attorney of this sort, which is known to lawyers as a "power of attorney coupled with an interest," is revocable in its character? I presume he will say that it is not, and that the rights of the Government are to be judged by the same rule as we would apply to an individual whose rights were the same under the same condition of circumstances.

Not only were the Messrs. Kendall constituted agents to receive the money at the Treasury, but an assignment of one twentieth part of whatever might be paid by the United States, in land or money, was to be given to them. You may call it, if you please, a choses in action. It was an unrecovered debt. It was uncertain and contingent, but the courts of equity regard it as an equitable assignment of that much money; so that when the treaty of 1846, which ascertained the amount due to the western Cherokees, was made and concluded by the Government, I take it for granted that, according to an equitable view of the case, there was one twentieth part of that money, the real ownership to which had been parted with, and the title to which these Indians had transferred to the Messrs. Kendall, by instruments of the very highest solemnity, and secured by every legal security and safeguard which could be thrown around the transaction. The Messrs. Kendall took not only a power of attorney, to represent the Indians themselves at the Treasury, but they were to receive one twentieth. But the Indians made an assignment and divestiture of their interest in that much money, and this was to be paid by the very parties of the Cherokee nation with whom we made the treaty of 1846.

Now, as to the competency of these parties to make a contract to bind the western Cherokees. If they were competent to enter into the treaty of 1846, and release all their undefined claims against the Government, they were just as competent to provide for these agents, by whose instrumentality they were enabled to bring about the provisions of the treaty. But the agents seem to have anticipated something like a difficulty of this kind, and, after the conclusion of the treaty, they took from the same men who had then concluded it, an instrument which reaffirmed the provisions of the old contract, and in which they again authorized the Government and officers of the United States to pay one twentieth of all that might be allowed to them. This agreement was made by the same parties who concluded the treaty, not only before it was made, but after it was made. The competency of these parties to bind the western, or Old Settler Cherokees, cannot be called in question for a moment.

The question is, therefore, there having been an equitable assignment of one twentieth of the proceeds, and there having been executed a power of attorney, coupled with an interest, which was in its nature irrevocable, the United States should be liable, having in their own wrong, after notice of the fact, paid this amount of money under the general terms of the appropriation. But I think gentlemen are mistaken, who say the appropriation was made by its general terms to be distributed per capita. That was not in the body of the amendment which I had the honor to offer on that occasion; but I think that a proviso was offered afterwards, by the Senator from Wisconsin, and attached to the end of it, which provided that no part of the money appropriated in that bill should be paid to any assignee.

The question presented is, how much of that money we had control over? How much of it was ours to appropriate? The Committee on Indian Affairs took all these subjects into consideration, and concluded that nineteen twentieths of it belonged to the Cherokees, and that there was one twentieth the ownership to which they had parted with and to which we had not any right, in full knowledge of the facts, to apply to other persons.

These assignments were filed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and during the time when the appropriation was being considered, the present claimants, lest they might be concluded, by not making their claim known, took the precaution of filing a solemn protest and remonstrance against the payment of the one twentieth part, or the five per cent., to the Indians. That presents the legal question, whether or not a trustee for the disbursement of a fund, who has received notice that a portion of it has undergone the operation of an equitable assignment, does not pay in his own wrong when he disburses money which is equitably not his own and pays it over to the wrong parties.

It was upon that simple view of the legal question that the committee believed the United States were responsible; and if we are mistaken in the question of law, then there is no foundation for the claim; but we gave to it the best consideration that we were able, and decided as a mere question of law that the United States were liable. I believe that if it could be made a judicial question the Supreme Court would decide that the United States were liable, upon the ground that, as trustees, they had misapplied the trust fund, contrary to the known intention of the party who created the trust. I, myself, would much prefer an amendment that would make this a judicial question, and which would submit the rights of this Government to the test of a judicial decision; for if the question of law is against the claimants here there is no ground whatever for the claim; and if the question of law is in their favor, we are making a political out of what should be a judicial question; and I am not in favor of that in any case where we can avoid it. The amendment, however, has not been presented in that shape, and I submit my view alone upon the legal question.

As to the equity of the claim, we must all admit that it comes in a most graceless form before the Senate, for it is not presumed by any one that the United States received any consideration at all; and we know something of that feeling in which Senators indulge, based upon the abuses of the system of agencies which has grown up. I know that no kind of favor is now extended towards these men. But the Committee on Indian Affairs base this claim upon the ground of the legal liability of the United States, which we believe could be enforced in a court of justice if the amendment had taken a form to make this a judicial instead of a political question.

I have submitted these remarks because I thought that Senators omitted to state, in the opinions which they had given, one important fact—that this was not the simple constituting of a power of attorney, but it is what gentlemen of the law familiarly denote a power of attorney coupled with an interest, which we know always operates as an assignment irrevocable in its character. It is regarded by the courts as part of the security of the claim, and the administration of the rights of parties concerned under it are placed upon the footing of equitable parties in interest.

Mr. BADGER. Although I have not fully recovered from the blushes brought to my cheek by the compliment bestowed by my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. SEBASTIAN,] yet I feel myself bound to answer as well as I can the questions which he has propounded. And first, as to the power of attorney coupled with an interest, which he says is not revocable. That is very true; but it only leaves it as a power of attorney between the persons who made it and their agents. The principal cannot revoke the power, but it is still a power from him; and I undertake to say that if there be a power of attorney irrevocable authorizing A B to collect a debt of C D, C D would nevertheless have the right to pay the principal, and I suppose my friend will not dispute it. That is the whole question here. Having paid the debt to the principal, the question is whether we thereby incur a responsibility to the agent?—whether the right of the agents being constituted by their principal ceases when we pay the principal, or whether we are bound also to pay the agent? That is the amount of the matter.

In this case, so far as I have discovered, there is no assignment. But suppose there were. I do not want to bring any question here unnecessarily; but I aver, in the first place, that the assignment of a claim against the Government, is a matter which the Government is at liberty to treat as valid, or not valid, at its pleasure. How does a man who has a claim against this Government obtain the right to make the Government indebted to somebody else except himself? No such claim exists under the common law. It is altogether under the commercial law, and by statute, that choses in action are assignable.

The principle of the common law is, that open, unliquidated demands are never assignable; and the ground upon which it proceeds is, that no man can be made debtor to another without his own consent. If the Government, therefore, owe this money to these principals, unless we choose to recognize the assignment, it has no obligatory force. We may recognize it and pay to the assignee, and the assignor cannot complain, because he authorized it to be done. We may repudiate it, and pay the whole amount to the assignor, and the assignee cannot complain, because we had no contract with him.

But this case stands on a totally different footing. The treaty upon its face makes this claim unassignable, and requires that the money shall be paid, not to any agent or assignee, but to the persons to whom it is directly due. If, therefore, these persons made assignments, and trafficked in them against the law, they acquired no title. The treaty carefully guarded against the pretense of interposing agents who could receive the money, and retain what portions of it they pleased, leaving their poor, miserable, red principals to take whatever they should think proper to dribble out to them, to relieve them in their necessities and distresses. Here is the provision of the treaty:

"And it is further agreed, that the per capita allowance to be paid as aforesaid shall not be assignable, but shall be paid directly to the person entitled to it, or to his heirs or legal representatives by the agent of the United States."

Mr. COOPER. Will the honorable Senator tell me when that treaty was made?

Mr. BADGER. It was in 1846.

Mr. COOPER. The agreement was in 1843.

Mr. BADGER. It might have been in 1823, for all the bearing it has on this case. I care not about the agreement. The treaty was our contract. We were no parties to the agreement. We agreed with the Indians to pay the money to them. The Indians stipulated from us that we should not allow it to be paid to any attorneys or agents. We had, therefore, no right, as honest men, to pay it to an attorney after the stipulations of the treaty.

Mr. WALKER. If we had paid the amount to attorneys, would not the Indians have had a valid claim against us according to the treaty?

Mr. BADGER. Undoubtedly. According to the clause of the treaty which I have read, if we had paid the money to the agents or attorneys, the Indians might well have rendered a claim against us for it.

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps it is my duty to these Cherokees that I should say one word. I have had some knowledge of their character from the fact that one of my friends has been their agent. I believe, from all I can learn of that people, that they would be the last, deliberately, to repudiate a debt. I have learned that they are remarkably cautious in making their contracts, and they are faithful in the observance of treaty stipulations. The fact that they have thought proper to refuse this debt, which these gentlemen have brought against them, is rather a satisfactory answer to the reasons that have been urged for it. They are a faithful people. I stand here to say for them this much, that I doubt whether, in a court of justice, these claimants would stand very well, even according to the views presented by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. SEBASTIAN.] I believe he is entirely correct in saying that a power of attorney, coupled with an interest, is not revocable. Still, the gentleman insists that this Government was bound to take notice of a contract to which it was not a party. Now, when we made this treaty stipulation, and ordered the money to be paid out per capita, did I or did any other Senator have absolute notice of this agreement? I take it for granted, that we had no notice when we passed this law; and, therefore, the Government, when it ordered the money to be paid per capita, did so without any notice.

I take it, that we cannot be compelled to recognize an obligation or to recognize a contract made with other persons, of which we ourselves had no notice; and I say, we ought not, as a Government, to be hampered by these collateral agreements. It would be a very strange state of things if we were to be hampered in making treaties with the Indians, by collateral agreements, made by them with their agents. I am not so sure that if we were a court of equity, and had to adjudicate this question as a question affecting an assignee, the consideration would not form a part of the decree of the court. I do not know that the contract was founded on an adequate consideration.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BADGER. I have an amendment to offer which is very plain, and which I hope will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate. There is to be found in this bill a provision in these words:

"To pay the claim as adjusted by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury, in favor of David Taylor, under the latter clause of the thirteenth article of the Cherokee treaty, concluded at New Echota, December 29, 1835, and approved by the Senate, $12,800, and to be paid out of the balance of the appropriations of July 2d, 1836, under the act entitled 'An act making further appropriations for carrying into effect certain Indian treaties.'"

My amendment is to strike out this clause, and to insert in lieu of it, the following:

"To pay the claim of David Taylor, as adjusted and found due by the Second Auditor of the Treasury on the 11th of March, 1852, under the latter clause of the thirteenth article of the treaty with the Cherokees, concluded at New Echota, on the 29th of December, 1835, and approved by the Senate, $24,853 04, and to be paid out of the balance of the appropriations of July 2d, 1836, under the act entitled 'An act making further appropriations for carrying into effect certain Indian treaties.'"

I will explain in a word the effect of this amendment, and the ground upon which it is founded. Its effect is to give David Taylor interest upon the sum which the bill, as it comes from the House, proposes to give him. The ground upon which it is proposed to give interest is this: Two Attorneys General in succession decided that David Taylor's claim was an adjudicated claim by the commissioner under the treaty, and ought to have been paid. Still, there were difficulties in the way of procuring payment. The Senate have on three several occasions put the appropriation into a bill, for the purpose of paying him; but upon committees of conference, it has been ruled out by the House of Representatives. Finally, as the Senate know, at this session the President sent us a nomination of a commissioner under the treaty, with a view to pass upon the claim. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee reported unanimously that there was no necessity for the commissioner, for the claim had been already adjudicated by the former commissioner. That report was unanimously concurred in by the Senate. The case stands, then, thus: This was a claim under that treaty, adjudicated by the commissioner, payable by the United States, and for which a warrant ought, years ago, to have been issued; but the difficulty is, that since certain discussions in the House of Representatives, with regard to interest upon a certain large claim, the executive officers have got so scared that they are almost afraid to allow interest on anything. This case was adjudicated against the United States years ago, for this sum of money, by the proper commissioner under the treaty, and the proposition now is whether, it being in the nature of a judgment, the United States ought not to pay it. That is the whole question.

Mr. HUNTER. As the provision stands in the bill, it is according to the estimate of the Treasury Department. They refused there to allow interest. The question seems to be a contest between officers. I am willing to vote for the provision as it stands in the bill. I understand a recent decision in the Department has been against the allowance of interest.

Mr. BADGER. The case is this: The Auditor allowed the interest, and allowed it rightfully; but, as I said, the Secretary of the Treasury was afraid to allow it, because, I suppose, there has been so much fuss and disturbance about the allowance of interest. If the United States are not to pay interest in this case, in what case are they? This is a claim which was adjudicated by the proper officers fourteen years ago, and allowed against the Government.

Mr. BELL. Who is in default?

Mr. BADGER. I will not enter into the question of default. The claim should have been paid long ago. I understand that years ago, during Mr. Polk's administration, an order was made out for a warrant directing the payment of this money to be made by Mr. Walker, then the Secretary of the Treasury, when certain gentlemen went to the President and procured from him a direction to the Secretary (for what reasons I know not) to rescind the order. The Senate have three times examined the case, and ordered the money to be paid; and it will be the shortest measure of justice, or rather the grossest injustice, which has ever been committed to any man by this Government, if the claim is not paid with interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I renew the amendment which was rejected in Committee of the Whole, to insert the following in the bill:

That the Secretary of War be directed to pay to each of the survivors, or to the heirs of those who have died, of the Seminole warriors who were mustered into the service of the United States, at Fort Brooke, in December, 1835, an amount equal to three months' pay and allowance of a private soldier in the Army of the United States: Provided, That the amount so paid shall not exceed $3,870: And provided, also, That such amount paid shall be in full of all claims of said friendly Seminoles, during the Florida war, for compensation and for indemnity on account of losses sustained.

I will not go into a statement of the case. Several Senators who objected to it when in Committee of the Whole have since become satisfied that it is all right. I have reviewed the report which I made under the direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I find the documents sustain me in everything. The evidence is conclusive. Those Indians never were paid. An estimate from the Paymaster's Department in 1850 shows that they had not been paid. Under this state of the case, I will simply submit the amendment again. In point of fact, it was carried before; but the vote was announced as a tie, because a Senator voting in favor of it was overlooked.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the question will be taken without debate. I am not disposed to renew the discussion, though I shall not vote for the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALKER. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the several sums of money appropriated by this act to any Indian or Indians, shall be paid directly to the Indian or Indians entitled thereto, in person, and not to any agent or attorney of said Indian or Indians, whether such attorney or agent may have been constituted by a written power of attorney or otherwise; and that no person shall be appointed or continued as an agent of the Government, to make any such payment, who holds, or is interested in, any contract with any Indian or Indians mentioned in this act; and that before any person shall be allowed to make any such payment, or any disbursement of money herein appropriated, he shall take and subscribe an oath before some competent authority, to be filed in the Department of the Interior, that he does not hold, and is not interested, either directly or indirectly, in any contract of any kind, with any Indian or Indians mentioned in this act; and that he will not, during the continuance of his duties, become a holder of, or interested in, any such contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendments being proposed, the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. CASS. I desire to give notice to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that I shall hold him to his promise, and trust he will aid me to get up the bill providing for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of the Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

On motion the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 11, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the motion to commit House bill No. 146, to regulate the fees of clerks, marshals, and attorneys in the circuit and district courts of the United States to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. McLANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, the near approach of the termination of this session of Congress, and the great amount of important business yet remaining for the action of this House, admonish me to be very brief. I promise to occupy but a very few minutes of time this morning. Nor shall I linger for a moment upon the threshold, but will endeavor to enter at once upon the merits of this subject.

The measure proposed is one of retrenchment and reform; and whilst gentlemen upon this floor almost unanimously see the necessity for the action which the Committee on the Judiciary propose to have, although gentlemen all yield their assent to the demands of the country for some such measure, yet we find here, and we find there, objections urged against it; and ultimately every member opposed to the bill is willing to submit a motion that it be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, indicating at the same time that their intention is not to defeat the measure, but that they send it there for the purpose of emendation and improvement.

I hope this motion will not prevail. Measures to draw millions from the public Treasury pass this Congress with but faint and feeble opposition; but, sir, when a measure intended to guard the public treasure, and protect the rights of the people, is introduced, gentlemen professing to approve the scheme with seeming kindness move to refer it to a committee where it rests forever.

It is well known that if this measure goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it goes there once and forever. You commit it to the tomb of the Capulets, "to sleep the last sleep, that knows no waking." Sir, the loving kindness of such gentlemen is death to the proposition, and they know it. I ask this House, then, not to be led away by arguments such as these, because those who oppose the bill, saying that the fees and emoluments are too high, and those who say that they are too low, as well as those who allege that the measure in itself is correct, but think there ought to be some slight and trifling amendments, whatever means they adopt to serve their purposes, they all arrive at the same end, and that is the ultimate defeat of this measure.

It is estimated by the Department that the enactment of this bill into a law, will save to the public Treasury at least $150,000 per annum; and while this saving is made to the public Treasury, it will save at least double that sum, which is now annually extracted from the pockets of those whose faults or misfortunes carry them into courts of justice.

Let us for a moment examine the reasons why these gentlemen ask for a reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentlemen from New York [Messrs. HAVEN and SEYMOUR] tell us that this bill would be all right, provided it allowed the taxation of costs in the Federal courts of the city of New York, according to the existing laws of the State of New York. In other words, they tell us it is all right if we reenact the law as it now stands, reenact the law as it is this day, and allow the officers of the courts of justice in the city and State of New York, to practice the same impositions upon the Government and upon the people that they are practicing now.

The one hundred and sixty-seventh paragraph of the appropriation act of 1842, limits the fees to be received by the marshals, district attorneys, and clerks in the Federal courts of the State of New York, in all cases to the fees allowed by the laws of that State to sheriffs, clerks, and district attorneys of the State. And yet, I undertake to assert, without the fear of successful contradiction, that since the passage of the statute of New York, reducing and regulating costs and fees in the year 1848, there never has been one account certified and allowed against the United States under the provisions of that law. Where is the use of reenacting what is now the law, when we have abundant evidence before us that the law, as it exists, never has been, and never will be executed? Such legislation would be preposterous and idle.

The gentleman from the southern district of New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] has informed the House that there is no complaint upon the part of the people in the State of New York about the system of the taxation of costs. Sir, he has looked at but one side of this question. I have in my possession a letter from one of the most eminent lawyers in New York, from one who stands amongst the very foremost at the bar of the city of New York—a man no more distinguished for his legal ability than he is for the probity of his character—I mean (and I am authorized to use his name) Daniel Lord. He has sent me a transcript, which I hold in my hand. I desire gentlemen to look at it. It is the case of Joshua Crosby vs. Moses H. Grinnell & Co., in the district court of the city of New York in March last. The record is a short one; there it is, [holding it up.] The decree is for $36. And the costs are only $340 88! Here, too, is the attorney's bill in this case, covering eight pages of foolscap, embracing nearly three hundred items of costs, and amounting to $241 88. Out of the $340 88 taxed and allowed in this case, the attorney of the successful party receives $241 88. This is a case between private parties of costs taxed under the fee bill of the State statute of 1848. And this is the system that gentlemen from New York ask us to adhere to. Sir, Mr. Lord thinks this is wrong, and I, with every other member of the Judiciary Committee, fully concur with him in opinion.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the proceeding to which he alludes is a common-law proceeding, or an admiralty proceeding?

Mr. McLANAHAN. It is a proceeding on the admiralty side of the court, and there is the record; any member of this House could copy it in thirty minutes. The recovery was $36, and the costs were $340 88!

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to say, as the gentleman has alluded to me, although I do not reside in the southern district of New York, that the amendment which I proposed, and which I should have been happy to have discussed at greater length, proposed to leave the costs of suits in admiralty and under maritime jurisdiction, and all suits where the United States are a party, to the operation of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania; for it is such suits, and such only, that the abuses stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania have been felt under the present law. My amendment proposes only to exempt from the operation of the bill before the House all other civil suits between individual citizens. In such cases the costs are regulated by the laws of the several States, according to the practice prevailing in each, and they should continue to be so regulated.

Mr. McLANAHAN. Why, sir, if you exempt the State of New York in any part or parcel, you destroy the whole influence and operation of the bill. What is it, sir? It is a measure that proposes to equalize the costs in the courts of justice throughout the United States. It is a proposition that would enable the gentleman from Georgia to go to the State of New York to try his cause there, conscious at the moment when he left home that the taxation of costs for services rendered in the State of New York would be no more than he paid in Georgia for the same services in the Federal courts. That will be the operation of this bill, if it becomes a law.

Mr. HAVEN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McLANAHAN] to one point. He says this bill establishes a uniform system throughout the United States. If he will look at this bill, on page nine, from the one hundred and eighty-second to the one hundred and ninetyeth lines, he will find that the bill adopts a rule to give to marshals for serving a writ of possession, partition, execution, or final process; for seizing or levying on property; advertising and disposing of the same by sale, set-off, or otherwise, &c., the same fees and poundage as are or shall be allowed for similar services to the sheriffs of the several States respectively in which the service may be made. This abandons the dead-level rule contended for, and in some cases, as in Maryland, where there are different rules of compensation to sheriffs in different counties, and will make it rather inconvenient and somewhat perplexing.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I can answer that before the proposition is stated. No man who understands the judiciary system of the United States, and the principles upon which it proceeds, but must know that all the executive processes of the United States courts are executed according to the laws of the several States in which the process issues. There can be no other system adopted in regard to the executory process, and that will be manifest to my friend from New York, if he gives the subject the least attention. And this brings me to answer another objection from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR.] He says it is impossible to propose any rational system for the uniform taxation of costs in the United States courts, because the process is different in the different courts of the several States.

This bill proposes item fees for every item that should be taxed for either original or mesne process, and it proposes that where records are made, orders or decrees drawn, or certificates given, a folio compensation of fifteen cents for every hundred words, and of ten cents for every hundred words for a copy.

Here, sir, is a uniform system that will work, that can work, and that must work, if this bill is adopted, throughout the whole United States—a system at once just, equal, equitable, and economical.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McLANAHAN. I am pressed for want of time. I will endeavor to answer fairly and ingenuously all the arguments which I have heard upon this subject, and do it very briefly.

Well, sir, I pass from the gentleman from New York, with this single observation, that his State is the breeding sore of all these evils, and I am disposed to send the knife into the very bottom of that sore. Take out the State of New York from the operation of the bill, and I would prefer the bill to fall. Let us have a remedy that will be as universal in its character as the evil, or none at all.

Now, sir, the gentleman from the State of Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] objected, in very strong terms, to some of the provisions of this bill. He objects to the introduction of a common-law principle into criminal proceedings, by which there will be a consolidation of different counts in one indictment of all crimes of the same grade or class which, under the direction of the court, may be properly joined. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MANN] came to our aid on yesterday, and mentioned a most startling case—a case that of itself should put to rest forever this objection. Allow me, sir, to read it:

"Mr. MANN said: 'Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia speaks of $400 or $500, as an enormous charge. In the course of my practice within a few years I know a case where three men were indicted for the commission of a single offense, and the district attorney who had charge of the case—though all the offenses could have been embraced in a single indictment, and should have been so embraced—made three hundred and thirty-five indictments, and charged $10 for each, thus making $3,350 for what should have been a single case.'"

The gentleman seems to be alarmed at the sound of the word consolidation. The bill proposes to bring into the same indictment, in different counts, offenses of a similar grade and character. That word consolidation, indicates to him that there is to be a consolidation of the Federal Government. The word consolidation has no such terrors for me. But the gentleman who comes from the district where they have robbed the United States mail, the western district of Virginia, objects because only two or three hundred attachments have been issued in that court for the non-attending of witnesses. There were thirteen indictments drawn up in that case, in the western district of Virginia, against a man who robbed the United States mail, when thirteen counts in the same indictment would have covered the whole case, and answered every purpose. The gentleman objects to it, because, to his mind, it is subversive of the whole judiciary system, because it brings to light an abuse in the district he has the honor to represent upon this floor, and because, forsooth, it militates against what might be the spirit and meaning of the resolutions of '98.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman permit me to correct a misrepresentation he has made?

Mr. McLANAHAN. I yield to the gentleman to make the correction. If I have made a misrepresentation, it has been unconsciously.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman says that I oppose this bill because it brings to light an abuse in the western district of Virginia. Such a statement is wholly unfounded. I opposed it for no such reason. I have said nothing which can warrant such a declaration as that just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. On the contrary, I have uniformly said, that where abuses existed, they ought to be corrected. I have insisted that this bill would not correct the evil of which he complains, but in its operation would multiply evils; that it could not result otherwise than most mischievously. Sir, I have never been the advocate of abuses in any department of the Government, nor will I sit still and hear myself thus misrepresented.

Mr. McLANAHAN. That is a wild allegation. It is wide of the mark. What does it mean? He is opposed to a section because other parts of the bill will work injuriously. He tells us that he is not opposed to the bill because in this discussion the abuse of the process of the court in his own district has been made manifest by the report of the Judiciary Committee. Well, sir, be it so. The gentleman does not sanction abuses, but places his opposition on other grounds. I am at a loss to determine what they are.

The gentleman from Virginia knew that all these very witnesses were brought into court, discharged, and no fines inflicted, but the Government of the United States had to pay for their contumacious conduct. And more than this, sir, not only attachments issued against each of the witnesses in one case, but attachments issued against each of the witnesses in every case. How the gentleman can reconcile such proceedings to his own sense of propriety, I cannot understand.

Gentlemen talk about a section of this bill consolidating such suits, and tell us that it is opposed to the spirit of the Constitution, and against the genius of our institutions. Why, sir, the argument—not to be offensive—is preposterous. The good sense of this House will at once brush such flimsy cobwebs away from the subject, and bestow upon it what it deserves—a practical consideration.

My friend from the northern district of New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] tells us that this bill will ruin the navigation and commerce upon the lakes. I have seen letters from the clerk of that district, in which he states that we cannot get men who will fill the office of clerk, because the fees are so much reduced. There is, then, an issue between that gentleman and his constituent.

Mr. HAVEN. I would inquire whether the gentleman does not allude to the clerk who taxed in the case of the Ogoutz?

Mr. McLANAHAN. I cannot tell. I suppose the gentleman [Mr. SEYMOUR] who represents another district of New York, and who is opposed to the provisions of this bill, might, with the same degree of propriety, argue that it would injure the commerce and navigation of the Hudson river, for the improvement of which the gentleman's eloquence obtained an appropriation of $50,000. No, sir; the bill will do no such thing. These objections are far-fetched and so futile that their very statement against this measure should impart to it additional vigor. The commerce and navigation of the State of New York, whether on the lakes or on the river, cannot fail to flourish whether the bill passes or is defeated. Let the gentlemen quiet their fears on that score.

It has been objected that this bill takes away from the judges the power of certifying and allowing bills of costs. It does so in every case in which the United States are concerned, but in regard to the taxation of costs between parties, it leaves their taxation to the court. I had occasion to observe a few days ago, in opening this discussion, that in cases in which the United States was a party, the marshal shall, by virtue of one paragraph in the proposed bill, on the order of the court, pay the jurors and witnesses such fees as they may be entitled to by law, to be allowed to him on his settlement of his accounts at the Treasury. But the certificate of the judge to the accounts of the marshals, clerks, district attorneys, or commissioners, is not necessary when presented at the Treasury Department. The oath of the party claiming will be necessary in all cases. This will relieve the court from an onerous burden, and save the judges from the disagreeable necessity of acting as auditors and accounting officers of the Government. But, sir, I must be frank to say, if the experience of the past—if all that has been made public by the reports of the Comptroller—if all that has been said upon this floor in regard to the practice in the States of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and other States—if the conduct of the judiciary in all these is not sufficient to warn this House of the evils of such a system, then let the judges allow and certify.

Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to say what would now be the judicial expenses of this Government if the certificate of the judge was final. I think I would hazard nothing in placing them at $1,000,000 per annum. But, sir, it never was intended that the judge's certificate should be conclusive. The decisions of several of our Attorneys General have been given on this point, (Mr. Crittenden was the last;) and they all concur in opinion that the judge's certificate is not final. The judge is not an accounting officer—neither, indeed, should he be. If it were otherwise, why did not Congress order the accounts allowed and certified by the judges to be sent to the Register of the Treasury to be entered, so that he could certify the balance due to the Secretary of the Treasury, and enable him to draw a warrant for the claimant, without the useless formality of sending them to accounting officers? If such was the law, the office of the Comptroller would be a useless sinecure. The lamp of experience should guide us in this matter. And, sir, would our past experience of the manner in which some of the judges, without law and against law, have certified accounts justify us in adhering to the present plan? This would be unwise and impolitic.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] says that the Executive officer ought to turn out those who are guilty of these abuses. He knows as well as I do, that it is not competent for the President of the United States to discharge a judge, or to meddle with his clerk. If the attorney and marshal bring an account before the judge, and he certifies it, it has upon its face the impress of the law, and would the gentleman ask for unconstitutional Executive interference against the judicial branch of the Government? It is contrary to the dignity of our courts that the judges should be the accounting and auditing officers of the Government. The law has placed these arduous duties in other hands, and placed it there wisely and discreetly; for it never was intended that the courts should form a constituent part of the Executive Department of the Government. No, sir, checks and balances have been interposed in our system, and accounting officers are made under oath to act upon all subjects referred to them by law. Mr. Whittlesey, the present First Comptroller, deserves much credit for the manner in which he has resisted these innovations upon the Treasury.

Now, sir, gentlemen pretend to say that the system which this bill proposes to introduce, will change the whole judiciary policy of this Government. I deny it. But suppose it does. Such a reason as that is not going to intimidate me. I am one of those who are ready to scale, at any time when the occasion offers, these moss-covered battlements of error, and to plant upon them the standard of right and justice. Abuses in our Federal courts, and frauds upon our public Treasury, are known and admitted to exist, by every member on this floor.

Then, why not attempt a remedy? Sir, to my mind, precedent never did and never can justify abuse, and time never can and never shall sanctify corruption. Let me, then, entreat the representatives of the people now, after a session of nearly nine months in this Hall, to pass this one measure of retrenchment and reform; and when you return to your homes, bear it with you, and present it to your long-suffering and patient constituents as a peace-offering for the past.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I desire to submit a statement of a case within my knowledge, and with the consent of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can proceed only by unanimous consent, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded the floor.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I have yielded the floor, but I should be happy to hear the statement of the gentleman from Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding to make his statement?

Mr. MASON. I object.

Mr. BRIGGS demanded tellers upon the motion to commit the bill; which were ordered; and Messrs. FULLER, of Maine, and BRIGGS were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 26, noes not counted. So the motion to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I withdraw that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether the gentleman can withdraw it. The existence of that proposition may have been a reason for the ordering of the previous question, on the part of some gentlemen.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendments of the Judiciary Committee.

The first amendment of the Judiciary Committee was read and agreed to, as follows:

1. Strike out the twenty-third and twenty-fourth lines, viz: "When a commission with interrogatories is issued to take testimony, the additional sum of $5," and insert "For each deposition taken and admitted as evidence in the cause, $2 50."

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to inquire whether there was more than one amendment which was in fact pending? The Chair will remember that I proposed to offer amendments to some of the subsequent amendments, and the Chair ruled that there could be but one amendment pending at a time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] misunderstood the Chair. Only the amendments of the committee were before the body. Several amendments are pending in the shape of a report from the committee.

Mr. HAVEN. My proposition was to amend the last of these amendments, and I understood it to be out of order.

The SPEAKER. Out of order until that part of the bill was reached.

Mr. HAVEN. For the reason then that a prior amendment was pending?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. Let the Chair be understood by the gentleman. Several amendments are proposed by the committee—one to the first clause of the bill. If the committee had proposed no amendment to that first clause, an amendment to that first clause would have been in order if moved by any member upon the floor. The committee proposes to amend the first clause, and that amendment must be first voted upon, and would be amendable except for the reason that the previous question cuts it off, so that it is not in order to receive or entertain an amendment to the second, third, or fourth amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. HAVEN. My understanding of it runs exactly parallel with that of the Chair, that up to the point of passing the first amendment, but one amendment can be received. Now, if this were to be treated as but one amendment, I then had a right to propose to amend the last proposition in that one amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the amendments of the Judiciary Committee to be several distinct amendments.

Mr. HAVEN. That being so, then but one of them could be well received at the time, or if receivable, I had a right to propose to amend it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman. As many amendments as may be reported by the committee, are before the House for their action, no one of which can be cut off by the operation of the previous question. That is the universal practice under our law.

Mr. HAVEN. Then it would seem to follow that an amendment to an amendment properly pending might have been made.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the decision of the Chair would be this: if there was no previous question operating, each amendment, in its turn, would be amendable; but by the express law of the House, the amendment is cut off by the operation of the previous question. The Chair could not entertain an amendment proposed to the last amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAVEN. That was the only question. Although it was the last amendment, it was still a pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendments proposed by the committee are to be taken up in the same order as the clauses to which they are applicable are considered. Amendments proposed to the amendments of the committee can only be considered in the order in which the clauses are considered, the same as if these clauses were separate sections. The gentleman will recollect that the Chair made an effort to have the House, by unanimous consent, consider those amendments as before the body.

Mr. HAVEN. The Chair will understand that I was in no way complaining of the action of the Chair. I was only noticing the operation of the thing, by which I lost the benefit of offering my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, under the rules, will be compelled to rule out of order any proposition to amend.

Mr. LETCHER. I am not very familiar with the rules of order, and I could not hear distinctly what the Chair said in the conversation with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN.] Do I understand the Chair to say that no amendments can be offered to this bill except those reported by the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. Those amendments are all that can be voted upon, for the reason that the previous question has cut off everything else—everything which was not pending before the House when the previous question was moved.

The other amendments of the Judiciary Committee, from two to fifteen, both inclusive, were considered and adopted, as follows, viz:

2. Strike out the word "like," in the following clause, viz: "A like compensation of $5 shall be allowed for services rendered in cases removed from a district to a circuit court by writ of error or appeal."

3. In the following clause, viz: "For traveling from the place of his abode to the place of holding any court of the United States in his district ten cents per mile for going, and ten cents for returning," insert after the word "district," in the 39th line, "and to the place of any examination before a judge or commissioner of a person or persons charged with crime."

4. In the following paragraph, viz: "In any case where a district attorney has heretofore prosecuted or defended a suit in which the United States was concerned, in a district where the law allows no taxable attorneys' fees, and for which he has received no compensation, except his per diem and annual salary, he shall be paid for his services according to the provisions of this act," strike out the word "heretofore," and insert "during the last six years."

5. Insert at the end of the following clause, viz: "Whenever two or more indictments, suits, or proceedings, are, or shall be, prosecuted, which should be joined, the district attorney prosecuting them shall be paid but one bill of costs for them all," the words "and if any attorney, proctor, or other person admitted to manage or conduct cases in any court of the United States, or of the Territories thereof, shall appear to have multiplied the proceedings in any cause before court, so as to increase costs unreasonably and vexatiously, such person may be required, by order of the court, to satisfy any excess of costs so increased."

6. In the following clause, viz: "For entering any return, rule, order, continuance, judgment, decree, or recognition, drawing any bond, or making any record, certificate, return, or report, or a copy of any such entry or record, or of any paper on file, not exceeding one folio, ten cents, and for each additional folio ten cents," insert after the word "report" the words "for each folio fifteen cents," and strike out the word "or," and insert "after report," in lieu thereof, "and for."

7. After the following clause, viz: "For issuing a writ of subpoena, twenty-five cents," insert—
"For every search for each mortgage, judgment, or other lien, fifteen cents."

8. In the following clause, viz: "For travel in going only to serve any process, warrant, attachment, or other writ, including writs of subpoena in civil and criminal cases, five cents per mile; to be computed from the place of service to the court or place where the writ or process is returned," &c., strike out "five" and insert "six."

9. At the end of the following clause, viz: "For sales of vessels or other property, under process in admiralty, or under the order of a court of admiralty, and for receiving and paying the money, for any sum under $500, two and one half per centum; for any larger sum, one and one quarter per centum upon the excess," add the following:

"For serving an attachment in rem, or a libel in admiralty, $2; and the necessary expenses of keeping boats, vessels, or other property, attached or libeled in admiralty, not exceeding $2 50 per day; and in case the debt or claim shall be settled by the parties, without a sale of the property, the marshal shall be entitled to a commission of one per cent. on the first $500 of the claim or decree, and one half of one per cent. on the excess over $500: Provided, That in case the value of the property shall be less than the claim, then, and in such case such commission shall be allowed only on the appraised value thereof."

10. Strike out the following clause, viz: "For attendance of each deputy, not to exceed three in number, by order of the court, at any term thereof, $2 per day for each day's actual attendance; and for traveling from his residence to the place of holding court, ten cents per mile for going only; said deputy performing the duty of clerk while so attending, for which no additional compensation shall be allowed," and insert in lieu the following, viz:

"The respective courts of the United States shall appoint clerks for their courts, to be allowed the sum of $2 per day; and the marshals are hereby authorized to appoint such a number of persons, not exceeding five, as the judges of their respective courts shall determine, to attend upon the grand and other juries, and for other necessary purposes, who shall be allowed for their services the sum of $2 per day, to be paid by, and included in the accounts of the marshal, out of any money of the United States in his hands. The compensation to be given only for actual attendance; and when both courts are in session at the same time, to be paid but for attendance on one court."

Amend the first clause of section three so as to make it read as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That every district attorney, clerk of a district court, clerk of a circuit court, and marshal of the United States, shall, until otherwise directed by law, upon the first day of January and July in each year, commencing with the first day of July next, or within thirty days from and after the days specified, make to the Secretary of the Interior, in such form as he shall prescribe, a return in writing, embracing all the fees and emoluments of their respective offices, of every name and character, distinguishing the fees and emoluments received or payable under the bankrupt act, from those received or payable for any other service; and in the case of a marshal, further distinguishing the fees and emoluments received or payable for services by himself personally rendered, from those received or payable for services rendered by a deputy; and also distinguishing the fees and emoluments received or payable for services rendered by each deputy, by name, and the proportion of such fees and emoluments which, by the terms of his service, each deputy is to receive; and also embracing all the necessary office expenses of such officer, together with the vouchers for the payment of the same for the half year ending on the said first day of January or July, as the case may be, which return shall be, in all cases, verified by the oath of the officer making the same. And no district attorney shall be allowed by the said Secretary of the Interior to retain of the fees and emoluments of his said office, for his own personal compensation, over and above his necessary office expenses, the necessary clerk hire included, to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $6,000 per year, and at and after that rate for such time as he shall hold the office; and no clerk of a district court, or clerk of a circuit court, shall be allowed by the said Secretary to retain of the fees and emoluments of his said office, or, in case both of the said clerkships shall be held by the same person, of the said offices, for his own personal compensation, over and above the necessary expenses of his office and necessary clerk hire included, also to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $3,500 per year for any such district clerk, or circuit clerk, or at and after that rate for such time as he shall hold the office; and no marshal shall be allowed by the said Secretary to retain of the fees and emoluments of his said office, for his own personal compensation, over and above a proper allowance to his deputies, which shall in no case exceed three-fourths of the fees and emoluments received as payable for the services rendered by the deputy to whom the allowance is made, and may be reduced below that rate by the said Secretary of the Interior whenever the return shall show that rate of allowance to be unreasonable, and over and above the necessary office expenses of the said marshal, the necessary clerk hire included, also to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $5,000 per year, or at and after that rate for such time as he shall hold the office; and every such officer shall, with each such return made by him, pay into the Treasury of the United States, or deposit to the credit of the Treasurer thereof, as he may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior, any surplus of the fees and emoluments of his office, which his half-yearly return so made as aforesaid shall show to exist over and above the compensation and allowances hereinbefore authorized to be retained and paid by him. And in every case where the return of any such officer shall show that a surplus may exist, the said Secretary of the Interior shall cause such returns to be carefully examined, and the accounts of disbursements to be regularly audited by the proper officers of his department, and an account to be opened with such officer in proper books to be provided for that purpose, and the allowances for personal compensation for each calendar year shall be made from the fees and emoluments of that year, and not otherwise: And provided further, That nothing in any existing law of Congress authorizing the payment of a per diem compensation to a district attorney, clerk of a district court, or clerk of a circuit court, or marshal, or deputy marshal, for attendance upon the district or circuit courts during their sittings, shall be so construed as to authorize any such payment to any one of those officers for attendance upon either of those courts while sitting for the transaction of business under the bankrupt law merely, or for any portion of the time for which either of the said courts may be held open or in session by the authority conferred in that law; and no such charge, in an account of any such officer, shall be certified as payable, or shall be allowed and paid out of the money hereinbefore appropriated for defraying the expenses of the courts of the United States. And no per diem or other allowance shall be made to any such officer for attendance at rule days of the circuit or district courts; and when the circuit and district courts sit at the same time, no greater per diem or other allowance shall be made to any such officer than for an attendance on one court. The two last provisions of paragraph 157 of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, approved May 18, 1843, which requires clerks to certify accounts, and confine the marshals, clerks, and district attorneys of the northern and southern districts of New York to the fees allowed by the State law to clerks, attorneys, counsellors, and sheriffs, for similar services in the State courts, are hereby repealed."

12. In the clause relating to commissioners' fees, insert the following as an additional item, viz:

"For attending to a reference in a litigated matter, in a civil cause at law, in equity, or in admiralty, in pursuance of an order of court, three dollars per day."

13. Add to the same clause, as an additional paragraph, the following, viz:

"For issuing any warrant under the tenth article of the treaty of the 5th August, 1843, between the United States and the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, against any person charged with any of the crimes or offences set forth in said article, two dollars; and the same sum for any warrant issued under the provisions of the convention for the surrender of criminals, between the United States and the King of the French, concluded at Washington on the 9th of November, 1843; and for hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any offense or crime, and arrested under the provisions of said treaty or convention, five dollars per day for the time necessarily employed."

14. In the following clause, viz:

"No district attorney, marshal, or clerk, shall receive any other or greater compensation for any services rendered by him than is provided in this act; and all acts and parts of acts, allowing to either of them any other or greater fees than is herein provided, are hereby repealed, and to receive any other or greater compensation is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor. But this shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of any salary authorized by statute."

After the word "clerk" insert "or their deputies," and after the word "misdemeanor" insert the following, viz:

"And if any officer hereinbefore mentioned, or his deputy, shall, by reason or color of his office, willfully and corruptly demand and receive any other or greater fees than those allowed in this act, he shall, on conviction thereof in any court of the United States, forfeit and pay a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court before whom the conviction shall lie."

15. In the following clause, viz:

"No writ shall be necessary to bring into court any prisoner or person in custody, or for remanding him from the court into custody; but the same shall be done on the parole order of the court or district attorney, for which no fee shall be charged by the clerk or marshal."

Strike out the word "parol."

The SPEAKER. All the amendments of the committee having been disposed of, the question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to lay the bill upon the table, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STANLY. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. JENKINS and FOWLER were appointed; and the House being divided they reported—yeas 36, noes not counted. So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to lie upon the table, and there were—yeas 40, nays 112, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Barrere, Bowie, Bowne, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Fowler, Gorman, Hammond, Haswell, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Jenkins, Landry, Letcher, Martin, McCorkle, McMullin, Minor, Morehead, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Taylor, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Welch, Wells, and Addison White—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Aiken, William Appleton, Averett, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhausa, Bragg, Breton, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chapman, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Coleock, Callom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Picklen, Florence, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Centre, Gilmore, Goodenow, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hearn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Mason, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Newton, Olds, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Savage, Searcy, Origin S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Abram P. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Sweetser, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, Watkins, Wilcox, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—112.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Several MEMBERS. Let us go through with this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must first ask for action upon the resolution which was offered on yesterday, to close the five minutes debate upon the civil and diplomatic bill.

CLOSE OF THE FIVE MINUTES DEBATE.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] asks that the motion made by him on yesterday, by unanimous consent be acted upon. If there be no objection the vote will be taken upon that proposition.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the five minutes rule, so far as the same relates to the bill of the House No. 196, be suspended within thirty minutes after the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of said bill.

Mr. McMULLIN. I shall object to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The objection comes too late.

Mr. McMULLIN. I made my objection to the resolution so soon as I heard it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain for a single moment. It is not the fault of the Chair if gentlemen do not hear what is going on. At least they will agree that they must divide the responsibility with the Chair. When the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] rose yesterday and demanded action upon the motion which the House agreed, by unanimous consent, he should introduce, the Chair responded by saying if there was no objection action would be had upon that proposition, and he paused for a reply. There being none, the Chair said that there being no objection the vote will be taken upon the proposition. The resolution, therefore, is fairly before the House.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was taken, and the resolution was not laid upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 196, "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1853, and for other purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the committee, that, through inadvertence yesterday, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTER], submitted an amendment to an amendment, which was not exactly in the form in which it could be properly made to the amendment that was then pending before the committee. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] had submitted the following amendment, as an additional section:

Be it further enacted, That all clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers, employed at an annual salary, or in temporary positions in the Executive and legislative Departments of the Government, in the city of Washington, whose compensation does not exceed $2,000 per annum, shall, in addition, be allowed the following annual increase of compensation, commencing from the first day of the last fiscal year, viz: all whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,200, twenty per cent., &c.

I have merely read this part of the amendment to show the application of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTER.] The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] was also amended upon a motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN.] Then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] submitted a motion to strike out all the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY], which relates to the salaries of clerks exceeding $1,000. The Chair was of the opinion that $1,000 was specified in the amendment. Upon that proposition the committee voted, and the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] was adopted. It is impossible, in construing the amendment adopted upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, to leave anything remaining of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. To obviate the difficulty in which the committee seem to be involved, the Chair rules, that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, and adopted, was a substantial rejection or striking out of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY.]

Mr. GENTRY. I acquiesce in that decision of the Chair very readily. I understand its effect to be, to have stricken out all after the enacting clause in the section which I offered as an amendment. It therefore makes a blank. I propose to fill that blank with a proposition which I have placed in the hands of the Clerk. It is a modification of the original proposition to this extent. It is applicable only to clerks having a salary not exceeding $1,500 per annum. It excludes all in the original amendment above that.

Mr. HENN. I would inquire of the Chair if the striking out of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] carries with it the rejection of the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN?]

The CHAIRMAN. It carries the whole of it.

Mr. GENTRY. My proposition, as now submitted, proposes to increase the compensation of the employees of the Government in this city, whose present compensation does not exceed $1,200 a year, 20 per cent., and over $1,200, and not more than $1,500, 15 per cent. I make this modification of my original proposition to meet the views of gentlemen to whom it is more acceptable in this shape than the original shape. I would myself prefer it as it was; but this is so reasonable and so just, that I hope, without further debate, it will be unanimously adopted.

Mr. GENTRY's amendment was then read by the Clerk as follows:

Be it further enacted, That the clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers, employed at an annual salary, or holding temporary positions in the executive and legislative Departments in the Government in the city of Washington, whose compensation does not exceed $1,500 per annum, shall, in addition thereto, be allowed the following annual increase of compensation, commencing from the first day of the last fiscal year, viz: All whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,200, 20 per cent., and all whose annual compensation exceeds $1,200, and does not exceed $1,500, an addition of 15 per cent., and that the amount of increased compensation provided for in this section, shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to make an inquiry. I understand this proposition to allow this increase from the beginning of the last fiscal year. I think the fiscal year commences the 1st of July. Is it designed that this shall commence one year ago last July? I wish to understand that.

Mr. GENTRY. Undoubtedly that is the effect of the amendment, and that is the intention. It is to give some relief for the state of things here, which will not be efficiently reached if you do not give it this shape.

Mr. McMULLIN. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman will suspend, for the purpose of enabling the committee to retrace, to some extent, the steps taken on yesterday. The Chair asks the gentleman to withhold his amendment for a moment, to let the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] propose the amendment that was adopted yesterday as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY.]

Mr. McMULLIN. Very well, sir, if I can retain the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. Was that amendment of the gentleman from New York cut off by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTER,] which was to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY?]

It did not propose to touch the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I think that has already been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was to strike out all except that which relates to the $1,000 clerks, and the amendment of the gentleman from New York had been adopted and incorporated in the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, and was therefore stricken out, and the Chair has now awarded the floor to the gentleman from New York, for the purpose of endeavoring to obviate the difficulty.

Mr. DEAN. I now offer the same amendment that I offered yesterday, and which was adopted by the committee, but stricken out, I suppose, by inadvertence, with an addition.

The amendment was read as follows:

Provided, That this section shall not extend to any person receiving a salary for discharging the duties of more than one office at the same time, or to any person who does not actually discharge the duties of the office for which he receives such salary, or to any person engaged in prosecuting any claim other than his own before any of the Departments or Congress; and that in case any pay or accounting officer of the Government shall pay such additional percentage to any such person, it shall be a misdemeanor in the person knowingly paying or receiving such additional percentage, rendering each liable to indictment and punishment by fine or imprisonment.

Mr. DEAN. I offer this amendment; and I ask, in addition, so to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, after the word "Washington," as to limit it to men having families for which they have to provide.

Mr. GENTRY. I would suggest to the honorable gentleman, that the best form to give to the last amendment indicated by him, would be a proviso to this effect:

Provided, That no bachelors shall receive the benefits of this section. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEAN. At the suggestion of some of my friends here, I will not embarrass this amendment by this addition, because some of my bachelor friends around me do not like to vote for it. I now ask that a vote may be taken upon this amendment, for I do not wish to occupy further the time of the committee.

The question being upon Mr. DEAN's amendment to the amendment, Mr. HEBARD demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. GOODENOW, and JOHNSON of Arkansas, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 62.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRENTON. I believe at this stage of the proceedings that the amendment I offered yesterday is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. On yesterday, when a question of order was raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRENTON] had sent to the Chair an amendment which he then designed offering, and it was about being read. The Chair asks the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] to yield the floor that we may have an opportunity of placing things in statu quo in which they were yesterday.

Mr. BRENTON. I propose, sir, to strike out from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, all after the enacting clause, and to insert the section which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment as follows:

And that from and after the 4th day of March, 1853, it shall be the duty of each the heads of the Executive Departments of the Government so to arrange and classify the clerkships in said Departments as to make three several classes, according to the nature of the business, in which said clerks are employed, and the qualifications required for the same.

The said clerks to serve in their respective classes for the term of four years, and all vacancies occurring, by removal or otherwise, in either of the higher classes, shall be filled from the class next below it, and no clerk shall serve in any one of the Departments for a longer period than twelve years. The compensation of the first or lower class of clerks shall be $1,300 per annum; of the second class, $1,500 per annum; of the third class, $1,800 per annum. And no removals shall be made except for incompetency, or cause shown to the satisfaction of the President of the United States. And in the selection of said clerks, they shall, as far as practicable, be taken from the several States and Territories, in proportion to the number of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates from each in the Thirty-third Congress.

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 3d day of March, 1853, all laws now in force, providing for the compensation of members of Congress, and Delegates from Territories, shall be and the same are hereby repealed.

And be it further enacted, That from and after said day, there shall be paid to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, a salary for his services of $2,000 per annum, one half thereof to be paid upon his attendance at the first session of Congress, begun in any year, and the other half at the end of the same session; and, in addition, each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall, for traveling, be paid, at the beginning and end of each session of Congress, twenty cents for each mile of distance between his residence and the Capitol—on a straight line to be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That no payment shall be made to any Senator for attending a called session of the Senate, to act in Executive business, at a time when the House of Representatives is not in session.

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct from the compensation to be paid as aforesaid, at the end of the session, ten dollars for each day the member or Delegate may have been absent from his seat during the sitting of the House of which he is a member, unless such absence was occasioned by his sickness, or the sickness of his wife or child.

Each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall state at the end of each session how many days he hath so absented himself, and verify his statement on oath, and if any Senator, Representative, or Delegate shall refuse to furnish such statement, no payment shall then be made to him.

Mr. HALL. I hold in my hand an amendment which I ask the gentleman from Indiana to accept as a modification of his amendment.

Mr. BRENTON. My time is so short that I prefer not to yield.

Mr. HALL. I hope the gentleman will hear the modification, and accept it.

Mr. BRENTON. I cannot, for I have not time. The object of the substitute which I proposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is designed to secure what every gentleman upon this floor will acknowledge is needed in connection with the several Departments, and that is permanency; and the only mode by which permanency in the business can be secured will be by a classification of the clerks in the different Departments. It is designed to accomplish not only permanency, but to destroy, in addition to that, all sectionalism in the selection of the clerks who fill offices in the Departments. That much I have only time to say in reference to the first part of my amendment. In reference to the sections which follow, they address themselves to the judgment of every gentleman upon the floor.

The country is satisfied as well as ourselves, that we are fast approximating to the period when Congress will be in session from year to year, and that something must be done in order to curtail the length of the sessions. The dissatisfaction in reference to what is called the mileage question, prevails in every part of the land. As it now stands, a charge of forty cents per mile is made, and it is left to the discretion of the member to fix the number of miles he shall travel from his home to the Capitol. The object of the amendment is to reduce one half the amount of compensation allowed for mileage, and then to leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the distance in a direct line from the residence of each member to the Capitol. This will give him ample compensation for the purpose of meeting all his traveling expenses.

The last amendment is designed to secure punctuality upon the part of members. What is the fact? During the present session, instead of having here two hundred and thirty-one members as we should have had, the average attendance from the beginning of the session to the present time has been about one hundred and sixty-five. The residue have been absent. How often do we find ourselves without a quorum—not only in the House, but in committee? If, sir, we have nerve enough to come up to the work and adopt this system, we shall not be under the necessity of reporting on the Journals from time to time, so many absentees, either in committee or in the House. I do not design to occupy the attention of the committee, but merely to bring the matter before the House as an outline of the principles that should be established in order to remedy the evil; for we all acknowledge there is a disease, and we should go to work and find out an appropriate remedy.

If I have failed to ascertain the remedy in the proposition I have submitted, I shall most cheerfully acquiesce and unite with any gentleman in a proposition calculated to accomplish the same object.

Mr. HALL. I now ask the gentleman from Indiana to accept the following amendment, which the Clerk will read, as a modification of his own.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the Administration should of course look among those who approve its policy for agents to carry it into execution.

Mr. BRENTON. I would accept of that, but my object is to break down party spirit as much as possible.

Mr. HALL. I only wished to remark that I am very sorry the gentleman from Indiana should thus early in the action repudiate the great leader of the Whig party. The proposition which I have sent to the Clerk's table, is in the exact language of General Scott. [Laughter.]

Mr. GENTRY. I desire to suggest whether that amendment is in order? It proposes a radical change in the whole policy of the Government with regard to the payment of its officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment to be in order.

Mr. FOWLER. Before the question is put, I wish the amendment may again be read, so that we may understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

The question now being upon Mr. BRENTON's amendment to the amendment—

Mr. BRENTON demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

The question being taken upon the amendment to the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN offered the following as an amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That all clerks residing in the District of Columbia receiving salaries of $1,000, and less, shall be paid an addition of fifteen per cent. upon their said salaries: And Provided further, That all clerks receiving over $1,000, and not more than $1,200, shall be paid ten per cent. upon their said salaries—said clerks residing in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McM. said: I desire that the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] and those who have acted with him, if they really desire to meet the additional expenses imposed upon the clerks because of the increased prices of provisions, and so forth, shall come forward now and sustain this proposition, which carries upon its face fair terms of compromise. I propose that the lowest class of clerks—those receiving $1,000 a year—shall receive fifteen per cent. additional, which will amount to $150 upon their salaries. I ask if that is not enough to meet the additional expenses of living and house rent? Gentlemen will remember that there are a great many clerks who receive only $1,000. There are a good many, also, who receive $1,100, and some who receive $1,150. I propose to give to these men, and to the $1,200 clerks, an addition of ten per cent., which will be an increase of $160 upon their salaries. Sir, this proposition addresses itself to the justice of this House. I ask the House and the country if the additions proposed in it are not enough to meet the additional cost?—

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the resolution of the House for closing the five minute's debate has arrived.

Mr. McMULLIN. Yes, but I obtained the floor some time since, and yielded it as an act of courtesy, at the request of the Chair. I think, therefore, that I am entitled to my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in the power of the Chair to permit the gentleman to proceed.

Mr. GENTRY. Did I understand the Chair to say that the time had expired during which debate was allowed?

The CHAIRMAN. It has expired.

Mr. GENTRY. Well, I hope that the friends of the original amendment will reject all amendments to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know of the gentleman from Virginia where he designs his amendment to come in?

Mr. McMULLIN. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment; and I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and incorporate it as a part of my amendment.

Mr. GENTRY. I understand the gentleman to offer a series of provisos as a substitute for the section which I have offered.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that his amendment as it now stands would exclude all those clerks who reside in Georgetown. I believe his amendment is confined to clerks residing in the city of Washington.

Mr. GENTRY. I have no objection to modify my amendment so as to say "in the District of Columbia."

The question was then taken upon Mr. McMULLIN's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I offer the amendment to the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk. But before it is read I wish to make an appeal to my colleague to accept it as a part of his proposition. It will give strength to his proposition; and the class of individuals to whom it relates ought to be provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The Clerk then read Mr. JOHNSON's amendment to the amendment, as follows:

And that twenty per cent. be added to the per diem or monthly pay of all the employees of the Government engaged in any branch of mechanics or at common labor.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. The workingman has a mighty little chance here.

Mr. FLORENCE. I send to the Clerk's table what I desire to offer as an amendment to the amendment. It will appeal to the warmest sympathies of every man here.

[Loud shouts of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must bear in mind that no debate is in order. Nothing can be said in explanation of the amendment.

Mr. FLORENCE. When gentlemen hear my proposition read, they will regret having called me to order.

[Loud shouts of "Order!"]

The Clerk then read Mr. FLORENCE's amendment, as follows:

That the prices now paid to all sewing women in the employment of the Government of the United States, working upon army clothing, or any other of the supplies usually provided under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, and produced mainly by female labor, be increased twenty-five per cent.

The question was then put upon Mr. FLORENCE's amendment to the amendment, and on a division, the chairman announced—ayes 71, noes 79.

Mr. ORR demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. LANDRY and MOLONY were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred upon Mr. GENTRY's amendment as amended.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $1,500, and all that appertains to it.

Mr. GENTRY. I understand the proposition of the gentleman to be, simply to confine the operation of this section to those clerks whose salaries do not exceed $1,200. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. SWEETSER demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HART, and FULLER of Maine, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 63.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the close of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee:

That William H. Minnix shall receive from the present Congress, the same compensation received by the engraving clerks of the House of Representatives, in lieu of his present pay; that the messengers of the House shall receive the same compensation allowed to the messengers of the Senate, in lieu of their present pay; that John D. Ott, Henry McLaughlin, and John C. Mulloy, folders in the document room, shall receive $2 50 per day each from the commencement of the present session.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "last," and inserting "present" in lieu thereof, so that this addition to the compensation shall commence at the beginning of the present fiscal year, instead of at the commencement of the last.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HALL. I now move to amend the amendment, by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That no clerk shall receive a salary of more than $1,400 per annum under this section.

Mr. McMULLIN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. GOODENOW and BEALE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 61.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. I offer the following amendment, which is always put in clauses, increasing the salaries of clerks:

Provided, further, That the appropriations in this section shall not apply to any person whose compensation has been increased at the present session of Congress.

This proviso has been in all the laws passed by Congress for increasing the salaries of clerks.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AVERETT. I move to strike out the first proviso to this section.

Mr. GENTRY. That proviso has been inserted by a vote of the committee, and I presume that it is not in order to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. MASON. Is it in order to amend the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following amendment:

Provided, That the increased compensation made to the officers and employees of the Government and the House of Representatives by this bill, shall cease on the 4th of March, 1853.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That no person shall receive a salary of more than $1,200 per annum under this section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon Mr. GENTRY's amendment as amended.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. I now ask that the amendment shall be reported as it is amended.

It was reported by the Clerk, as follows:

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That the clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers employed at an annual salary, or in temporary positions, in the executive and legislative Departments of the Government, in the city of Washington, whose compensation does not exceed $1,200 per annum, shall, in addition thereto, be allowed the following annual increase of compensation, commencing from the first day of the present fiscal year, viz: All whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,200 shall, in addition thereto, be allowed an increased compensation of twenty per cent., and that the same shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That this section shall not extend to any person receiving a salary for discharging the duties of more than one office at the same time, or to any person who does not actually discharge the duties of the office for which he receives such salary, or to any person engaged in prosecuting any claim, other than his own, before any of the Departments or Congress; and that in case any pay or accounting officer of the Government shall pay such additional per centage to any such person, it shall be a misdemeanor in the person knowingly paying or receiving such additional per centage, rendering each liable to indictment and punishment by fine or imprisonment: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any person whose compensation has been increased at the present session of Congress.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know of the Chair, or of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] who offered this amendment, whether it will apply to the clerks residing in Alexandria and Georgetown?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must recollect that discussion is not in order.

Mr. GENTRY. I will reply to the gentleman that it does include those clerks.

Mr. GORMAN. I have an amendment that I want to offer to this amendment. I move to insert the words "and pages," so as to provide that this increased compensation shall also extend to the pages of the House.

A MEMBER. They will get theirs at the end of the session. Do not encumber this section with that amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. They will never get it, unless they get it now. Everybody is in but the pages. I want a vote upon my amendment.

The question was put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question again recurring upon the adoption of the amendment of Mr. GENTRY as amended,

Mr. FULLER, of Maine, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. FOWLER, and ALLEN of Illinois were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes not counted.

So the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following as an independent section:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That hereafter all customs, duties, or imposts, collected at any custom-house, or at any port of entry in the United States, upon goods, wares, merchandise, or other articles upon which customs, duties, or imposts, are collectable by existing laws, shall be collected upon a valuation to be ascertained as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury, with the aid of the appraisers, shall annually cause to be ascertained the average value of all such goods, wares, merchandise, or other articles subject to duties at the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Charleston, and New Orleans. And that upon such valuation hereafter all duties, customs, or imposts, upon all such goods, wares, merchandise, or other articles, shall be collected at all the ports of entry, and at all custom-houses in the United States, until otherwise provided by law, and that all provisions of existing laws in relation to the imposition of duties, customs, or imposts, inconsistent herewith, are hereby repealed.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the amendment is not in order, not being germane to any part of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the point of order shall be stated fully.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask that the 131st and 132d rules of the House be read.

They were read by the Clerk, as follows:

"131. No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people, shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House."

"132. No sum or quantum of tax or duty voted by a Committee of the Whole House shall be increased in the House until the motion for such increase shall be first discussed and voted in a Committee of the Whole House, and so in respect to the time of its continuance."

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I now wish to hear the point of order stated distinctly. This amendment does not provide for any tax in any shape or form.

Mr. FULLER. My point is that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] rises to a point of order that the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES] is not in order. The Chair decides, in accordance with a decision made the other day—for he does not consider this proposition materially variant or differing from the proposition brought by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the other day—that this amendment is not in order.

As reference was made the other day to a section contained in the civil and diplomatic bill passed in 1846, the Chair has had occasion to examine that question, and finds that the section to which reference was then made, was not first adopted by the House as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill, but was first adopted in the Senate, having been presented by Mr. Evans, then a Senator from Maine, and incorporated in the civil and diplomatic bill. At that time there were rules differing from those now in force in the House. At the last session of Congress amendments proposing a method of valuation of imports were proposed to the civil and diplomatic bill in the House. The point was then made, and sustained by the decision of the Chair, that the amendments were not in order. An appeal was taken from that decision, and upon two propositions similar to this, which were then made, the committee sustained the decision of the Chair. For these reasons, in addition to those assigned the other day, the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I take an appeal from that decision, and call for tellers upon it. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FULLER, of Maine, and JONES, of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers first announced—ayes 58, noes 72. Several other gentlemen then passed between the tellers, and were announced as they passed through.

The CHAIRMAN then announced the vote—ayes 80, noes 78.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Mistake!" and "Recount!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers first announced 58 in the affirmative, then 9 more, afterwards 9 more, and again 4 more in the affirmative, making in all 80.

Mr. JONES. I first reported 58 in the affirmative, and afterwards 9 more. I did not report 9 more in addition to that. I said there were 9 more in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding of the Chair.

[Cries of "Recount!" "Recount!"]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that there be a recount. I believe I have the right to make the motion.

Mr. PRICE. I object to a recount. The tellers do not disagree.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question is, whether the number 9 should be counted twice in the affirmative.

Mr. JONES. I did not announce them twice in the affirmative.

[Cries of "Recount!" "Recount!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the tellers announce the vote?

Mr. FULLER. We did not keep the amount in the aggregate. We only announced the different numbers as they appeared.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a recount.

The CHAIRMAN. If the tellers cannot agree upon the vote, there must be a recount.

Mr. JONES. I can announce the vote.

The question was then again taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 81.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained by the committee, and the amendment was ruled to be out of order.

Mr. SMART submitted the following amendment:

SEC. 1. And be it further enacted, That no person at the head of either of the Departments, or of any of the executive Bureaus of the Government of the United States, no Senator or Representative in Congress, clerk in any of the Departments, or any officer or employee of either House of Congress, shall, directly or indirectly, during the time they may hold such office, prosecute any claim against the Government of the United States, before the executive Departments, executive Bureaus, or Congress, for any fee or reward. And if any person aforesaid shall prosecute any claim as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay a fine of $2,000, and also the amount of the fee charged for his services, one half to the informer and the other half to the Government, to be recovered by action of debt before any court of the United States.

Mr. MILLSON. I think that is precisely the same amendment which was ruled out of order yesterday.

Mr. SMART. It is not the same.

Mr. MILLSON. It is certainly the same in substance.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine involves precisely the same question as that presented by him the other day. The Chair then decided the amendment to be out of order, and he is of the same opinion now. He therefore sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.]

Mr. SMART. Will it be in order to offer it at the end of the section? It makes no appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware that it makes no appropriation, but it changes materially the existing laws of the Government.

The Chair on the other day ruled an amendment similar to this out of order, and he is of opinion that it is not in order now.

Mr. SMART. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and ask for tellers upon the appeal.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question now being "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" it was put and decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. FITCH offered the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for allowing compensation to the members of the Senate, members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to Delegates from the Territories, and repealing all other laws upon that subject,'" shall apply to Senators and members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories at all extra sessions of Congress, or of the Senate convened within ten days after the adjournment of a regular session.

Mr. FITCH. I desire that the law to which that amendment relates, be read at the Clerk's desk.

It was read, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, no member of the Senate shall be entitled to receive compensation for his attendance at the Senate in the recess of Congress, during such meeting of the Senate as may be called on the 4th day of March, 1853, or on the 4th day of March in every fourth year thereafter, other than the $8 per diem for attendance now allowed by law: Provided, This act shall not apply to a Senator not a member of either House of Congress at the expiration of the Congress preceding such called session of the Senate."

The object of my amendment is to prohibit constructive mileage under any and all circumstances at any session.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GORMAN offered the following amendment, to come in after the second section of the bill:

SEC. —. That the Recorder of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, do and perform all the legal duties formerly imposed upon the Solicitor of said office, by the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to reorganize the General Land Office," approved July 4, 1850; and that in addition to the salary now prescribed by law, he shall receive the sum of $500 per annum, commencing with the beginning of the last fiscal year.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk then read the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth sections of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the same amendment as before, with $1,000 inserted in the place of $500.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, offered the following amendment, to come in after the sixth section:

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, That the first and second provisions to the item or clause making an appropriation for continuing the construction of the custom house at New Orleans, of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending 30th June, 1852," approved March 3d, 1851, be and the same are hereby repealed.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM offered the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the assistant of the Superintendent of the Mail of the Exploring Expedition shall hereafter receive a compensation at the rate of seven hundred and one dollars per annum, to be paid out of the same fund out of which he is now paid.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. That same amendment, providing for the man who sweeps the room was voted down yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. It yesterday contained $700. To day it is $701.

Mr. STANLY. That amendment comes from the committee of Ways and Means, is sanctioned by them, and I think it should be adopted.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee rise, and report the bill to the House.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to go back in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not except by unanimous consent?

Mr. STANLY offered the following amendment:

For the completion of the hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, $8,970.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is a recurrence to former clauses in the bill, and it is not in order. If we allow that, we shall have to go back to every part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remark that you cannot go back upon the bill, except by the general consent of the committee. Objection being made the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. STANLY. Upon what ground?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the ground of irrelevancy.

Mr. STANLY. I offer it as an additional section to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, that will not change the point of order.

Mr. STANLY. Does the Chair rule it out of order, because it does not carry out a provision of law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that we have passed the point in the bill at which it might have been offered. We shall never finish the bill unless some rule of this kind be observed. There is a provision in the bill for the completion of marine hospitals, and after that clause of the bill was passed, the Chair ruled that amendments properly applicable to that clause of the bill at the time it was under consideration, could not be received or entertained by the committee afterwards. The Chair so ruled upon an amendment which was offered, proposing to amend the first clause of this bill, in relation to appropriations for the pay of the legislative department of the Government, but that amendment was received by universal consent.

Mr. PARKER offered the following amendment:

That from and after the passage of this act, the salary of each of the district judges of the United States shall be at least $2,000 per annum.

Mr. HOUSTON. That amendment has been ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled an amendment similar to this out of order; and he is still of the same opinion, and rules this out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. The Chair ruled the amendment to which he refers out of order, because it was offered at the wrong place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is offered at the wrong place now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question now being, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. GORMAN offered the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

Sec. — That the sum of $400 be appropriated to the second regiment of artillery, United States Army, for musical instruments lost or destroyed by casualties during the battles of Cerro Gordo and Molino del Rey, the soldiers of the band having been called into the ranks with muskets, and required to abandon their instruments, to be paid under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the adjutant of said regiment for the use of the regimental fund.

Mr. ORR. I raise a question of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment does not propose an appropriation to carry out the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, and therefore rules it out of order.

Mr. HEBARD. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to a verbal amendment which should be made to the bill, on the sixteenth page, line three hundred and twenty-nine, where the words "south-east" should be substituted for the words "north-west," in the provision for the building at the corner of F and Seventeenth streets.

Mr. ORR. That amendment can be made in the House as well as here.

Mr. HOUSTON. That building has always been described in appropriation bills, as it is here.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee (Mr. PHELPS) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 196, "making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, and for other purposes," and had directed him to report the bill, with sundry amendments, to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. Unless there be objection the usual course will be pursued, the amendments made by the Committee of the Whole will be read by the Clerk, and if any member desires a separate vote upon any one of them he will rise in his place and say so. Those to which there shall be no objection will then be voted upon in the gross.

There was no objection, and after the Clerk had read all the amendments, the question was put upon those to which there was no objection, and they were agreed to.

The Clerk then read the following amendment, upon which Mr. HOUSTON had asked a separate vote:

Add at the end of the clause—
"For supplying light houses containing 3,272 lamps with oil, tube glasses, wicks, bufskins, whiting, and cotton cloth, transportation and other expenses on the same, and for repairing and keeping in repair the lighting apparatus, $182,230 78."

—the following:
"And the President is hereby authorized and required to levy the same light duties and charges upon foreign vessels entering the ports and harbors of the United States, or passing the light houses thereof, as are charged by any corporation, or by any foreign Government, to the citizens or subjects of which such vessels may belong, upon vessels of the United States. The said money, when so collected, to be carried into the Treasury, and the amount thereof to be annually reported to Congress: Provided, That such duties shall not conflict with existing treaties."

Mr. HART demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HAMILTON and CHANDLER were appointed.

Mr. MILLSON demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was disagreed to—yeas 66, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barrere, Bennett, Bibbiana, Brenton, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Dawson, Dimmick, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Ficklin, Florence, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Gorman, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Hart, Hebard, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. Howe, Ingersoll, Andrew Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Mann, McNair, Miller, Miner, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Pennington, Perkins, Porter, Reed, Riddle, Schermerhorn, Schoonmaker, Skelton, Smart, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Strother, Sweetser, Taylor, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Wildrick, and Yates—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Beale, Bissell, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Cha-stain, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Goodenow, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Henn, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, Jackson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Martin, McCorkle, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Murphy, Orr, Phelps, Polk, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Ross, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, St. Martin, Stratton, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Watkins, Wilcox, and Woodward—81.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Pending the announcement of the above vote, Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, asked leave to vote, not having been within the bar when his name was called, but objection was made. He would have voted in the negative.

The question next recurred on the following amendment, which was agreed to:

"To carry into effect the act approved September 28, 1850, for the purchase of a cemetery near the city of Mexico, and the interment therein of the remains of the American officers and soldiers who fell in battle or otherwise, in or near the city of Mexico, the sum of $3,000, which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended for this purpose, under the direction of the President of the United States. And the interment of citizens of the United States, who have heretofore died, or who may hereafter die in Mexico, may be made in said cemetery, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President of the United States."

The next amendment upon which a separate vote was asked by Mr. HOUSTON, was read and agreed to, as follows:

"On page thirty-one, strike from the following clause '$3,000,' and in lieu thereof insert '$5,000.'"
"For salary of the Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, $3,000."

The Clerk read the following amendment, upon which a separate vote was asked by Mr. HEBARD:

"In the following clause insert after the word 'salary,' the words 'and outfit,' and strike out '$6,000,' and insert in its stead '$18,000:'"

"For salary of a Commissioner to reside in China, including the additional compensation under the act to carry into effect certain provisions in the treaties between the United States and China and the Ottoman Porte, $6,000."

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to—yeas 122, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Bacoek, Thomas H. Bayly, Bennett, Bibbiana, Bissell, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Cha-stain, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Colcock, Dawson, Disney, Doty, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fitch, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haven, Henn, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Martin, McCorkle, McQueen, Meade, Miller, Millson, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Phelps, Polk, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoonmaker, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Alexander D. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Sweetser, Taylor, Thurston, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wilcox, Woodward, and Yates—122.

NAYS—Messrs. Barrere, Beale, Brenton, Buell, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Floyd, Fowler, Harper, Hebard, Hibbard, John W. Howe, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, Mace, Mann, McMullin, Andrew Parker, Perkins, Reed, Ross, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, and Wildrick—27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following amendment was read, Mr. BROOKS having asked a separate vote upon it:

After the provision for the salary of the consul general at Alexandria, insert as follows:

"To compensate Dabney S. Carr, for expenses incurred while in the diplomatic service of the country, to be allowed in the settlement of his accounts with the Government, $7,144."

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk next read the following amendment, to come in after line eight hundred and thirty-four: "For the repairs of the two bridges over the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, $4,999."

The question was put: and, upon a division, there were—yeas 60—

Mr. FICKLIN demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STEPHENS, of Georgia, and HAMILTON were appointed.

The question was again put, and the amendment was agreed to—the tellers having reported—yeas 74, nays 44.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and, upon a division, there were—yeas 41—

Mr. ORR demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were demanded, but not ordered.

The question was again put, and the House refused to adjourn.

The following amendment, to come in after the one just adopted, was next read by the Clerk:

"That the bridges across the Potomac and Eastern Branch thereof be surrendered to the authorities of the District of Columbia."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to; there being—yeas 64, nays 60.

The Clerk read the following amendment, to come in after line eight hundred and seventy-six; upon which Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, asked a separate vote:

"For refunding to the State of Michigan the amount of money advanced by said State in organizing, subsisting, and transporting volunteers previous to their being mustered into the service of the United States during the late war with Mexico, together with the interest on such sum at six per cent. per annum, $20,000; which said sum, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to pay and cancel the claim of said State, as presented, and now on file in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, together with interest as aforesaid, on said claim from the time said advances were made by said State, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Governor or other proper officer of the said State of Michigan."

Mr. STANLY demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GENTRY. There are very many important amendments yet to be considered, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the House refused to adjourn.

The following amendment, to come in after line eight hundred and seventy-six, was next read:

"To refund to the State of North Carolina the amount of money advanced and transportation furnished to volunteers from that State during the late war with Mexico, the sum $5,382 53, with interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the first day of March, in the year 1847, until paid."

Mr. STANLY. This passed the Senate last year. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was disagreed to; the tellers having reported—yeas 31, nays not counted.

The question was then put upon the following amendment, and it was agreed to, viz:

"For the construction and equipment of not less than six revenue cutters, the sum of $50,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The following amendment was next read by the Clerk:

"To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to deliver to each of the members and Delegates of the present Congress, who have not already received them, such books as have been furnished to members of the Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, and Thirty-first Congresses, which were ordered by resolution of the House, July 26th, 1852, $115,800: Provided, That the account for the purchase of said books be audited, as usual, by the Committee on Accounts: Provided, further, That report shall be made in detail at the commencement of the next session of Congress of the mode and manner of purchase of the books, and whence they are obtained."

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays upon the amendment; which were not ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, and FOWLER were appointed.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to; the tellers having reported—yeas 77, nays 47.

The House proceeded next to consider the amendment of Mr. GENTRY, as amended, [inserted in a preceding column,] allowing to clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers employed in the executive and legislative Departments of the Government, whose compensation does not exceed

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 138.

$1,200, an increase of twenty per cent., and prohibiting the same persons receiving two salaries.

Mr. HOUSTON demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

Mr. SKELTON demanded tellers; which were also not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment of the bill. Shall the bill be read a third time?

There being no objection, the bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. VENABLE. Is the bill engrossed?

The SPEAKER. The bill is not engrossed. The Chair thinks that the objection to the engrossment of the bill, under our practice, has come too late, for the reason that the Chair inquired of the House whether the bill should be read a third time. It is competent for the House to determine when the bill shall be read. The Chair at that time heard no objection whatever.

Mr. VENABLE. I make no objection.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. HOUSTON demanded the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. McMULLIN demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill; but they were refused.

Mr. DEAN demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANLY. Before the House adjourns, I desire the Chair to supply the vacancy upon the select committee in regard to the discovery of etherization, occasioned by the death of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Rantoul.] I make the motion that the vacancy be supplied by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it has been the universal practice for the Chair to supply a vacancy without a motion. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] for calling his attention to the subject, and he will supply the place to-morrow.

On motion by Mr. FOWLER, the House then adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 12, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. WALKER presented four petitions of citizens of New York, praying that the public lands may be granted in limited quantities to actual settlers not possessed of other land; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of the United States, residing in New York, praying that the "homestead bill" may become a law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWARD. I am requested to present to the Senate the memorial of the Scandinavian Society, of the city of New York and its vicinity, in which they state that Mr. Christian Hansen, of the city of Brooklyn, State of New York, proposes to the United States Government to contract for carrying the mails between that city and Gluckstadt, in Holstein, by the way of Rotterdam, and to have the ocean postage on that line reduced to ten cents per single letter. In this memorial they set forth the great importance of the establishment of such a line and of such a reduction of postage. The subject is, I believe, under the consideration of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I move that the memorial be referred to that committee.

It was so referred.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a memorial of claimants under the convention between the United States and Brazil of 27th of January, 1849, praying an appropriation to pay the awards made by the commissioner appointed for the settlement of their claims; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HUNTER presented a memorial of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company, praying an appropriation by Congress to repair the Long Bridge across the Potomac river; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMLIN presented twenty-one petitions of merchants, ship-masters, and others, citizens of Maine, praying that such beacons, spindles, and buoys, may be placed on the Muscle Ridges as will render the navigation safe and easy; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of inhabitants and merchants of the city of Boston; a petition of inhabitants of Swampscot, in Lynn, Massachusetts; a petition of inhabitants of Nahant, in Lynn, Massachusetts; and a petition of the citizens of Lynn, Massachusetts; stating that there is urgent need of a light-house on the coast of Lynn, at the outer entrance of Boston Harbor, for the safety of shipping and the protection of the lives of mariners—that many vessels have been wrecked, and many lives lost near that place within the few past years, and earnestly praying that Congress will grant an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a light-house on Egg Rock, near Nahant; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FALLS OF THE OHIO.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a motion that five thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Roads and Canals, in relation to the construction of a canal, and the establishment of an armory and foundry, at the Falls of the Ohio river, and the relinquishment of the stock held by the United States in the Louisville and Portland canal, be printed for the use of the Senate, reported in favor of printing the same; which was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CITY WATER COMPANY.

Mr. SHIELDS, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the Washington City Water Company; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

GENERAL SCOTT AND GENERAL PIERCE.

Mr. MERIWETHER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate what amount of public money has been paid to General Winfield Scott and General Franklin Pierce, respectively, from the time of their first entrance into the public service up to the present date; distinguishing between regular and extra compensation; also, for what said amounts were paid, whether for pay proper, rations, forage, horses, mileage, transportation, servants, quarters, fuel, medical attendance, or commutation for any of the preceding items. Also, that he inform the Senate what amount of extra compensation has been claimed by either, the items of each and every such claim when first presented, and when and by whom allowed, or rejected, and the official reasons given at the time for such allowance or rejection, and whether any item or items, claim or claims, once disallowed, were subsequently presented for payment; and if so, how often, and when, and if subsequently allowed or paid, by whom, and when, and the amounts thereof, and the reasons for such allowance and the amounts thereof. And that he also inform the Senate whether either of the above-named generals has received from the public Treasury pay or emoluments for discharging the duties of more than one office or employment at the same time; and if so, what offices or employments, and the amount of such pay and emoluments, and the time when paid; and whether any claim or claims have been presented for the discharge of the duties of two or more offices or employments at the same time by either of them, and disallowed, and if so, by whom disallowed, when, and for what reasons then given. And that he also inform the Senate whether either of the above-named generals has ever, under color of charging for percentage, or for extra compensation, or for any other reason or reasons, or in any manner or form, applied to his own use, or retained in his hands, any of the public funds, or property, without authority of law, and if so, when, and the amount or value thereof; and whether the amount thus applied or retained, or any part thereof, has ever been repaid to the United States, and if so, what amount, and when so repaid; and whether any amount of public money, or property, which has ever come to the hands or possession of either of them, remains unaccounted for, and if so, in whose hands, and how much.

MILITARY BALANCES DUE.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the payment of such balance as has been reported by the late Secretary of War, Mr. Poinsett, to be due to Massachusetts and Maine for disbursements made in behalf of the United States during the war of 1812.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN MEMPHIS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the United States own some ten or twelve acres of land in the city of Memphis. The corporation of that city own some ten or twelve acres, upon which they have a hospital. Upon the ground owned by the United States an arsenal was built. The citizens of Memphis have petitioned that the United States should convey them the land which the Government owns, and upon which the arsenal was erected. The Committee on Public Lands, taking that petition into consideration, have directed me to make a report, accompanied by a bill, which provides that the title of the Government to its land may be conveyed to the corporate authorities of the city of Memphis, upon condition that the city of Memphis will convey to the United States the land, about equal in quantity, that they own upon which the hospital has been erected. The object of the committee being to convert the hospital now belonging to the city of Memphis into a marine hospital, the property of the United States. I am directed to report a bill upon that subject, and I have made this statement at the request of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] who has a great anxiety that the Senate should consider the bill now, and pass it if they approve of it.

The bill, which is entitled "A bill to convey certain land to the city of Memphis on certain conditions," was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, may I ask the Senate to consider that bill now? It is a very simple one. I do not know that the corporation of Memphis will accept the proposition, but I desire to give them an opportunity of doing so. The circumstances are these: The Government of the United States own about ten acres of land within the city of Memphis upon which an arsenal was built many years ago, but which has long since ceased to be used by the Government at all. The houses that were erected upon it are going into decay and dilapidation, and the property is certainly worthless to the Government for any purpose for which it was originally constructed.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend his remarks until the bill is read a second time.

No objection was made, and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to enact that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, in behalf of the United States, to convey to the corporation of the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, all the ground, with its appurtenances, owned by the United States in the corporate limits of the said city, upon which heretofore an arsenal has been erected, whenever the corporate authorities of said city shall convey to the United States, with the assent of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, a good and valid title to twelve acres of ground, more or less, upon which the said city now has an hospital with its appurtenances, situated adjoining the corporate limits of said city; and also that the grounds and buildings to be thus conveyed to the United States shall be held and used for the purposes of a marine hospital, under the same rules and regulations as are applicable to other marine hospitals on the waters of the Mississippi.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I was going on to explain, as briefly as I can, the circumstances connected with this proposition. The Government owns ten acres of ground within the limits of Memphis. The corporation of that city own about an equal quantity of ground in the vicinity of that owned by the Government. Upon the ground owned by the corporation they have erected a large hospital. The Government, as you are aware, has no hospital there. Our people are very much taxed for the support of that hospital, both by the State government and the corporate authorities of the city. The property owned by the Government within the limits of the city we feel to be an improper location for an hospital, being somewhat in the heart of the city. It is estimated by persons who were directed by the Government to investigate the value of it, that the property owned by the Government is worth from $10,000 to $15,000. My own opinion is, that $10,000 is the utmost to which it can be carried. The property owned by the corporation—the buildings included—must be worth $30,000 or $40,000, or perhaps $50,000. The proposition here is, that the Government will transfer to the corporation its property within the corporate limits, upon condition that the corporation will cede to the Government, for the purpose of a marine hospital, the grounds upon which their hospital is already erected. I do not know that the corporation can accept it; but I desire to give them the opportunity of doing so, believing that in doing it we shall promote the public, national interest, and protect the corporation; because the citizens are very heavily taxed for the purpose of sustaining the sick which are thrown upon our hands. The Government has no marine hospital, as you know, within two hundred miles of us, and our taxes are enormous. We ask the Government to take that hospital, if the corporation will cede it to them, and convert it into a marine hospital. That is the simple statement of the facts.

Mr. SHIELDS. As I understand it, an arsenal is located on the land owned by the United States, and, consequently, it is under the direction and control of the War Department. There is a general law authorizing the War Department, in all cases of this kind, to dispose of property of that character when it becomes useless for the public service. That law is now in force. I have introduced an amendment at this session of Congress extending its provisions. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands, but it is always usual, in cases of this kind, to consult with the proper Department, and ascertain whether that is essential to the interests of the public service before the land is ceded away in this manner.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I will explain that that very thing has been done. Some months ago the Secretary of War ordered a sale of this ground as being useless to the Government. The property was advertised for sale. Before the time of sale arrived, however, this proposition had been submitted to the Committee on Public Lands. He then withdrew the order to sell, and he has been written to by the Committee on Public Lands. His response is now before that committee, in which he says that the property is useless to the Government for the purpose for which it was originally intended. I know the fact that it has not been used by the Government for any public purposes for the last ten, twelve, or fifteen years.

Mr. SHIELDS. That may all be true, but this has taken a most extraordinary course. Every other proposition of this kind has gone before the Committee on Military Affairs. It is true, I do not want the trouble of this investigation; but we consult with the proper Department; we ascertain whether an arsenal is needed before we act on such a case as this. I do not know the condition of the arsenals along the Mississippi river, but this I do know, that an arsenal is essentially necessary in that portion of the country; and, sir, we are going to purchase lands in various parts of the country, in order to have arsenals at the assailable points; one to control the Mississippi river; another the Gulf; another the southern Atlantic coast; another the northern Atlantic coast; another the Pacific, and so on. I wish, as chairman of that committee, to submit the matter to the committee, and to consult with the Department on the subject, and ascertain whether there is any other point on the Mississippi river that we can now appropriate for an arsenal. If there be a better one, and if we can do so, I am willing, but not otherwise. I have no opposition on earth to the bill as it stands, except that I know nothing of the facts. But I know, and every man knows, that an arsenal is necessary in that portion of the country somewhere. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BORLAND. I will not disagree with my honorable friend from Illinois, as to what should have been the proper reference of this subject in the first instance. I think with him that a reference to the Military Committee would have been the most proper. But, Mr. President, under the circumstances, I do not see the propriety or necessity of making that reference now. A different direction was given to it, perhaps inadvertently, in the first instance, and the Committee on Public Lands, it seems to me, were, under the circumstances, competent to make a proper report on the subject; particularly from the fact that this arsenal, so called, at Memphis, cannot be and has not been considered a military establishment for many years. If it was, it was not used as an arsenal. Many years ago, perhaps twelve years ago, it was rented out for other purposes, and has been so used ever since, and has never been used by the Government from the time of its construction for a military establishment. I remember, being a citizen of Memphis at the time,—for I drew up an application,—that the establishment was used by a private individual for a school. It was so used for many years; and such was the conviction of the War Department that it was not necessary as an arsenal, that, in the exercise of the power to which the Senator has referred, it was offered for sale; but upon the supposition that an arrangement equally beneficial to the Government, and at the same time more beneficial perhaps to the city of Memphis might be made, the order was withdrawn, and the matter has been suffered to rest until it can be ascertained whether this matter can be consummated. I think that for these reasons, as the bill has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, where all these matters are understood, it will be better to let it be disposed of now, as otherwise it may lead to a considerable consumption of the time of the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. I therefore withdraw my motion; but I request the friends of this bill to suffer it to lie over till to-morrow. I wish, for my own satisfaction, to consult, not the heads of Departments only, but gentlemen specially employed in this business; and it occurs to me that that may be the most advantageous point for an arsenal. Of that, however, I know very little.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will make that motion.

The bill was accordingly laid over, and ordered to be printed.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. WALKER. I move to postpone all the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the bill usually designated "the homestead bill."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has called for reports.

Mr. WALKER. That may be; but I merely exercise the right which is exercised here almost every day—to move to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up a particular bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall vote against the motion to take up the bill, unless the Senator will wait until we shall finish the morning business. That being got through, I shall be ready to take it up at any time.

Mr. WALKER. I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to take up the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Borland, Bright, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Foot, Sebastian, Seward, Stockton, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Broadhead, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Clarke, Clemens, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, King, Meriwether, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Shields, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, and Upham—31.

ROBERT GRIGNON.

Mr. ATCHISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report a bill for the relief of Robert Grignon. I ask that it be now considered; but if it should give rise to any debate, I will at once move to postpone it.

The bill was read a first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Robert Grignon the sum of $20,000, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States, arising out of a clause of the second article of a treaty made between the United States and the Menomonee Indians the 30th September, 1836; which clause was stricken out of the treaty by the Senate by way of amendment to the treaty. No part of this money, however, is to be paid without the consent of the Menomonee Indians being first obtained, and without a full relinquishment of that amount on the part of the tribe to the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I must ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ATCHISON] to give us a short explanation of this matter.

Mr. ATCHISON. I will do so. Under a treaty made in 1836, the Menomonee Indians had a school fund to the amount of $1,000 a year for twenty years. When the treaty was made in 1836—which was negotiated by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. DODGE]—they said that they wanted no school funds, but that the money appropriated should go to their friend Robert Grignon, who, when they were starving, had fed them, and when they were naked had clothed them. A clause was put into the treaty for that purpose, and when it came up for consideration before the Senate, in pursuance of the policy which the Senate had pursued, they struck out the clause, and since that time the Indians have unanimously refused to touch a single dollar of the money, although they might have had it under the treaty. They said it belonged to their friend, and they insisted, and still insist, that he should have it.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not understand this subject. It is the first I have heard of it. It may be all right; but I would like to know in what form and manner the Menomonee Indians come before Congress and ask that this money shall be so paid. Was this money to be paid to them in their collective capacity as a tribe? or was it to be appropriated in a particular way according to the stipulations of a treaty?

Again, have they come forward as a tribe, in their tribal character and capacity, duly represented here, and asked that this money should be paid in this manner? or is it some agent, professing to act for them, who asks for this large interest which belongs to these Indians? I merely ask for information. I wish to know by what authority he acts for them, if he has any authority at all.

Mr. ATCHISON. I will ask that a letter from the Department of the Interior be read, which will explain the matter.

The letter was read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, February 21, 1851.
SIR: The resolution of the Senate, adopted in Executive session on the 19th instant, in the words following, viz: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to communicate to the Senate a copy of the treaty between the United States and the Menomonee tribe of Indians, bearing date the 3d day of September, 1836, and to inform the Senate whether said treaty has ever been submitted to those Indians; and the amendments of the Senate agreed to by them," having been referred by you to this office, I have the honor to report, that the records and files of the office afford no evidence that the treaty referred to in said resolution was ever submitted to said Indians, and the amendments of the Senate agreed to by them. They have, however, implicitly assented to or acquiesced in all of said amendments, with the exception of one striking out of the clause providing for the annuity of $1,000 for twenty years to Robert Grignon. To this amendment they have ever been opposed, and in various ways have insisted that the original stipulations for Grignon's benefit should be fulfilled.

A printed copy of the treaty is inclosed—the original being on file in the office of the Secretary of State.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. LEA, Commissioner.

Hon. A. H. H. STUART, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ATCHISON. That letter shows very clearly that the Indians have acquiesced in all the amendments, except this one which was made by the Senate, and that they have uniformly refused to acquiesce in this amendment, and have insisted, and still insist, that the money shall be paid to Grignon. It is the money of the Indians—the money of the whole tribe. They have made this disposition of it by the treaty; but the Senate did not consent to it, and struck it out. The Indians have never agreed to it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Dodge] can state what took place at the time the treaty was made.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin. I will state the facts connected with this subject. The treaty was made in good faith, and the Indians, at the time, urged the payment of this money to their friend and relative, Robert Grignon. Since the treaty was made on the 30th September, 1836, I have had frequent conferences with the chiefs of the Menomonees, and they have uniformly stated to me that they would never receive from the Government that money, which belonged to their friend and relative, Robert Grignon. When Superintendent of Indian Affairs, they called my attention to the subject on three or four different occasions, when holding councils with them. The treaty, as I have said, was made in good faith, and was ratified by the Senate, with the exception of this section, which was stricken out, although the chiefs and warriors were desirous that it should be passed. The recipient, Mr. Grignon, is an estimable, but very poor man, who has fought in defense of the country, and who now receives a pension for the services which he rendered to the country. I know him to be honest, and believe him to be brave. He has merited the kindness of the Indians, and the rejection of this bill would do him a great injustice. The Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] under whom several of those treaties were made, knows the character of the Grignon family, and I will call on him to state whether the family is not honorable and respected among the Indians.

Mr. CASS. I know the family very well. I know they have been a faithful and honest family, and are considered at home very respectable. I know nothing about the merits of this case. I will observe, now that I am up, that when this subject was introduced by the Senator from Missouri, he proposed to withdraw it if it should lead to debate. It seems to me likely to lead to discussion, and I trust that it may be laid aside, for the purpose of proceeding, according to an arrangement as it was understood, to the consideration of the bill providing for the construction of a canal around the Falls of the Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not wish to make a speech, but I desire to say a word. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Dodge] mistook me, if he supposed that I was opposing the claim.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin. I did not understand that the Senator opposed the claim, but simply wished to have the matter explained.

Mr. BORLAND. My object, as I stated in the beginning, was to get some information upon this matter, which had not come under my observation before. It seemed a little extraordinary I thought; but the explanation is very satisfactory, except in one respect. I think it would be a better mode of accomplishing the object, and that it would be more certainly done, by paying the money to the Indians, and then let them pay it to Grignon, if they wish, in good faith, to do so.

Mr. ATCHISON. That is provided for in the bill, or the same thing.

Mr. WALKER. It expresses that it is to be with their assent.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I have no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with copies of communications received from the agents of the Department in California, in relation to debts contracted by them; which was ordered to be laid upon the table, and printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEWARD, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to extend the provisions of the fourth section of "An act to grant the right of way to all rail and plank roads and macadamized turnpikes passing through the public land belonging to the United States," approved August 4, 1852, for the purpose therein named; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That five hundred additional copies be printed of the report of the Committee on Commerce, respecting the repeal of tonnage duties on Spanish vessels from Cuba and Porto Rico.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1853, was read a third time as amended, and passed.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1853.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

JUDICIAL FEES AND COSTS.

The message from the House of Representatives also announced that it had passed a bill to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States. The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE NORTH AMERICAN FISHERIES.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the motion made by Mr. Cass, on the 3d instant, that the message of the President of the United States communicating information in relation to the fisheries, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; when

Mr. SOULE rose, and addressed the Senate at length, and was followed by Messrs. CASS, BUTLER, and SEWARD, the latter of whom gave way for a motion to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Saturday next; which, after considerable discussion, was agreed to, and Mr. SEWARD will occupy the floor on Saturday.

[See Appendix for this debate.]

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after being engaged therein for some time, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 12, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is upon ordering House bill No. 146, to regulate the fees of clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the district and circuit courts of the United States, to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. SMART. Before proceeding to the execution of the order, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a report merely for the purpose of reference, and of having it put upon record.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the bill will be read.

The title of the bill was then read, as follows:

"A bill to authorize the payment of the claim of the State of Massachusetts for certain services of her militia during the late war."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that.

Mr. SMART. I will ask the gentleman to withdraw the objection. I will state to him that I have taken a great deal of pains to examine the question. I wish merely to present the bill and report that they may be put upon record.

Mr. JONES. Is it for services in the late war with Great Britain?

Mr. SMART. It is.

Mr. JONES. I do not withdraw my objection.

Mr. McCORKLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the table Senate bill No. 7, providing "for the survey of public lands in the State of California," for the purpose of reference.

Mr. AVERETT. I object to that, and call for the regular order of business.

FEES OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS, ETC.

House bill No. 146, "regulating the fees and costs to be allowed to clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States," being the business in order, was ordered to be engrossed, and being engrossed, was read the third time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were refused, but nine members seconding the call—

Mr. LETCHER. I demand a count upon the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether such a demand as that can be made—the number rising to second the call is less than one fifth of a quorum. The only object in counting the other side would be, to see if there is a quorum. That will be shown on a division upon the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. In response to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] he will recollect that it is too late to call for tellers upon the yeas and nays so long after it was announced that they were not ordered. It is competent to have tellers upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House adjourn, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I make that motion.

The question being first upon the motion that the House adjourn—

Mr. LETCHER demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and being taken, were—yeas 2, nays 127.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurring upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table, it was put, and the motion was disagreed to.

The question recurring on the passage of the bill—

Mr. SEYMOUR demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order, is House bill No. 120, authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain, to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and locate others in lieu thereof.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. This bill was introduced by my colleague, [Mr. HENDRICKS.] He is necessarily absent from the city, and I move that the consideration of the bill be postponed until Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. There is no objection, and it is so ordered.

THE WHEELING BRIDGE CASE.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order, is House bill No. 297, "declaring the Wheeling bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes."

Mr. WOODWARD being entitled to the floor, occupied it until the expiration of the morning hour (without concluding) in discussing the rights of navigation, and the right to construct the bridge across the Ohio. He tested those rival rights by an application of the principles of the laws of nations thereto, and by an application of the principles of the Constitution of the United States, from which is derived the power to determine the rights of the parties in this contest, since the formation of the Federal Union. He argued that, for the purposes of commerce and of intercourse between the different States of the Union, the right to navigate the river was no greater than the right to cross the river by bridges. He maintained that the intercourse which was designed to be established by the Constitution between the States by land, was as sacred as the intercourse by water; and he viewed it as a question as to what sacrifices each should make to the other, with the view to an adjustment of the case. He insisted that the ultimate right was in Congress, under its power to regulate commerce and to preserve the intercourse between the States, to determine the question involved, as to the preservation or destruction of this bridge. [Mr. W.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, (interrupting.) I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman from South Carolina, but I believe the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. It has.
Mr. STANTON. I ask, then, that the House proceed to the consideration of the report from the Committee on Printing, in relation to the claim of Thomas Ritchie.

Mr. HOUSTON. When that bill was reported from the Committee on Printing, it was understood by me, and I think by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] that its consideration would not be pressed until the appropriation bills had passed the House; and if I am entitled to the floor, I would like to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky having made the report, was recognized by the Chair, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield me the floor for the purpose of submitting the motion that I have indicated.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I cannot yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make this appeal to the gentleman, for I do not think that he and I can disagree about the fact. It was certainly distinctly understood by me, and I hardly think it could have been understood otherwise by him, that he would not press this bill until after the appropriation bills were passed. When the bill was introduced, objection was made that this day was too early for its consideration, and the gentleman stated in his remarks, that if the appropriation bills were not passed, he would postpone the bill still further. That was my understanding about the matter.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have to say, in answer to my friend from Alabama, that when I reported this bill, I desired that it should be postponed until an earlier day, and a large number of the friends of the measure insisted upon it that it should be postponed to an earlier day. I put it off for a full week, for the especial purpose of accommodating the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, with the expectation that by that time the principal appropriation bill would have been passed. I had no desire or intention to postpone it for any other purpose than to enable him to get that bill out of the way. That bill is now out of the way, and if this measure is now taken up and acted upon, I believe that it can be disposed of in an hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. Several of the principal appropriation bills are yet undisposed of, and are now in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I think that the gentleman ought at least to allow me to get the Army and Navy bills through before he presses his bill. It does seem to me that public bills—the appropriation bills—ought not to be postponed to the consideration of private claims. We have now very little time left. There is no hope of getting the gentleman's bill through in an hour, nor in a day, and in my opinion it will not get through in less than a week, if it gets through at all.

Mr. STANTON. This bill was lost at the last session for want of time. It passed this House by a large majority, went to the Senate, and was lost there. It is important that it should be taken up now and considered, and I insist upon it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Do I understand, then, that the gentleman declines to yield me the floor?

The SPEAKER. He does.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to yield me the floor for one moment.

Mr. STANTON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. McLANAHAN. At the early part of this session the subject of the Wheeling Bridge was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I have had in my possession a report from the minority of that committee for some two months past; but it is well known to the House that we have never been called upon for reports. The subject of the Wheeling Bridge being now under consideration, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the minority of the Judiciary Committee upon that subject.

Mr. MEADE. I object. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a single word?

Mr. STANTON. I will.

Mr. MEADE. I should have no objection whatever to the report of the minority of the Judiciary Committee succeeding the report of the majority; and I have only to state to the House that I was requested by the majority of the committee to say to this House, without a formal or written report, that that committee, by a very large majority—I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania was alone in the minority—

Mr. McLANAHAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There were two others of the committee with me.

Mr. MEADE. I was merely about to say that the majority of the Judiciary Committee, without making a formal report, have authorized me to state to the House that they adopt the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and recommend that the same bill be passed which is recommended by that able report. Now, I have no objection to the reception of the report of the minority.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I ask, then, that the minority report be received, and that it be laid upon the table and printed.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

THOMAS RITCHIE.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The report which the Committee on Printing have directed me to make, and which is now the business before the House, embodies the report made at the last session of Congress by Colonel McWillie, then chairman of the committee. I hope the members of the House have given it an attentive perusal. The report concludes with a resolution, proposing to settle the accounts of Mr. Ritchie, for the printing ordered by the last Congress, at prices fifty per cent. less than those fixed by the resolution of 1819. I have devoted some attention to the subject, and am well satisfied, that if Congress will pass the resolution I have reported, it will not give Mr. Ritchie more than he reasonably deserves to have under all the circumstances. No man can give attention to this subject, even for a moment, and fail to be satisfied that Mr. Ritchie, in his efforts faithfully to execute the duties imposed upon him by Congress, has sustained an immense loss—a loss which, if not made up to him by Congress, must reduce him in his old age to beggary. Colonel McWillie, in whom this House and all who know him, must have confidence, and who examined the subject with very great care, ascertained by close calculation, that the actual loss of Mr. Ritchie, upon work done for the first session of the last Congress, was $65,436. It is fair to presume, that the same rate of loss was sustained upon the work executed for the subsequent session—or in the same proportion. Mr. McWillie, under instructions from the committee, reported a resolution, giving Mr. Ritchie the same prices fixed by the resolution now under consideration. That resolution passed the House by a large vote, and was defeated in the Senate for want of time to consider it.

The prices fixed by the resolution are fifty per cent. below those established by the resolution of 1819. If members of the House will examine the testimony taken before the committee, of which the Hon. Mr. Wentworth was chairman, at the last session of Congress, they will see that these prices are not considered as extravagant, by printers of high standing as practical and intelligent men in their profession.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, announcing the passage by that body of the Indian appropriation bill; which bill, by unanimous consent, was taken up and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.]

Mr. STANTON continued: Mr. John C. Rives was one of the witnesses examined before that committee. He will be recognized on all hands as a gentleman of great practical experience, and as well informed upon the subject upon which he testified, as any person in the city of Washington. He says:

"Taking the amount of work at this session as a standard, and adopting the style of the work done by the printers at this session, the public printer could afford to do the printing of both Houses, at the price of one third less than the prices fixed by the joint resolution of 1819. He would lose on the composition, but would more than make it up on the press-work."

Here Mr. Rives refers to the character of the work done and the quantity, and gives it as his opinion, that one third less, or thirty-three and a third per cent. off the prices of 1819, would be a fair price to pay the public printer. The same testimony of Mr. Rives discloses the fact that Congress has never paid its public printers, when elected by the House, less than twenty per cent. off the prices of 1819. Blair & Rives did the printing for the Twenty-fourth Congress at fifteen per cent. off the prices of 1819. For the Twenty-fifth Congress, Thomas Allen received the full prices of 1819. Blair & Rives had the printing of the Twenty-sixth Congress at fifteen per cent. off the prices of 1819. For the Twenty-seventh Congress, Gales & Seaton took it at twenty per cent. off, but the last night of the session, the twenty per cent. deduction, amounting to $40,000, was restored to them, in consequence of a belief by Congress, that they would lose money at the prices at which they had undertaken to do the work.

Gales & Seaton offered to do the work for the last Congress at twenty per cent. off the prices of 1819, as proved by the Hon. Mr. HAMLIN, of the Senate, before the same committee.

Thus it appears, that at no time when the price of printing was regulated by the standard of 1819, has Congress paid so low a price as that fixed by the resolution now under consideration. All the testimony before the committee I have before referred to, goes to prove that the wages of journeymen are now higher than then, and that the cost of composition is greater. But these are particulars into which I do not propose now to inquire. I desire, in view of the short time between this and the day fixed for adjournment, to make my remarks as brief as possible.

If I can have the attention of the House, I will endeavor very briefly to notice some of the causes which have contributed to produce the losses sustained by Mr. Ritchie in the execution of the public printing. It will be seen that they have arisen mainly from the action of Congress, and not from any fault of his own. The manner in which Mr. Ritchie became connected with the printing is well understood by the House, and it is unnecessary for me to refer to it. It will be recollected that, at the beginning of the last Congress, this body did not organize until eighteen days after the time fixed by law. During this period the public printer was compelled to be ready at all times to commence the execution of his work. It was necessary, and he was prepared with a full complement of hands, at any moment to execute any work ordered. These hands were under pay, and could not be dispensed with.

Mr. ORR. How many hands?

Mr. STANTON. I cannot say what number of hands were then employed in the office, but I suppose a sufficient number for a prompt and speedy execution of any work ordered by Congress. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] must be aware, that it was both the interest and duty of a business man, having upon his hands an undertaking of such magnitude as the printing of Congress, to be prepared at the first day of its session with a sufficient force to commence the work which may be ordered. The first job was the President's message and accompanying documents, constituting a large item of the work. Well, sir, half a month expired before this or any other document came to the hands of the printer, although he was prepared at any moment to commence the printing. Here, then, was a loss resulting to Mr. Ritchie, not from any fault of his own, but from the failure of Congress to organize.

Sir, another source of loss to Mr. Ritchie, and which is not properly considered by the House, was the delay in receiving the money due him for work executed. By the terms of his contract, he was entitled to pay upon the delivery of his work. In this particular, Congress has not complied with its obligation with Mr. Ritchie, and he has been driven to make sacrifices to procure money to carry on the public work, when he had a right to expect it from Congress. Every practical business man knows what sacrifices are necessary to raise money on a sudden emergency, no matter how solvent the borrower, or how sufficient the securities. Mr. Ritchie, before the end of the fiscal year, found the contingent fund of the House exhausted, his resources cut off, and himself driven into the hands of brokers and others to procure money, which it was the solemn duty of Congress to have provided. Nor is this an unusual thing. The present contractor for the public printing has this very session of Congress been subject to the same wrong, and required from the necessity of the case to make the same sacrifices. He, too, has been deprived of his pay for want of funds, and been compelled to borrow at high rates of interest, when it was our duty to make provision so as to secure him against such a loss.

But it is not only in these particulars that Mr. Ritchie has suffered at the hands of Congress, and for want of a just and liberal spirit upon the part of this body. Let me direct the attention of the House for a few moments to its own illiberal action in regard to him. In the contract of Mr. Ritchie there was one provision exceedingly favorable to him, as it allowed him very high prices for any work which might be ordered under it. The other provisions of the contract were against him, because the prices were exceedingly low, even below the cost of the work. It was not Mr. Ritchie's fault that this favorable clause was in the contract. His assignee made the bid, and it was accepted by the officers of Congress. We cannot now, if we have a single sentiment of honor in our hearts, repudiate the provisions of the contract favorable to him, and hold him to a rigorous compliance with those which are oppressive. I hope there is not a man on this floor who would do him so great injustice. It will be done unless we reverse the action of the House, and adopt the resolution now before us.

Sir, we ordered, during the last Congress, thirty thousand copies of the proceedings of Congress upon the death of President Taylor. We forced, by our action, and against his remonstrances, the public printer to execute them. This work, under the favorable clause of his contract, which pays him two dollars per page for such work, for every hundred copies, amounts to about $60,000. No lawyer who examines the contract can doubt this. No business man who gives the subject his attention can, for a single moment, hesitate as to this construction of the instrument. The officers of the House, who have charge of the subject, as well as the high accounting and law officers of the Government, all concur in this opinion. Mr. Ritchie knew that if he did the work his contract would entitle him to more pay than the work was worth, and with the frankness which belongs to, and is part of his nature, he came to this House, apprised of the fact, and generously offered not to take advantage of this feature of his contract if the House would relieve him of the more oppressive portions of it. In a moment of madness—at a period of high prejudice upon the part of Mr. Ritchie's enemies—the House was induced to pay no attention to this magnanimous and liberal offer upon the part of Mr. Ritchie, but forced the job upon him, and compelled him to execute it. I have here in my hand the letter of Mr. Ritchie, addressed to Colonel McWillie, and by him read to the House. I will read it, that all may see what was the proposition of Mr. Ritchie.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday morning.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to a resolution from the Senate, and referred by the House of Representatives to the Committee on Printing, of which you are the chairman. It relates to the printing of thirty thousand copies of the Enlogies in both Houses, with other transactions connected with the funeral honors paid to the deceased President of the United States.

Although it is extremely clear to me that the printing of this pamphlet falls within the contract for the public printing, with which I am connected; and although I am satisfied, from the advice of counsel, that this job would be more under the only profitable part of the contract, yet so great is my confidence in the justice and magnanimity of Congress that they will grant a liberal relief from the other very oppressive parts of the contract, and so great my desire that this pamphlet should be executed in the best style of which the American press is susceptible, that I cheerfully yield any interest I may have in its execution.

We could do the work very handsomely in the Union office, but there are some appliances in the printing art to be obtained in Philadelphia or other cities in the North, which would enable their press to execute the work in a more elegant style than we could display.

Therefore, to rid you of any embarrassment which your general printing contract would impose upon you, I hereby beg leave to be understood, that all the obligations of the contract are dispensed with on my part; and I hope that you will take all the necessary means to have the work executed in the most elegant style which suits this dignified occasion.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS RITCHIE.

To Colonel McWILLIE,

Chairman of the Printing Committee.

What more honorable than this? How could the venerable Mr. Ritchie in a more effectual manner have evinced his indisposition to take advantage of the House than by this prompt and manly proposition, at a time when the subject of printing this pamphlet was up for consideration? Yet it seems the House, laboring under some unaccountable prejudice against him, did not appreciate his frank and generous conduct, but compelled him to proceed in the execution of the work. He did so, and the pamphlet was printed in a style creditable to him and to Congress. He expended of his own means, in cash, from $8,000 to $10,000 in procuring it to be done, and has not to this day received from Congress one cent of pay for it! And why? Because, as I said before, in a moment of madness and injustice to Mr. Ritchie, the House, just before its adjournment at the long session of the last Congress, passed a resolution directing the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate to audit and settle all the accounts of the public printer, except for the printing of the pamphlet containing the proceedings of Congress in regard to the death of President Taylor! That pamphlet yet remains to be paid for, and in consequence of this interposition of the House, not one cent of what is rightly due Mr. Ritchie for this job has ever been paid to him. I appeal to the sense of justice of every honorable member of this House, if this proceeding has not been an act of gross injustice to the public printer. Under the provisions of Mr. Ritchie's contract, I have no doubt, if he could obtain redress in a court of justice, he would be awarded for this job not less than $60,000. This is not all. A similar job, embraced under the same clause of the contract, was executed by Mr. Ritchie under the order of the Senate, and the amount he was legally entitled to was $37,500. All but $10,000 of this sum has been withheld from him, and, I think, unjustly and wrongfully withheld from him, while Congress insists upon the enforcement of these provisions of the contract which are unfavorable and oppressive to the contractor.

The facts which I have thus adverted to are indisputable. The contract and the Journals of this body, prove them conclusively. They show that great wrong and injustice has been done Mr. Ritchie, not only in the delay in the organization of the House, in the failure to pay him as the work was delivered, but in the positive prohibition of the House against his receiving anything for work due under the only profitable clause of his contract. The terms of that contract are plain, and not to be misunderstood by any one who examines them with a view to arrive at the truth. There is no pretense that the contract was unfairly made, or was not understood. I presume at the time it was not apprehended that any considerable amount of work would be ordered under this clause. Who could foresee the lamentable event which made this work necessary? Congress thought proper to order the work, and is bound by the obligations of the contract. How unjust to resist his claim under the only item of his prices which afford a profit, while all others are enforced with the severest rigor.

The $60,000 to which I have shown he is justly entitled for the Taylor pamphlet, and which has been withheld from him by the resolution of the House, added to the contract price of the job done for the Senate under the same clause in the contract, amounts to $97,500, to which Mr. Ritchie has a just and legal claim, subject only to a deduction of $10,000 for the amount paid by the Senate. All this he agrees in his memorial to surrender, if you will fix his rate of pay at fifty per cent. off the prices of 1819. The effect will be to reduce his compensation under the profitable clause of his contract, and increase it under those which are oppressive and unfavorable.

Some gentlemen manifest great alarm at the terms of this resolution, and seem to imagine that its effect will be to give Mr. Ritchie an immense sum—far beyond what is reasonable and just. I do not for a moment believe that it will give him more than sufficient to indemnify him for his actual losses, aggravated as they were by the illiberal action of Congress. I feel satisfied that if you will carry out the terms of the contract, and allow Mr. Ritchie what he is legally entitled to under it for the two jobs to which I have referred, he will receive but little less than he would obtain under the resolution. Congress never paid so low a rate for its printing as fifty per cent. under the prices of 1819. I believe the lowest rate ever agreed to be paid was twenty per cent. off. Mr. Rives, in the testimony to which I have before referred, fixes, thirty-three and one third per cent. off as reasonable. Mr. Ritchie's prices will be sixteen and one third per cent. less than what Mr. Rives under oath thinks right.

No one will contend that Mr. Ritchie did not faithfully devote himself and all his energies to a compliance with his undertaking; and it will not be pretended that the work was not done well and in proper time. The old gentleman, punctilious to excess in all that relates to a faithful execution of his public duties, carried out a ruinously oppressive contract, even to the sacrifice of his private fortune, accumulated by years of arduous toil, rather than be reproached for failure. He was not only compelled, in consequence of the want of appropriations, and the withholding from him by the resolution of the House of the pay rightfully due for work done, to pay a high rate of interest for money borrowed to carry on the printing, but actually sacrificed much of valuable property to pay for the work. He actually paid for a large portion of the work, done at other offices, the full prices which will be allowed by the resolution, and upon which he cannot derive a cent of profit.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky whether the Committee on Printing have yet ascertained the amount of Mr. Ritchie's great sacrifice, so that the House may know anything about it?

Mr. STANTON. I will cheerfully answer the gentleman, although I have before referred to this part of the subject. Colonel McWillie, who was formerly at the head of the Printing Committee, made as close a calculation as he could under all the circumstances, and ascertained that the actual loss of Mr. Ritchie, upon work done at the first session of the last Congress, was $65,436. He lost in the same proportion upon work done at the subsequent session. Gentlemen must perceive that it would be impossible, from the nature of circumstances, to ascertain with mathematical accuracy, the exact amount of loss. The printing was done in an office from which was issued a political newspaper, and which was constantly engaged in the execution of other work than that ordered by Congress. To some extent these several branches of the business were blended, the same hands occasionally working upon each, and paid for by the proprietors by the week or day. If the gentleman wishes to arrive at what the work was really worth to do it, that can easily be ascertained by taking the rate of prices current with the printers of the city, and make his own calculation.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry, for I wish to understand this case? I understand the gentleman to say, that the amount Mr. Ritchie claims is less than what he would have received, if Congress had complied with the contract. Am I correct?

Mr. STANTON. Not exactly. I say this: If the contract were literally carried out—if Mr. Ritchie were allowed what the contract authorized him to receive—it would be very little less than what he will get under this resolution.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I will make this inquiry: If it amounts to the same thing, what lies in the way of carrying out that contract?

Mr. STANTON. The action of Congress which forbids his receiving for work already done the price he is authorized to have by the terms of his contract. The gentleman heard me refer to the resolution of the House, passed at the close of the long session of the last Congress, restraining the proper officers from auditing and settling Mr.

Ritchie's account for the publication of the Taylor obituaries and proceedings of Congress. That resolution stands upon your Journals in full force and unrepented.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not aware of that fact. Mr. STANTON. And I presume there are many others who oppose the relief to Mr. Ritchie who are not aware of the facts which make his claim a just and meritorious demand upon Congress.

Mr. HEBARD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, for the purpose of getting information upon this subject, what amount of compensation Mr. Ritchie will receive by the passage of this resolution beyond what the law gives him?

Mr. STANTON. I believe if the law were executed, and the contract carried out according to its legal terms, he would get but very little more under the resolution than he would under the law. I have repeatedly said that the law could not be carried out, as the House had passed a resolution forbidding its officers to execute it, and requiring them to withhold from Mr. Ritchie the money he has earned under the law.

Mr. HEBARD. That is not my question. I desire to know, as the contract is construed by the House, how much this resolution will give him beyond what the House has already agreed to give him under the contract?

Mr. STANTON. The sum of money Mr. Ritchie considers himself entitled to under the contract, for work done according to its terms, and not settled for, is about $97,500. If this resolution passes, and the whole work is settled for according to its provision, Mr. Ritchie will not get much more than this sum in my judgment.

Mr. HEBARD. That is not the inquiry. I do not know that I can make myself understood.

Mr. STANTON. I regret that you cannot. I repeat again, that I do not believe Mr. Ritchie will get by the resolution much more than the $97,500.

Mr. HEBARD. Do you mean $97,000 beyond what he has already received?

Mr. STANTON. Beyond what he has actually received.

Mr. JOHNSON. What has he received?

Mr. STANTON. One hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars in all.

Mr. HEBARD. I desire to ask if you have made any investigation to ascertain what the amount of his loss was, and whether what he will receive under the provision of this bill will make up or exceed the loss?

Mr. STANTON. I thought I had told that gentleman and this House all I knew upon that subject. I told them that my predecessor upon the Committee on Printing, Colonel McWillie, had made as accurate a calculation as he knew how to make in reference to this long session of Congress, and that $65,436 was calculated to be his actual loss upon that printing. At the short session, the loss is in the same proportion. Now, if the gentleman can tell me what proportion the printing of the short session of the last Congress bears to the printing of the long session, I will tell him exactly what amount of losses Mr. Ritchie has actually sustained.

Mr. HEBARD. I wish to ask the additional question: Why it was not just as convenient to report a specific sum for the purpose of making up the losses, as to report in this indirect way, by which every member of the committee has to go into an investigation of losses for himself, or know nothing about it?

Mr. STANTON. If this is an indirect way of paying the public printer, this House for the last thirty years has been pursuing precisely the same roundabout and indirect way of compensating that officer. The committee have followed only the policy of Congress. The public printers, except for a short period, have been paid in no other way since 1819, than by the prices then fixed, or with a per centage off. I have said Gales & Seaton undertook the printing of one Congress, at twenty per cent. off these prices. It was manifest to Congress, even at this high rate, that they lost money in the execution of the work. Congress very liberally, and perhaps justly, relieved them, by paying the full prices of 1819. The prices Mr. Ritchie will receive by this law, if it passes, are only one half of what Gales & Seaton received, and the sum he will receive will be no more difficult to calculate.

If the full prices were not too much to give Gales & Seaton, at that period, when journeymen's wages were twenty per cent. lower than now, surely no man should hesitate to give Mr. Ritchie his moderate demand of one half of these prices. The testimony of Mr. Rives, to which I have before alluded, shows that thirty-three and a third per cent. off would not be unreasonable. Mr. Rives himself, when associated with Mr. Blair, executed the work and received pay at as high a rate as fifteen per cent. below the prices of 1819.

I appeal to the House not to deny to Mr. Ritchie what he has asked for. It is not unreasonable or extravagant. He finds himself at the close of a long, laborious, and useful life, brought to the very brink of ruin from faithful efforts to execute a burdensome contract. The sum provided will save him from hopeless ruin, enable him to pay the debts created in the public service, and reinstate him in the possession of the property he must sacrifice unless relieved. Who can have the heart to turn away this venerable old man, and deny to him what is so clearly his, by every consideration of justice and humanity?

But, I have no desire to prolong this debate, and consume time at this late period of the session when so much of the public business is still pressing upon us. I only intended when I obtained the floor, to make a few remarks by way of explanation, and then demand the previous question; but if there is any gentleman who desires to debate the subject, I will give him what remains of my time.

Mr. STANLY. I desire to say something upon this subject.

Mr. STANTON. Have you an amendment to offer?

Mr. STANLY. I have.

Mr. STANTON. I cannot give way for that purpose.

Mr. STANLY. I want to make some remarks and offer an amendment likewise.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. When this bill was reported, I understood the gentleman [Mr. STANTON] to say that this bill would not give more than $60,000 to Mr. Ritchie. I understand him now to say that it will give $95,000.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman from North Carolina; [Mr. STANLY] at that time, made an assertion to the effect that if this bill was passed, it would give Mr. Ritchie $200,000.

Mr. STANLY. Yes, sir, and I can demonstrate it.

Mr. STANTON. I said at the time I did not believe it. My judgment was that it would be $60,000 or $80,000.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman said $60,000. Mr. STANTON. I said $60,000 or $80,000, according to my recollection.

Mr. STEVENS. I did not hear the word eighty.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman did not, it is not my fault.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman so modify his amendment as to fix some specific sum, so that it will not be half a million?

Mr. STANTON. I have not the power to modify it. I told the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] I would yield him a part of my time to make such remarks as he desired, but if he intends to offer an amendment to the proposition, I cannot consent to it.

Mr. STANLY. I wish to offer an amendment to limit the amount to $60,000. This is a matter of importance, and suggestions on this subject should be heard.

Mr. STANTON. I have no objection to hear your explanation.

Mr. STANLY. I am going to demonstrate, and I can do it so plainly that no man will deny it, that if this bill is passed it will give Mr. Ritchie more than $200,000.

Mr. STANTON. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I appeal to the House to vote it down.

Mr. STANTON. As there seems to be a general desire that I should withdraw the call for the previous question, I will do so.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order for me now to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or will I have first to move to postpone this subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman having obtained the floor. Mr. HOUSTON. Will this subject come up in the morning again?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move to postpone this subject to this day two weeks.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. For the sake of a little information, I would inquire if I am to understand by the motion that it makes this subject a special order, or does it only postpone it to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood, from the Speaker, that if I moved to go into the Committee of the Whole, this subject will be the business in order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move a postponement, and that is the question before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, asked for tellers upon the motion; which were ordered; and Messrs. STEPHENS and HAMILTON were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 66.

So the House refused to postpone the subject, and it goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STANLY. When this question comes up again, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. No one has been recognized.

Mr. STANLY. Can I be recognized upon it now? Somebody must have it.

Mr. ORR. I might contest that point with the gentleman.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection to the gentleman taking the floor.

VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise to a privileged question. Some weeks ago, a bill to appropriate land scrip in final satisfaction of the Virginia military bounty land warrants, passed the Senate and was sent to this House. That bill has since been lost or mislaid. I move that the Clerk be directed to inform the Senate of the loss of the bill, and request them to furnish the House with a duplicate or duly certified copy of it.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. HOUSTON, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOGGS in the chair.)

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to take up House bill No. 220, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the present fiscal year.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. In consequence of the very backward condition of business, and the great amount of legislation essential to be done, I do not propose to occupy the time I might otherwise be entitled to upon this bill. I wish the committee, however, to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and let it be taken up and read through by paragraphs, as we did the civil and diplomatic bill; at which reading it will then be open to amendment. If any gentlemen propose to make political speeches upon this bill, or to enter into a general debate upon it, I hope the committee will meet this evening, and take up the reference of the President's message, where those speeches can be made without delaying the public business.

Mr. MEADE. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to offer an amendment to this bill, and when I do offer it, I desire a few moments to explain it, and therefore I take this opportunity to read the amendment, and to address myself to this committee upon the subject of it.

There was a memorial presented here at the beginning of the session by a few survivors of the Petersburg volunteers, who served their term of twelve months on the Canada frontiers in the last war, and who were in several engagements. They conducted themselves most gallantly, as was testified to by the Commander-in-Chief. After having received their discharge on the 17th day of October, 1813, they returned home to the town of Petersburg, where most of them lived, and from that time to this they have made many unsuccessful efforts to obtain from the Government the pay which they so richly earned in that campaign. When they were discharged on the frontier, there was put into the hands of the paymaster a sum sufficient to pay their arrearages and their expenses home. Unfortunately for that band of gallant volunteers, that paymaster proved unworthy of his trust and neglected to discharge the duties committed to him. He retained the money placed in his hands for that purpose, and a few years afterwards died insolvent. Those volunteers received for their services but two months' pay. The officers received about six months' pay.

Many applications have been made to the Department here for the payment of those arrearages. When the applications were made, the men were put off with the excuse that the Department had not received from the paymaster the pay rolls by which it could be determined how much each officer and private had received.

Those pay rolls have never been returned, and for a very important reason: No payments were made, and hence no list of payments could be returned. From this cause, there appears upon the records of the Department no evidence of any payments to this company, other than for the first two months of their service, for six months of the service of the officers. Applications have been made time after time by the survivors of this company; but the accounting officers of the Department, for the first few years after the war, having refused to pay until the pay rolls could be recovered, or were returned by the paymaster, their successors in office also refused to make the payments for a like reason. They have been forced to come before the Congress of the United States, to receive this tardy justice, and I have prepared this amendment to the Army bill, which I intend to offer in its proper place. To pay them the arrearages now due, according to an estimate of the Third Auditor, will amount to about $10,099. That estimate is made upon the supposition that every member of this company, who returned from Canada, will apply for his arrearages; but I can state to the committee, that many of these men have long since died, and a great many of them having previously removed from the place of their nativity to the western country, and other places, their heirs are now, I may say, scattered to the four winds. I do not believe, if this bill were passed, more than one half of that company would make application for the arrearages due them. But it is immaterial whether they do or not. I appeal to the justice of this committee, to their sense of right, that these gallant soldiers be now paid what is due to them. We have passed many laws making voluntary donations of land to the soldiers in our various wars, as a testimony of our gratitude. These donations were merely gratuities; but whilst we have evinced such an unmistakable sense of our gratitude towards those who have served their country in the capacity of soldiers, we have utterly forgotten the debt which is due of right.

Mr. PHELPS. With the permission of the gentleman, I will make a brief statement. I learn that money was placed in the hands of a paymaster for the purpose of paying these volunteers. I also learn that that paymaster was faithless, and did not pay them. The Third Auditor's office is now settling the claims of the soldiers of the war of 1812, and paying to them whatever arrearage the muster or pay roll shows to be due them out of the regular appropriation for the aid and support of the Army. This course, I learn, is being pursued, and that it was a reason given for the increase of clerks in the Third Auditor's office. Hence, then, if the pay roll shows anything due to these men, it can be paid, in my opinion, without further legislation. I should like to have some explanation from the gentleman with regard to that point.

Mr. MEADE. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the opinion just expressed by the gentleman from Missouri, in which opinion I most cordially concur, is not the opinion entertained by the Third Auditor and those to whom application has been made.

Mr. PHELPS. During this session of Congress an application sent to me by one of my constituents for arrearage of pay due to a soldier who died some time during the war of 1812, has been settled in the Third Auditor's office, and a warrant upon the Treasury has been issued in favor of the widow or administrator of that deceased soldier.

Mr. COBB. I think I understood the gentleman from Virginia to state that no pay roll has been returned in consequence of the default of the paymaster.

Mr. MEADE. Yes, sir; I will explain this whole matter to the satisfaction of my friend from Missouri, before I am done. I will let the committee know exactly how the matter stands. The reason why these men are refused to be paid is because there has been no pay roll returned.

Mr. PHELPS. Then one can be made out from the muster roll.

Mr. MEADE. The gentleman does not apprehend the state of the case at all. There is a pay roll of the first payment returned which exhibits the fact that these men have received two months' pay and about half pay for their clothing; but there has been no pay roll returned since the first payment was made two months after these soldiers were mustered into the service. And the position assumed by the accounting officers of the Treasury is, that until there is a return of a pay roll they will not pay these arrearages. The present Auditor says that he would pay them if the position had not been assumed by his predecessors that they would not pay without a return of the pay roll. He does not feel disposed to revoke their decision without a special act of Congress. That is the position which he assumes at this time. Now, whether it is a just one or not, is not for me to determine. It presents, however, a barrier to the payment of these men which they cannot overcome, and application is now made to Congress to authorize the Auditor, who feels these scruples, to do what he himself says he would voluntarily do but for the impediment presented by the previous policy adopted by his predecessors. The ground taken by his predecessors was that without these pay rolls, the Department could not ascertain what arrearages were due. But the committee will perceive at once that it is a position which could not be sustained in any court of justice. Here are services performed. There is no doubt about that. There is no question made but that these men served out their time. Evidence of that is on record; but there is no evidence of payment for these services, except for the first two months for which returns have been made. Will any man say that it is incumbent upon these soldiers not only to show by the rolls of the Department they have served their term of twelve months, but also prove the negative that the Government has never paid for those services? Why, sir, it appears to me to be sufficient for them to establish the fact that they have performed the services, and it is for the Department to prove the fact that they have paid them.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to make the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia whether there are any muster rolls in the Department, showing the length of time these volunteers served?

Mr. MEADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PHELPS. Very well. Then the very basis upon which a pay roll is made out is in the office, and a pay roll for the residue of their term can be made out and perfected.

Mr. MEADE. Mr. Chairman, why should the gentleman from Missouri—and I beg his especial attention, because I see he is not disposed to refuse these soldiers payment—insist we should continue to go before the Auditor, when he says that he cannot pay, unless he is authorized by law? It is like holding out a stone to these men, and telling them it is bread.

The following is the letter the Auditor wrote me upon the subject:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, }

THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE, June 14, 1852. }

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to inclose to you herewith, a copy of the rolls on which Captain Richard McRae's company of Petersburg volunteers were paid two months' pay in advance in 1812, by Paymaster Samuel Turner; say from the 16th October to the 16th December, 1812. In addition to the above-mentioned payment, Major Turner paid each member of the company, $16 in lieu of six months' clothing. The company entered the service under the acts of the 6th February and 6th July, 1812, on the 16th October, 1812, to serve twelve months. The muster rolls, showing that the company served twelve months, are on file in this office; but there are pay rolls or receipt rolls to correspond. As before stated to you, James G. Chalmers was appointed paymaster to the volunteers, on their march to Fort Meigs, and received from Paymasters Hunt and Huntington, funds sufficient to pay the company, from the 16th December, 1812, to which time it had been paid by Major Turner, to the termination of its service, in October, 1813; but he has failed to return any rolls of Captain McRae's company; consequently it cannot be ascertained to what extent—or if at all—he paid the company. Within the last twenty years several applications have been made by different members of the company for their pay; but payment has, in all cases, been resisted, on the ground that, in the absence of the rolls, showing what had been received, and what remained due, it would be unsafe to make allowance.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN S. GALLAHER, Auditor.

Hon. R. K. MEADE, House of Representatives.

Here is another letter from the same gentleman:

THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE, July 23, 1852.

DEAR SIR: I annex on the opposite sheet the form of an amendment to authorize this office to pay the balance which I am now satisfied is due to the Petersburg volunteers, whose pay for nine months was withheld by Paymaster Chalmers.

If it were an original application, with the statement of Captain McRae, now presented, and the appropriation for arrearages were sufficient, I should feel it my duty to pay the claimants, but as my predecessor declined action without the authority of Congress, I would prefer a direct instruction to pay the amount.

The delinquency of an agent of the Government has kept these worthy volunteers out of their just dues, and this wrong ought now to be repaired in the best manner possible.

With great respect, yours,

JNO. S. GALLAHER, Auditor.

Hon. R. K. MEADE, House of Representatives.

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

We, whose names are herewith subscribed, being a few of the remaining survivors of the Petersburg Volunteers, respectfully represent to your honorable body, that the company of which we were a part in the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and which went from Petersburg, Virginia, to the Canada frontiers, and were mustered into service on the 21st of October, 1812, and discharged at Detroit on the 17th of October, 1813, received pay for only three months of the term of our service, except the officers of the company, who received pay for six months; that we were entitled to the price of our arms, which were returned to the War Department; and also to rations and mileage from Detroit to Petersburg, a distance of about seven hundred and fifty miles.

We trust that by a special act for our relief you will render to us and to the company the simple justice which we are confident our country will approve.

JOHN H. SAUNDERS,
REUBEN CLEMENTS,
THO. B. BIGLER.

State of Virginia, city of Petersburg, to wit:

This is to certify, that I, Richard McRae, was the captain of the Petersburg Volunteers, and that the facts stated in the foregoing memorial are true. I further certify that the paymaster, James G. Chalmers, when he returned to Petersburg, twelve months after the company was discharged, was insolvent.

Given under my hand at Petersburg this 25th day of May, 1852.

RICHARD McRAE,
Late Captain Petersburg Volunteers.

City of Petersburg, State of Virginia, to wit:

This day, Richard McRae, late captain of the Petersburg Volunteers, (who is personally known to me,) personally appeared before me, Jno. W. Nash, of the circuit court for the city aforesaid, and subscribed in my presence, and made oath to the truth of the foregoing certificate.

Given under my hand this 25th day of May, 1852.
JNO. W. NASH.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Is this the same claim that was referred to the Military Committee?

Mr. MEADE. The claim was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEVENS. That committee reported against it.

Mr. MEADE. No, sir; I understand from the gentleman who had charge of the papers that he reported favorably to the committee, and they, regarding it as a private claim, directed it to be reported back to the House, with the request that it should be referred to the Committee on Private Claims.

Mr. STEVENS. I may be mistaken, but my recollection is, that that committee directed the gentleman from Virginia to report against it, upon the ground that it was a question of defective proof, and that the law was amply sufficient, provided there was proof. I may be mistaken, but that is my recollection.

Mr. MEADE. The papers I am now reading have been procured since that petition was referred, and they contain ample proof. I presume, sir, the papers then before the committee was a bare petition, without the proof necessary to establish the claim. But now, I presume, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with the proofs I have, would not hesitate to admit the claim.

Mr. Chairman, I received a few months ago the resolutions of the Virginia Legislature upon this subject, in which her Representatives in Congress were requested to present the claims of these patriotic volunteers to the consideration of Congress, and press the payment of them. And with these resolutions was a copy of their discharge by the Commanding General; and I venture to assert there is not upon the records of the War Department a more complimentary notice than the one voluntarily given to them upon that occasion. I wish I had the paper by me, for the purpose of reading it to the committee.

Mr. CASKIE. If the gentleman thinks it, as I know he will, of sufficient importance in speaking of the service of this company, I would ask him to say whether his own city did not get the name by which it goes throughout Virginia—the Cockade City—because of the services of these men she sent to Canada?

Mr. MEADE. I believe the gentleman states a historical fact; but I did not wish to indulge the egotism of boasting it myself. I will state that I have received within the last few days, from the gallant old captain of that company, a letter, in which he urges the passage of this bill. That old man, after buffeting with the world for twenty years, was but a few years ago summoned home by his friends. He returned, bent and worn down with old age and service. He is now living upon their bounty, not being able, from physical weakness, to labor for a livelihood. He enjoyed a small office a few years ago, whose light duties he was able to perform, and did perform. From this office he has been removed. This is the condition not only of the captain of that company, but it is that of several others. Many of them were killed in that service. A portion of them returned home wounded. I was well acquainted with a member of that company, a gallant Scotchman, who miraculously recovered from a bullet hole through his body. I beg leave to present to the committee a statement of facts, under oath, from an old citizen of the town of Petersburg. It was not before the committee that had charge of this petition. It is the affidavit of Captain John Pollard, whose name, wherever it is known, is a guarantee for the truth of any statement he may make:

City of Petersburg, to wit:

This day John Pollard personally appeared before me, a justice of the peace for the said city, and made oath that he is now in the sixty-seventh year of his age, and is a native of the city of Petersburg, where he has always resided; that he well remembers the volunteer company commanded by Captain Richard McKee, which marched from Petersburg, in 1812, to join the western army, under General Harrison, and known as "The Petersburg Volunteers;" that he was well acquainted with a great many of the members of that company, both before and after their return from the army, and was well acquainted with James G. Chalmers, who was the paymaster, as he was informed and believes, of the battalion or regiment to which said company was attached; that after the return of the said company to Petersburg, he always heard and understood from all of those with whom he conversed upon the subject, that the members of said company only received three or four months of their pay, owing to the failure and insolvency of the said Chalmers; that the said Chalmers returned to Petersburg in a state of insolvency, and remained in Petersburg for three or four years after his return, and died in Petersburg in a state of insolvency; that one of the members of the company, Joseph C. Noble, lived with this affiant, as a journeyman, both before and after his return; that the above statement of facts, as it regards the failure of the said paymaster to make payment to the members of the company, was confirmed by the said Noble, who also informed this affiant on his return home, that he had been compelled, for the want of funds, to stop in the city of Pittsburg and work as a journeyman saddler, by which he raised funds, not only for his own expenses, but to enable him to aid his brother soldiers of the same company to reach their homes; that the failure of the company to receive their pay was often a subject of conversation among the members of the company, after their return, in the presence of this affiant, and was a statement made by all of them, and was of general notoriety in Petersburg at that time. In testimony whereof, the said Pollard has subscribed his name to the foregoing statement, and made oath to the same.

JOHN POLLARD.

Sworn to before me, W. E. Hinton, a justice of the peace for the city of Petersburg, this 26th day of May, 1853.

W. E. HINTON, J. P.

These soldiers have always believed that the accounting officers of the Treasury would ultimately pay them, and hence it is that they have never before made application to Congress. There is another reason for the delay. A great many of them were not in need of the money which was due to them. They were young and athletic at that time, and found it more profitable to work, than to stand at the door of the Treasury. They are now old and infirm, and some of them in want. They now ask you for the payment of a debt to them, while you are bestowing bounties on others.

There are fifty-three privates provided for in this estimate of the Auditor—five sergeants, six corporals, and two musicians, besides the officers. In justice to these gallant soldiers, I shall ask that this debt be paid to them, with interest from the time at which it should have been paid. It ought to have been paid to them at the time they were discharged. For twenty years some of them have been making fruitless efforts to obtain their hard-earned wages, and now I hope that complete justice will be done them. The families of most of them are living in my district; many of them are in very needy circumstances, and it is therefore I appeal to the generosity, as well as the justice of this House, that in ordering payment to these men, they will direct that interest be paid from the 17th of October, 1813.

Mr. Chairman, I have made a plain statement of the facts of the case; a statement which is corroborated by record proof. This thing should be provided for in one of the appropriation bills—the Army bill. The amendment provides for the payment of arrearages to soldiers, who have performed their duties gallantly, and have received the testimony of their commanding officers as to their gallantry and good conduct. I hope that my friend from Missouri [Mr. Phelps] is satisfied, that if these men were to be sent again to the Third Auditor they would receive the same reply as heretofore: that his predecessors had refused, on account of the absence of the pay roll, and that he could not, without the authority of law, reverse their decision. The question now is, whether these men are to suffer for the fault of the Government agent? The paymaster was the agent of the Government, not of the company. If he has not furnished the evidence by which the amount of money due to these men can be ascertained to the satisfaction of the Government, it is the misfortune of the Government. The soldiers cannot be charged with any delinquency, except for not sooner preferring their petition to Congress for the passage of a special bill in their favor. I trust that the remembrance of their patriotic services will insure a proper attention to the petition of these men. They have earned a distinction not for themselves alone, but for their home, which is often the boast of the people of that State. Strangers and visitors who wish to compliment the city of Petersburg, never fail to speak of the ever memorable services of her volunteers.

I regret that I have not by me the discharge of their General. At the termination of their service, he speaks of them as men who have been nursed in the lap of ease; they thought not then of the pay they were to receive; a more ennobling feeling drew them to the frontier. They were then young, bold, and aspiring; they are now old and in want; they demand only a compliance with their engagement. That Government will not be so heartless as to tell them they must be content as heretofore with the glory of their achievements.

Mr. SCUDDER next took the floor, and addressed the committee an hour upon the subject of the fisheries, and in showing that the claim now set up by England is in violation of the rights of the United States, under the treaty with that Power. [This speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose to the committee that we go into the House and pass a resolution, closing debate upon the Army appropriation bill to-morrow at twelve o'clock. We can have an evening session, and gentlemen then will be afforded an opportunity to make hour speeches.

Mr. POLK. I object; for the reason that we have passed many bills without any discussion at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee do now rise.

A MEMBER. I demand a division upon that motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will then withdraw my motion, as I am satisfied there is no quorum present. I shall move, when we get into the House, to close the debate upon this bill at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I have something to say in reply to the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. Olds.] He is not now in his seat, and I should prefer that the committee would take a recess. There are other gentlemen who desire to speak, as I understand, upon political matters generally, and I will, therefore, submit the motion that the committee take a recess until six o'clock this evening.

Objection was made.

Mr. CAMPBELL then addressed the committee an hour in defending Mr. Corwin against a charge made against him by his colleague, [Mr. Olds.] that he had assisted in perpetrating a fraud upon the Treasury, by prosecution of the Gardiner claim. He denied that Mr. Corwin had any connection with the prosecution of that claim; but asserted that, on the contrary, he had abandoned any connection with it before he took charge of the Treasury Department. He then, by way of contrast, entered into an examination of the defalcations of public officers under Democratic Administrations. He also spoke of the position of General Scott upon all the great questions which have been in issue between the two principal parties of the country, maintaining that he was a true Whig in regard to protection, river and harbor improvements, the veto power, and the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands.

[His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SKELTON next obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. HENN, on whose motion the committee took a recess until seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session at 7 o'clock, p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SKELTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FREEMAN. With the consent of the gentleman from New Jersey, I will state that I have desired for some time to address the committee upon the subject of the public land policy of the United States. It is known that a couple of railroads of my State have been, and are still, before the Committee of the Whole. The session is far advanced, and the probability is, they will not come up for discussion; and as there is a great deal of pressing business before us, I will ask leave of the committee to publish a printed argument upon the subject. [This speech is published in the Appendix.]

Leave was granted.

Mr. SKELTON said that he rose for the purpose of redeeming a pledge made to the House a few days since. It would be recollected that in a discussion which then took place, a charge was brought against his State by the honorable member from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON]—a charge which was derogatory to the fair fame of that State, and which appeared to demand a reply and an explanation. He would state that whatever remarks he might now make, were not intended to have a personal bearing, for the gentleman from Arkansas, who brought this charge against his State, afterwards made such an explanation as to satisfy him that he had no intention of misrepresenting the State of New Jersey or her Representatives.

The remark made by the gentleman was, that "the State of New Jersey levied a tax upon passengers passing through it, for the purpose of supporting its Government." It was this point to which he wished to reply. At the time the charge was made he pronounced it unfounded, and asserted that there was no truth in it; and he would now reiterate that there was no tax levied upon any stranger passing through the State of New Jersey. All citizens of the States of this Union, whether from the East, West, North, or South, had the privilege, without restraint or taxation, to pass through the State of New Jersey. There is, he said, a tax levied on the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company of ten cents a passenger; but if this was taken off to-morrow the fare would not be reduced. Therefore, it was not a tax on the passengers. The corporation was required to contribute to the support of the State as well as individual citizens, to which there can be no objection. This State has ever shown a solicitude to guard the interests of the citizens of every State, and to guard persons passing through its limits from imposition by chartered associations. He then referred to the past history of the State to show that its character was beyond reproach.

Mr. NEWTON next obtained the floor. He gave the outlines of a speech which he intended to prepare for publication, the leading features of which would be in opposition to the fugitive slave law. He contended that the fugitive slave law was unconstitutional, and that it was entirely and essentially severe in all its important provisions: that there was no cause for its severity, and there were palpable reasons why a change should be made in its essential features. He also contended that every attempt to enforce it was attended with decidedly more evil than beneficial effects, and that no law of this character could be enforced which did not meet the confidence of an enlightened community; for whenever it became necessary to execute a law, confidence was important to give it validity. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ROSS gave at length the reasons which would influence him against any modification of the tariff of 1846, particularly any modification which would render its duties more protective than they now are. He was opposed to what was called the home valuation, and in favor of ad valorem duties, looking forward with pleasurable emotions to the period when commerce shall be less shackled than it is now. [See Appendix.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield me the floor for a few minutes?

Mr. STEVENS. I will allow the gentleman from Virginia a few minutes, to be taken out of my time, if I shall not lose the floor thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is no proposition which the gentleman from Virginia wishes to submit, but merely an explanation. It is usual to yield the floor for explanation. But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] cannot submit any proposition to the committee without taking the floor altogether, in which case, if anybody else gets it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] would lose the floor. The gentleman can yield the floor by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the House will allow it by unanimous consent. I am quite willing that it should come out of my time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise, sir, to give notice that I will, at the proper time, and during the progress of this bill before the committee, offer the following amendment to the sixth page, one hundred and thirty-first line of the bill, and to add after the clause making an appropriation of $250,000 for the manufacture of arms, the following provision:

Provided, That from and after the 1st day of October next, so much of the act of Congress, approved August 23d, 1852, as places the national armories under the superintendence of an officer of the Ordnance Corps be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and from that day the said armories shall be under that system of superintendence which existed prior to the passage of said act.

Mr. FAULKNER said that he represented a district in which one of the national armories was located; that great dissatisfaction existed with the system now established there, and that he came here instructed by that portion of his people interested in these establishments to procure, if practicable, a change from the military to the system of civil superintendence. The question was one involving higher principles and deeper consequences than seemed at first sight. He had brought the subject before the Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee had, several months ago, ordered a report and bill, but no opportunity had occurred, under the rules of the House, to lay it before that body. The report and bill had not yet been presented, which he and his constituents regarded as a great hardship. He determined to avail himself of the occasion which he now enjoyed under the usages of the committee, to present his views in full upon the respective merits of the two systems. So that if his amendment should be ruled to be out of order when it came up, in the progress of the present bill—still, it would give the House full possession of the grounds upon which he rested his views of the proper system of Government for the armories; and if the bill from the Military Committee should yet come up before the end of the session, the argument made now would better prepare their minds for action on the bill when it did come up. [The remarks of Mr. F. will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, addressed the committee an hour, in examination of the Presidential platform, and the principles involved therein. He repudiated all such platforms. After discussing the present condition of the slavery question, and warning the South against the effects upon themselves, of the ultra policy they were attempting to enforce upon the country, he spoke of the Presidential candidates, and eulogized the military and civil capacities of General Scott, and advocated his fitness for the Presidency. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ORR moved that the committee rise.

The question was put and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, the chairman of the committee (Mr. BOCOCK) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 220, making appropriation for the Army, for the present fiscal year, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask leave of the House to report the fortification bill.

Mr. KING of New York. There is no quorum present, and I object.

On motion by Mr. FOWLER, the House then adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. McNAIR: The petition of Daniel S. Shultz and 49 others, for a mail route from Pottsville to Allentown in Pennsylvania.

By Mr. JONES, of New York: The petition of David Montgomery, of Onondaga county, in the State of New York, an invalid pensioner, for further relief.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petitions of Amos Oatis and Anthony Kelley and others, of Massachusetts, asking that an armed force of the United States Navy may be dispatched to the Gulf of St. Lawrence and adjacent waters, to give countenance and protection to the fishermen.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The memorial of Ralph Davenport and others, asking Congress for the passage of a law for the better security of lives on board of vessels propelled by steam.

Also, E. T. Kelley and others, for the same.

Also, William H. Woodman and others, for the same.

Also, T. Negus & Son, and others, for the same.

Also, Hunt, Brother & Co., and others, for the same.

Also, P. H. Diamond and others, for the same.

Also, Edward Seymour and others, for the same.

By Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana: The petition of J. D. Onorpe and 94 other citizens along the route, praying for a post road from Sparta to Querson, in the parish of Bienville, Louisiana.

By Mr. ALLISON: Three petitions, signed by Rev. D. Robinson, William McCallister, and 233 others, citizens of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a bill introduced by the Hon. Edward STANLEY, appropriating certain moneys in aid of the American Colonization Society.

Also, a similar petition, signed by Professor R. H. Lee, and 35 others, citizens of Washington county, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The memorial of G. T. Cobb & Co., and others, citizens of New York, asking Congress for the passage of a law for the better protection of lives on board of steamboats.

Also, R. P. Thurston and others, for the same.

Also, H. F. Judson and others, for the same.

Also, S. C. Brittan and others, for the same.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of John McManus, Esq., Hon. William Strong, and 132 other citizens of Pennsylvania, amongst whom are inventors, patentees, manufacturers, and other citizens, asking Congress to pass an act that will restore them the practical benefits of an appeal from the Patent Office to a court of law, and also to raise the salary of the Commissioner of Patents to $5,000.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 13, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, if it is the pleasure of the Senate to go on with private business to-day, according to our rule, I shall not interpose any objection, though I consider it useless to do so. I do not believe that a private bill, which may pass at this period of the session, will have the slightest chance in the world of being taken up in the House of Representatives, and therefore perhaps we may as well go on with the public business. But I repeat, if the Senate choose to go on with private bills, I shall interpose no objection. If they do not, it is my desire to move to take up the bill for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of the Sault Ste. Marie. The friends of that bill have frequently given way for the pressure of other business. I will not, however, submit the motion to suspend the execution of the order if it is the pleasure of the Senate to go on with it.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask the favor of the Senate, before the motion is submitted, to state, that on last objection day I inadvertently objected to the consideration of a bill for the relief of Isaac Adams. I was the only one who objected to that bill, and I ask the Senate to consider it at this time.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot make the motion to take it up unless the regular order requiring the Calendar to be taken up be first suspended.

Mr. ADAMS. I know that, and I therefore ask the postponement of the regular orders for the purpose of considering that bill.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first on postponing the order, and then on taking up whatever may be submitted afterwards.

Mr. MILLER. This is the last day upon which private bills will have any chance at all; and I trust they will have the full benefit of the day. I hope the rule will not be suspended, but that we will go on with the consideration of the private bills which are on the Calendar. There are some very hard cases there. Two Fridays in succession have been taken from their consideration, and therefore I trust the Senate will give them this, the last day assigned to such as are unobjectionable.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would inquire whether the morning business is suspended by the order that has been made?

The PRESIDENT. It is; for the order is, that private business shall be considered to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to suspend the execution of the order until twelve o'clock. I wish to give notice of a bill which I intend to ask leave to introduce.

Mr. CHASE. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not insist on that motion. Certainly, we ought to give this, the last day which can be appropriated to private bills, to the relief of those individuals who have claims before us.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw the motion, for I see that all the time which I desire to apply to business will be wasted in discussion.

CONTUMACY OF A WITNESS.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I am instructed by the special committee, raised on the 6th instant, to make a report to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. Without knowing the nature of the report—whether it can be taken up in violation of the order of the Senate—the Chair is unable to receive it. If the Chair knew precisely what was the question of privilege, it might supersede the order made by the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. The report which I desire to make, is from the Special Committee raised by the Senate on the 6th instant, and relates to the contumacy of a witness summoned before that committee to give testimony in a case of which the committee have taken cognizance. Yesterday he was summoned, and appeared before the committee, but refused to take the oath prescribed by the committee. It was postponed until this morning, when he reappeared, and after assigning his reasons, declined, the second time, to take the oath. The committee deemed it their duty, through their chairman, to make a report of the fact to the Senate, that the committee might have the opportunity of getting the action of the Senate thereon. With that view, the report is submitted to the Senate, and a resolution for its adoption. I move that the report be read.

The PRESIDENT. The rule setting apart Fridays for the consideration of private bills, as adopted, is imperative. Whether a report on the contumacy of a witness will enable the Chair to depart from the rule, he is not prepared to say. The Chair will, however, state to the Senate, that by unanimous consent, the report from the committee on this particular subject will be received.

Mr. CASS. It ought to be received.

Mr. BUTLER. It ought to be received as a question of privilege. If desired, it can then be laid over till Monday.

The report was read, as follows:

"The Select Committee of the Senate appointed on the 6th of August, 1852, report, that on the morning of the 13th of August, 1852, John McGinnis appeared before the committee, having been duly summoned as a witness. The committee, by one of its members, read the resolution of the Senate under which they were organized, to Mr. McGinnis, and also the form of the oath which he was required to take, which is in these words: 'You do swear that the testimony which you may give on the present occasion, touching the matters embraced in the resolution of the United States Senate, of the 6th of August, 1852, which 'you have just heard read, shall be the truth, the whole, truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God.' Mr. McGinnis was then requested to take said oath, which he declined doing. The committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That John McGinnis, in refusing to take the oath propounded to him by the Select Committee of the Senate, raised on the 6th of August, 1852, has committed a contempt against the authority of this body, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody, and imprison him in the jail of the District of Columbia until he shall consent to take said oath, or until the further order of the Senate."

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the resolution will now be considered and adopted. It is not necessary to consume the time of the Senate with remarks upon it. The facts are all given in the report.

Mr. BUTLER. It had better go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT. It can be considered at this time only by unanimous consent.

It accordingly went over.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT. This is the day upon which, if any bill is objected to or leads to debate, it must go over till next Friday.

JOHN WHITE'S HEIRS.

Mr. CHARLTON. I move to suspend the order, to enable me to take up Senate bill for the relief of Catharine Proctor Hayden, only child and heir of John White, deceased, late Lieutenant Colonel in the fourth Georgia battalion of the revolutionary army. It will cause no discussion. I will undertake, in a few minutes, to explain it satisfactorily to the Senate. It is the case of a widow lady who has been a long time in need of the bounty which is proposed to be given, and it will give rise to extraordinary statements—statements that will be true and extraordinary at the same time. I am sure it will not take up five minutes of the time of the Senate. I move to suspend all private bills on the Calendar preceding that, for the purpose of taking it up.

Mr. MILLER. I hope we shall go on in order. I have two or three cases which I think are entitled to as much sympathy as the one mentioned by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not wish to disturb the order of the Calendar, but if this privilege is granted to my friend from Georgia, I must ask a like privilege. I have a case which is far towards the end of the Calendar, and I am afraid it will not be reached to-day; but if the privilege is granted to the Senator from Georgia, of course the Senate will grant me the same privilege.

The motion was not agreed to.

THOMAS H. LEGGETT.

The PRESIDENT. The first bill upon the Private Calendar is that for the relief of Thomas H. Leggett.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to postpone its consideration until Friday next. The Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] who reported it, is not in his seat.

The motion was agreed to.

MARK BEAN AND RICHARD H. BEAN.

The PRESIDENT. The next bill upon the Calendar is that for the relief of Mark Bean and Richard H. Bean, of Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. That bill was under discussion the other day, and perhaps the Senate are ready to vote upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was one of those who discussed the matter. I have no objection to a test vote being taken in some way or other without any further discussion; and, for the purpose of trying the Senate on the subject, I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I was not present when that bill was discussed before, and I should like to hear from the Senator from Arkansas, who reported it, some statement of its object and character.

Mr. BORLAND. I had a conversation with the Senator from Kentucky this morning, who presented objections to the bill when it was last under consideration, and we concluded not to discuss it any more, thinking that it had been sufficiently discussed already; but if other Senators wish to discuss it, it had better be laid over, so that the vote may not be taken in ignorance of its merits. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that the question shall be taken without discussion, believing that I have discussed its merits sufficiently before, and that the Senator from Kentucky has said all in opposition to it which could be well urged.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to meet the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas. We have had a very elaborate discussion on this subject; but if the Senate wish us to go into it again, in order to understand it, of course it must be passed over; and when it comes up we can again briefly state our views.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HENRY KING.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of the representative of Henry King. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representative of Henry King, the sum of $3,140, it being for the service of Henry King in the third Maryland regiment, and in the Commissary Department, during the revolutionary war.

Mr. BAYARD. Heretofore I moved an amendment to that bill, to which I think its friends will accede. It is to reduce the sum appropriated. As the bill stands, it pays principal and interest. I am not opposed to paying the principal, but I am opposed to the allowance of interest for a period of forty years. It is not mentioned in the bill how much is principal, and how much is interest; but it is shown by the report.

Mr. FOOT. I will state to the Senator from Delaware that the principal is $1,817 36.

Mr. BAYARD. The interest allowed is four times the amount of the principal. I move therefore to strike out $8,140, and insert $1,817 36.

Mr. FOOT. I will consent to that rather than that the bill should be passed over.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

HIRAM MOORE AND JOHN HASCALL.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall.

It proposes to grant unto Hiram Moore and John Hascall, citizens of the United States, their heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, for the term of fourteen years, from the 27th day of June, 1850, the full and exclusive right and liberty of making, constructing, using, and vending to others, to be made or used, the improvements for cutting, thrashing, and cleaning grain, which were invented by said Moore or Hascall, or either of them, and embraced in the drawing or specification granted to them the 28th of June, 1836, for the machine commonly known as "Moore & Hascall's harvesting machine," together with the improvements invented by them, or either of them, in perfecting said machine, or any part thereof, from the date of the original patent to the date from which the same is hereby renewed and extended; and the Commissioner of Patents is directed and required to grant a certificate of such renewal and extension.

Mr. CASS. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. JAMES] has an amendment to make to that bill, which will lead to a discussion. If the Senate will permit me, I will remark that it is a very important case. The applicants have been here during the whole session. The bill passed the House of Representatives in the commencement of the session; and I shall, at some leisure moment—if I can find one, and if I cannot find one, I will endeavor to make one—try to persuade the Senate, during some portion of the session, to take it up and pass it as it came from the House. It will now have to be passed over, as it will lead to debate.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

FREDERICK VINCENT.

The next bill upon the Calendar was that for the relief of Frederick Vincent, administrator of James Le Caze, surviving partner of Le Caze & Mallet.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to examine the claim of the legal representative of James Le Caze, surviving partner (now deceased) of Le Caze & Mallet, for the balance appearing to be due them on the books of the Treasury Department of the United States; and that, if it shall appear, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that the said balance is yet outstanding and unpaid, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall be required to adjust and settle the same upon the principles and practice which would have been adopted if the parties entitled thereto had subscribed the said debt to the loan authorized by the act approved March 3, 1797, entitled "An act extending the time for receiving on loan the domestic debt of the United States;" and upon ascertaining the amount due, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be required to cause the same to be paid to the legal representative of said James Le Caze.

Mr. BAYARD. I have looked into that bill since it was last called up, and I confess I am not satisfied with the explanations given me as to the propriety of passing it at all; and with my present opinions, I should desire to present my objections to it. I may change them; but, however, as now advised, I should certainly discuss the bill.

The PRESIDENT. As the Senator proposes to debate the bill, it will go over until next Friday.

ORANGE AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

The next bill upon the Calendar was for the relief of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company, to which an amendment had been proposed by Mr. BRODHEAD.

Mr. ATCHISON. It is useless to take up that bill to-day. The amendment will certainly be objected to. Whatever may have been the vote upon the original bill, the amendment will certainly be rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think the amendment is as meritorious as the original bill.

Mr. ATCHISON. Very well.

Mr. MASON. If any objection is made, of course the bill will have to go over; but I had supposed that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania would have been withdrawn. The amendment proposes, among other things, to appropriate a sum of money to pay for the use of public buildings in Philadelphia while Congress had them; and I understand that there is evidence that they never did sit in them.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I want to make some inquiries on the subject.

Mr. MASON. Does the Senator object to considering the bill?

Mr. BRODHEAD. No, sir; I have no objection to considering it.

Mr. BAYARD. If nobody else wishes to discuss the bill, I do. The Committee on Claims reported against it, and I cannot see that it is tenable on any grounds.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

CORNELIUS MCCAULEY.

The next bill upon the Calendar was that for the relief of Cornelius McCauley.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Cornelius McCauley, of Philadelphia, the sum of $750 13, in full, for morocco and other materials furnished by him in 1834 to the then Secretary of the Senate, for the use of the Senate Chamber, and for which he has received no compensation.

Mr. BAYARD. I expressed my determination when that bill was last up to oppose it. I shall still oppose it.

It was accordingly passed over.

MARIA TAYLOR.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of Maria Taylor.

It proposes to confirm the title of Maria Taylor to two certain tracts of land situated in the parish of Ascension, State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the river Mississippi, near the upper limits of the parish—provided that the act shall only be considered as a relinquishment to the Government of all claim to these tracts; and provided also, that it shall not operate against the claim of any other person to them.

Mr. WALKER. That bill was reported by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS,] who is not in his place. I have no desire to discuss it, still I should like to hear it explained.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The report of the Committee on Private Land Claims is not long, and I ask for its reading.

The report was read, from which it appears that Maria Taylor claims that she is the owner of two tracts of land—one containing eleven and a half arpents front, and forty in depth, and the other containing twelve arpents front, and forty in depth—situated on the left bank of the Mississippi river, in the parish of Ascension, in the State of Louisiana, embracing an area of five hundred acres; that she derived her title to them from the original proprietor, but a confirmation of her title thereto could not be obtained in consequence of its being included within the limits of the survey of the Huma grant, made by one of the claimants under that grant; that, in order to remove this objection, Cornelius de Armas, under whom she claimed, on the 26th of December, 1816, purchased from General Wade Hampton, who had acquired the Huma grant by purchase, all his right and title to those tracts.

The committee being satisfied that the facts, as stated by the petitioner, were true, reported the bill for her relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SANTIAGO E. ARGUELLO.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of Santiago E. Arguello. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Santiago E. Arguello, late a captain in the California battalion, the sum of $11,548, for losses of property sustained by him during the period of such services, and in consequence thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

As intimations were given that the following bills would be debated, they were passed over:

The bill for the relief of Robert T. Norris;
The bill for the relief of Lewis H. Bates and William Lacon;
The bill for the relief of Richard Mackall;
The bill for the relief of Bancroft Woodcock;
The bill for the relief of Cyrus H. McCormick;
The bill for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia; and
The bill for the relief of Colonel William Grayson.

MILLER, THOMPSON, AND TURLEY.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Henry C. Miller, Philip W. Thompson, and Jesse B. Turley. It proposes to require the Superintendent of Indian Affairs at St. Louis to inquire into the quantity and value of oxen and other property taken from Miller, Thompson, & Turley by the Osages or other Indians in June, 1847, while traveling from the State of Missouri to Santa Fé, and that if the property was taken by Osages or other Indians receiving annuities from the United States, to retain its value from their annuities; and if the depredations were committed by Indians not receiving annuities, the Superintendent of Indian Affairs shall report his proceedings, together with all the evidence in the case, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with his opinion of the value of the property lost, in order that it may be paid out of the Treasury of the United States; and that in the examination of these matters the Superintendent shall proceed according to the provisions of the act "to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30th, 1834.

Mr. WALKER. I move the following amendment, as a proviso to the first section:

Provided, That before any hearing of said proofs, due notice shall be given to the chiefs of the said Indians of the time, place, and object of such proceedings.

Mr. ATCHISON. That is right. The intercourse law provides for it; but I have no objection to inserting it in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ADAMS'S PRINTING PRESS.

The bill for the relief of Isaac Adams was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the letters-patent granted to him on the 14th of October, 1830, for new and useful improvements in the printing machine called the "Power Printing-Press," and the letters-patent granted to him on March 2d, 1836, for additional improvements in the power printing-press be renewed, revived, and extended for a term commencing from the date of the passage of the act, and ending March 2d, 1860. It proceeds to make other provisions in conformity with this object, and provides that the persons at present enjoying the lawful use of the patent, and all purchasers of any machine lawfully used or constructed may continue to use the same as if the act had not been passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

GEORGE DENNETT.

The bill for the relief of George Dennett, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay him the sum of $75 in full for services performed in bringing up arrears of business in the naval office at Portsmouth for a time when there was no naval officer.

Mr. BAYARD. I object to the principle of that bill. It would take up very little time to discuss it, but I suppose under the rule, as I wish to discuss it, it must be passed over.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

HEIRS OF JAMES BELL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of the heirs of James Bell, deceased, which provides that the proviso of the act approved June 30, 1834, "for the relief of the heirs of James Bell," so far as it prevents the payment to the heirs or legal representatives of the full amount found due, be repealed.

Mr. BAYARD. This bill will necessarily lead to discussion. It involves the allowance of interest from 1776 to 1834; and whenever the case comes up, I intend to discuss the general principle.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN MOORE WHITE.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of John Moore White. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to him, as the son and sole heir of Major John White, a major in the war of the Revolution, who was slain at the battle of Germantown, the seven years' half pay to which Major White would have been entitled by the resolve of Congress of the 24th of August, 1780, if he had not died and no payment had been made thereon.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the reading of the report. My impression is that the bill involves the question of interest.

The report of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims was accordingly read, from which it appears that John Moore White is the only surviving child of Major John White, who was slain on the 4th of October, 1777, when acting as one of the aids of Major General Sullivan, at the battle of Germantown, while attempting to set fire to Chew's house, with a view of dislodging the British. The committee refer to a letter of General Washington, to be found in Sparks's edition of his letters, to General Wilkinson's Memoirs, to Watson's Annals of Philadelphia, to the testimony of Judges Ephraim Miller, and W. B. Ewing, of New Jersey, to prove that John Moore White was generally known and reputed to be the only surviving son of Major John White of the Revolutionary Army.

Mr. MILLER. The only objection to this bill, as I understand, is with regard to the granting of interest. To relieve the Senate of that difficulty, I move to amend it so as to give interest merely from the time of the application, on the 28th of July, 1846.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall not discuss the bill if the interest be stricken out. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the merits of the case to say that some relief ought not to be granted. I am willing to take it, so far as that goes, on the recommendation of the committee; but with my views of the question of interest, it does not make any difference whether it shall run from the date of the application or not. I move to strike out the allowance of interest altogether.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition of the Senator from New Jersey is first in order.

Mr. MILLER. This applicant is an old man, eighty-five years of age, and is blind. So anxious am I to have his bill passed that I waive the question of interest, and withdraw my proposition to amend.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I move to amend the bill by striking out the following words:

"Together with such interest as would now be due if a certificate for said seven years' half pay had been issued according to the principles of the funding act, and no payment made on it."

Mr. WALKER. I merely wish to say, that I accede to this amendment now, because the Senator from New Jersey, who is the representative of the party interested, consents to it; but I think that both he and the Senator from Delaware are mistaken about this case. This is one of those cases that does not involve such questions as the Senator from Delaware has raised. I merely say this to inform the Senator from New Jersey that he is conceding a principle.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WILLIAM JONES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of William Jones. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to the legal representatives of William Jones, late of Massachusetts, the amount which he would have been entitled to receive under the pension act of 1818, if his name had been continued upon the pension-roll till the 27th of June, 1829, the day of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE AMISTAD CASE.

The PRESIDENT announced that the next bill on the Calendar was one to indemnify the master and owners of the Spanish schooner Amistad.

Mr. SUMNER intimating a desire to discuss the bill, it was passed over.

THE FRIGATE MISSOURI.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of the petty officers and seamen of the late United States frigate Missouri. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to pay to each of the petty officers, seamen, marines, and others composing the crew of the frigate Missouri at the time it was burnt in the harbor of Gibraltar in 1843, the sum of $75, in consideration of the loss of clothing, and other personal effects, sustained by them in consequence of their exertions in endeavoring to save the property of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

BENJAMIN MOOERS.

The next bill upon the Calendar was one for the relief of the heirs of Benjamin Mooers, deceased, providing for the payment to him, as a lieutenant in the revolutionary war, of $1,400, with interest thereon, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from March 1st, 1784, to March 1st, 1852.

Mr. UPHAM. The principle involved in that bill is of very great importance, and I think it ought to be looked into and discussed.

The bill was passed over.

MATTHEWS, WOOD, AND HALL.

The next bill in order was that from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Charles S. Matthews, Charles Wood, and James Hall, which proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to them, or to any other person or persons by them authorized to receive the same, the sum of $12,119 47, in full satisfaction of all claims upon the United States for damages sustained, growing out of their contract to furnish marble for the basement of the custom-house in New York.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment to the bill, to strike out the words "or to any other person or persons duly authorized by them to receive the same."

Mr. BRODHEAD. I feel it to be my duty to discuss that bill.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

ANTHONY W. WHITE.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of Anthony W. White, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the payment to the legal representatives of Anthony W. White, late a colonel in the first regiment of Virginia light dragoons of the Continental line of the revolutionary Army, $13,051 87; being the interest, at six per cent., of $3,750, from the 4th of July, 1780, to the 7th of July, 1838, during which time the last-named sum had been advanced to and kept by the United States.

Mr. BAYARD. That bill involves the naked question of interest on a claim which Congress allowed without interest.

Mr. WALKER. That is the fact; and this is a bill on which I designed to bring up the question of interest fully before the Senate. This is the case of an advance of money; and when the Senate consider it, I hope they will make it a test question as to the allowance of interest.

Mr. BAYARD. The question of interest involved in this bill is one which I propose to discuss.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

H. L. KENDRICK.

The bill for the relief of Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to allow Brevet Major Kendrick, of the second artillery, $1,294 66, in the settlement of his accounts, for sales made by him by order of General Worth, of certain ordnance, property belonging to the United States, at Puebla, Mexico, in June, 1848, this sum being so much of the proceeds of the sale as was stolen from him at Jalapa while transporting the same to Vera Cruz.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

JOHN TUCKER.

The bill for the relief of John Tucker was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to pay to John Tucker, of Florida, the amount to which he would have been entitled, under the act of March 3d, 1845, providing for the payment of certain military services in Florida, if his name had appeared upon the roll as a private in Major Isaac Garrison's command.

Mr. FELCH called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Claims; and it was accordingly read.

It appears that John Tucker, in the year 1838, was mustered into the military service of the United States, in Captain Henley's company, Major Garrison's battalion of Florida volunteers, and served in the campaign against the Indians as a private, and, in addition, performed the duties of chaplain, but received no compensation in either capacity. When it was ascertained that the company would be mustered out of service, Mr. Tucker was appointed by Major Garrison a chaplain, and, as such, was mustered out of the service, and his name taken from the roll of Captain Henley's company. Had it not been for this, he would have received pay as a private, under the act of March 3d, 1845; but as he received no pay in either capacity, and as it is difficult to ascertain the length of time for which he served as chaplain, the committee think he ought to be allowed the pay of a private for the time he was in the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

JOHN BOYD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill for the relief of John Boyd, of Louisiana, which proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pay to said Boyd the sum of $275, being the amount due him as compensation for extra expenses while engaged in taking the census in the parish of Iberville, in the State of Louisiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MARY E. D. BLANEY.

The bill for the relief of Mary E. D. Blaney, widow of the late Major George Blaney, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the proper officer to pay to her $1,156 68, interest on money belonging to her, and withheld by an erroneous decision of officers of the Government.

Mr. PRATT. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "pay," the following:

Out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. I ask for the reading of the report.

It was read accordingly, and shows that Major Blaney was an officer of the corps of United States Topographical Engineers, and for several years previous to his death, in 1835, was employed in superintending the erection of the fortifications at Oak Island and Cape Fear river, in North Carolina, and was required to act as disbursing officer and as assistant commissary of subsistence at those points, for which he claimed commissions and compensation to the amount of $6,401 48, which was disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury. It appears that, at the time of his death, he had on deposit in the bank at Fayetteville, North Carolina, to his credit, $3,182 55, of which amount $2,438 12 was claimed as his private fund, and for which he gave a check to the petitioner. On presentation of the check, payment was declined until the Department had been consulted. The Acting Secretary of War directed that the money in the bank, standing to the credit of Major Blaney, should be carried to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, which was accordingly done.

After the decision of the parallel case of Major Delafield, in 1844, where the legality of similar charges was brought before the circuit court for the district of New York, and sustained by Judge Betts, (which decision was confirmed by an equal division of the Bench of the Supreme Court,) the charges of Major Blaney were allowed by the accounting officers, so as to leave a balance to his credit of $1,606 50, which sum was paid to the petitioner on the 15th March, 1847. On this sum, so withheld for a period of nearly twelve years, interest, amounting to $1,156 68, is claimed; and the committee recommend its payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MARY F. B. LEVELY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill for the relief of Mary F. B. Levely. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pay to her the amount which her deceased husband, Captain Henry Levely, would have received, if his pension had been continued from the first day of July, 1837, to the time when all pensions which were paid from the appropriations made by Congress, in consequence of the exhaustion of the privateer pension fund, ceased.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

T. P. McBLAIR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill for the relief of Purser T. P. McBlair, which proposes to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury in adjusting the accounts of Purser Thomas P. McBlair, to allow him the several sums paid by him, as purser of the United States steamer Princeton, to William Taylor, acting boatswain; to John H. Carley, acting carpenter; and to Armstrong Flanerfelt, acting sailmaker; who were employed on that steamer by her commanding officer, which sums were disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, for the reason that the persons to whom the payments were made were not included in the number permitted by law, of officers of the grades to which they were respectively appointed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

LEONARD SKINNER.

The Senate considered, as in Committee of the Whole, House bill for the relief of Sergeant Leonard Skinner, which proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be issued to Leonard Skinner, late sergeant in Captain Newton's company of the United States regiment of mounted riflemen, a military bounty land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land; and that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be required to adjust his accounts and pay the same, in the same manner as if he had been of age and regularly discharged.

Mr. SHIELDS. The only question in this case, is in regard to the person being a minor.

The bill was reported to the Senate, read a third time, and passed.

SAMUEL PRIOLEAU.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, deceased. It proposes to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, late of Charleston, South Carolina, the sum of $6,928 60, being in full compensation for property taken from him at Charleston, for the use of the United States, during the revolutionary war.

Mr. DE SAUSSURE. I wish to submit an amendment, to insert after the word "cents" the words, "together with interest thereon from the 28th of January, 1795."

Mr. BAYARD. I shall have to discuss that amendment if it is proposed. I do not object to the bill itself.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will suggest to the Senator from South Carolina, that if he presses his amendment the bill will probably have to go over, and I submit to him whether it will not be better to allow it to pass as it came from the committee, rather than to have it postponed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. NORRIS in the chair.) Does the Chair understand the Senator from Delaware to object to the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not object to the bill, but to the amendment, which allows interest. I must discuss that question.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to withdraw his proposition for interest, and let the bill pass.

Mr. BAYARD. I would suggest, that if the bill passes in its present shape, it will not preclude the payment of interest upon a subsequent application, if the Senate shall determine to allow interest in any case.

Mr. DE SAUSSURE. I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

PRISCILLA C. SIMONDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill for the relief of Priscilla C. Simonds, which proposes to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Priscilla C. Simonds the sum of $418, the value of the property of the late Captain Moses H. Simonds, which was taken possession of by authority of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

C. E. GRENEAUX.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered "the bill for the relief of C. E. Greneaux," which proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine the claim of the United States against C. E. Greneaux, one of the sureties of Benoist Laurents, late a receiver of public moneys at the land office at Natchitoches, in Louisiana, and the circumstances of Greneaux, and to settle and discharge the claim upon such terms as he shall judge most for the interest of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SALLY J. MATHEWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill for the relief of Sally J. Mathews; which proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to her the sum of $351, in full compensation for the services of her late husband, William P. Mathews, as an extra clerk in that Department, between the first of September, 1842, and the fourteenth day of May, 1843.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WIDOW AND CHILDREN OF JOHN BALSTER.

The bill for the relief of the widow and children of John Balster was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the widow of John Balster, deceased, late armorer, who was killed by an accidental explosion of the laboratory at the Charleston arsenal while in the performance of his duty, shall be entitled to receive half the monthly pay to which he was entitled at the time of his death, for and during five years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1852; but that in case of the death or marriage of the widow before the expiration of the five years, the half pay for the remainder of the time shall be paid to the children of the decedent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EMELIE HOOE.

The bill for the relief of Emelie Hooe was read a second time, and considered, as in Committee of the Whole. It enacts that the Secretary of the Interior shall place upon the pension list the name of Emelie Hooe, widow of Brevet Major Alexander S. Hooe, late of the United States Army, whose death was occasioned by a wound received in the battle of Resaca de la Palma, on the 9th of May, 1846, and allow her, per month, the half-pay of a captain in the Army of the United States for five years, commencing on the 1st of January, 1851.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am inclined to think that that case is included in the general bill. I should like to hear the report read.

From the reading of the report it appears that Alexander S. Hooe lost his right arm in the battle of Resaca de la Palma, at which time he was captain.

The committee were fully satisfied, from the facts made known to them, that Major Hooe's death was caused by the wound, by producing a gradual depression of spirits, which terminated in complete alienation of mind; in which state, while alone in his quarters at Baton Rouge barracks, where he was then in command, he burnt his body in several places, and in so shocking a manner that he died on the 9th of December, 1847, ten days after the occurrence, leaving his widow and three young children in destitute circumstances.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was in error, Mr. President. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SEMOICE.

The Senate considered, as in Committee of the Whole, House bill for the relief of the heirs of Semoice, a friendly Creek Indian.

The bill proposes that the children and heirs of Semoice shall be vested with a title in fee-simple to a certain quantity of land selected and entered by Semoice, provided that the act shall not be construed to defeat or prejudice the legal claim to it, if there be any, of other persons.

The bill was reported to the Senate, read a third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

A bill for the relief of Hodges & Lansdale, and the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson, deceased. Objected to by Mr. BAYARD.

A bill for the relief of Hiram Paulding. Objected to by Mr. BRIGHT.

A bill for the relief of Calvin B. Seymour and Willard Boynton, surviving partner of W. & H. Boynton. Mr. CHASE asked for the reading of the report; which was read, and the bill was passed over.

Joint resolution for the relief of Jonathan Lewis. Objected to by Mr. BAYARD.

Bill for the relief of Amos Kendall and John E. Kendall. Objected to by Mr. BORLAND.

Bill for the relief of James Harrington. Objected to by Mr. FELCH.

A bill for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy. Objected to by Mr. WALKER.

An act for the relief of the heirs of Jeremiah Wingate. Objected to by Mr. FELCH.

A bill for the relief of Jacob Gideon. Objected to by Mr. BORLAND.

A bill for the relief of Samuel F. Butterworth. Objected to by Mr. ADAMS.

An act for the relief of Maurice K. Simons.

BENJAMIN F. HART.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Kelley, and William Close, securities for the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy. It proposes to authorize the proper accounting officers, in the adjustment of the accounts of the late purser, Benjamin F. Hart, to credit him with the amount of the loss of his private stores, occasioned by the wreck of the United States ship Concord, to which he was attached, as nearly as it can be ascertained; and also with the difference between the amount of public stores received by him as purser and the correct amount of those issued, and those which came to the hand of his successor; and to make such allowance as they may deem equitable under the circumstances; provided that the credits and allowances shall not exceed the balance found due to the United States upon the last settlement of the account.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CATHERINE PROCTOR HAYDEN.

On motion by Mr. CHARLTON, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of Catherine Proctor Hayden, only child and heir of John White, deceased, late a lieutenant colonel in the fourth Georgia battalion of the revolutionary Army. It provides for the payment to Catherine Proctor Hayden of the sum of $6,703 57, together with interest thereon, at the rate of six per cent. from January 12, 1793, to January 1, 1832, the above-named principal sum being the amount found due to John White by the proper accounting officers for his seven years' half-pay, and for advances made by him to the Government during the revolutionary war, for which Treasury certificates were improperly issued to Susannah Richardson and John Richardson, in 1793.

Mr. BAYARD. The bill in its present shape allows interest from 1793 to 1832. From consultation with the Senator from Georgia, I learn that case is a very meritorious one, and if the provision for the allowance of interest be stricken out, I shall not object to the bill. I move to amend the bill by striking out the following words:

"Together with interest thereon, at the rate of six per centum per annum from the 12th day of January, 1793, to the 1st day of January, 1832."

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall not resist the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, because the lady for whose relief this bill is intended is very old, and I am afraid that if the bill is not passed now, in some shape, justice will come after the shades of death have closed upon her. If this were a time when I could appeal to the sympathies of the Senate, I am sure I could draw tears from some gentlemen here; but as I am not allowed to do that on this day, I merely ask Senators to allow this amount to come out of the Treasury without interest.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MARY A. DAVIS.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Davis, widow of Daniel W. Davis. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to her $254, being the amount paid by her to employ a substitute for her late husband, during his illness, while he was a clerk in the Paymaster's Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ELIZABETH ARMISTEAD.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of Elizabeth Armistead. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Elizabeth Armistead, widow of the late General Walter K. Armistead, upon the list of pensioners, and pay her a pension, at the rate of one half the pay per month to which her husband was entitled, from the 1st of November, 1845, to continue during her natural life, or widowhood.

Mr. BRIGHT called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Pensions: which was read.

From the report, it appears that Elizabeth Armistead is the widow of the late General Walter K. Armistead, who, after having faithfully served his country, died at Upperville, Virginia, in October, 1845, from the effects of disease contracted during two years of arduous duty in Florida; that he left nine children, and several grandchildren, in destitute circumstances. The committee think that the widow is clearly entitled to a pension, and therefore report a bill for her relief.

Mr. SHIELDS. The only objection that I see to this bill is the fact, that the pension is to commence from 1845; and I believe we have heretofore uniformly refused to sanction this species of retroactive legislation.

Mr. BORLAND. I beg leave to correct my friend from Illinois on that point. We have passed a number of bills at this session involving precisely the same principle. Objection was made to them on that ground at the time, but the Senate overruled the objection.

Mr. SHIELDS. Very well; I withdraw my objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ABIGAIL STAFFORD.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of Abigail Stafford. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Abigail Stafford, her heirs or legal representatives, $2,000, for supplies furnished the Army during the revolutionary war, and services rendered by her father, Henry Smith, of Massachusetts, to be paid on the principles of justice and equity.

Mr. CASS called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was read.

It appears, from that report, that Abigail Stafford was the daughter of Henry Smith, of Massachusetts, who enlisted on the 19th of April, 1775, and served in the ever-memorable battle of Lexington, in which he was wounded; that he afterwards served four years and eleven months during the war. That on the 26th of December, 1775, at Dorchester, he received a certificate from the Secretary of State of Massachusetts, as a soldier, and that he was at the battle of White Plains, where he was stationed at an outpost. Thomas Bacon, the uncle of the petitioner, served in the Army, and was deprived of the use of his feet. The father of the petitioner died from wounds received in the service of the country, leaving her an orphan, her patrimony consisting of $1,800 of Continental money, which, from its depreciation, became wholly useless. On the 18th of April, 1777, her grandfather guided the troops to the battle of Lexington, and had five sons and five sons-in-law in that battle. The report also states that there is testimony to prove that she furnished supplies to the army by carding, spinning, knitting, and making clothes for the soldiers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

GEORGE STEALEY.

On motion by Mr. WELLER, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of George Stealey. It proposes to enact, that the account furnished by George Stealey for services rendered and expenses incurred by him as agent, appointed by the Indian commissioners of the United States for the State of California, to visit the northern tribes of Indians of that State, be referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with authority to cause it to be settled and paid upon principles of equity and justice; the settlement to be made upon satisfactory vouchers, showing that the expenses were actually incurred, and that the prices paid were just and proper, under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs was read; from which it appears that Mr. Stealey was employed in the years 1850 and 1851, by the United States Indian commissioners in California, to visit the tribes in the northern portion of the State, with a view to arrest their aggressions on the miners in that portion of the State, and to establish pacific relations between the Indians and the white inhabitants; in which he was successful. But when he returned from his mission, in consequence of the separation of the Board of Commissioners and the exhausted state of the funds, he was not compensated for his services, nor reimbursed the money expended by him. The committee think that he should be compensated for any services which he rendered under the direction of the United States Commissioner, and should be reimbursed any expenditures actually incurred in the performance of the duties assigned to him, on the production of satisfactory vouchers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

DAVID MURPHY.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of David Murphy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of David Murphy on the invalid pension-roll for life, at the rate of \$5 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per month—the pension to commence on February 27th, 1846, and to continue during life.

Mr. CLEMENS. I should like to know why we are called upon to pass this bill? What services has the party rendered? And if he has rendered any service, why is he not already upon the pension-roll?

Mr. CHASE. It will save time, perhaps, to have the report read. That states the facts of the case.

The report was accordingly read; from which it appears that David Murphy was a regular soldier in the service of the United States during the last war with Great Britain, and that he was wounded at the battle of the river Raisin, from the effects of which he has been seriously disabled. The committee, therefore, report a bill for his relief.

Mr. CHASE. I think after hearing the report no one can object to the bill.

Mr. CLEMENS. I do object to it. I do not like to encourage the system of granting pensions by special acts of Congress. By the rules of the Department, certain proofs are required before a person can obtain a pension. It is for the purpose of seeking to avoid those proofs that persons come here to get acts of Congress passed granting them pensions. I therefore give notice that I shall discuss this bill.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

BILL PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time and passed:

- A bill for the relief of Robert Grignon;
- A bill for the relief of Abigail Stafford;
- A bill for the relief of Henry C. Miller, Philip Thompson, and Jesse B. Turley;
- A bill for the relief of the representative of Henry King;
- A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of William Jones;
- A bill for the relief of Maria Taylor;
- A bill for the relief of Santiago E. Arguello; and
- A bill for the relief of Isaac Adams.

DRY DOCK IN CALIFORNIA.

The PRESIDENT. With the permission of the Senate, the Chair will present a communication from the Navy Department in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 6th instant, calling for copies of contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Navy for the use of the dry-dock in California.

The communication was read. It states that but one contract has been contemplated by the Department for the lease of the dock referred to, and that one is incomplete. The Secretary, however, incloses a copy of it, and states that the contract has not received his signature in consequence of the delay of the party in furnishing a satisfactory certificate of his competency to respond to the full amount of the forfeiture.

Mr. CLARKE. I move that the communication lie on the table. I suppose there is no necessity for having it printed, as we shall want it to use in a discussion which will take place in a few days.

Mr. WELLER. I prefer that the communication should be printed. I am very anxious to see the contract. Although it is an incomplete one, I understand that the persons who made it are now engaged in transporting a portion of the material to California.

Mr. CLARKE. The honorable Senator is not advised as to the facts. The contract to which he refers was for building a sectional dock and transporting that to California. This communication is in regard to the leasing of that dock.

Mr. WELLER. Then the fact that I am so profoundly ignorant in regard to the matter shows that it is necessary to have the communication printed, in order that I may get the necessary information. I therefore move that the communication be printed.

Mr. CLARKE. I shall make no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 13, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 297, "declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes."

Mr. SMART. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to report from the Committee on Military Affairs "A bill to authorize the payment of the claim of the State of Massachusetts for certain services of her militia during the late war." I do not intend to ask action upon it. My simple object is, as I am going to leave the city, to have the bill and accompanying report referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

There being no objection, the bill was reported, read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

POST ROUTES BILL.

Mr. OLDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads "A bill establishing certain post routes." We are now within two weeks of the close of the session, and it is important that it should go into the hands of the Post Office Committee of the Senate that they may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. BROOKS. Does the bill contain anything else besides post routes?

Mr. OLDS. No, sir.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and, having been engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Military Affairs "A bill to restore the civil superintendency of the national armories at Harper's Ferry and Springfield," which I have had in my desk for a long time. Great interest is felt in regard to it. I will not ask that the bill shall be put upon its passage, but that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There will be no time occupied in the consideration of the motion of reference.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK. I hope I may be successful in calling up a little bill for the State of Iowa, which I have, two or three times, endeavored to get action upon. It is a bill containing but one short section, and provides for the relinquishment of a small tract of land in the town of Bellevue. The people there need it for commercial purposes.

Mr. LETCHER. Does this come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does, and the morning hour has been running on since the commencement of the proceedings.

Mr. LETCHER. I regret that I shall have to object to the gentleman's proposition. The Wheeling Bridge case, which comes up as the business in order in the morning hour, is a very important matter, and should be acted upon at an early day.

THE WHEELING BRIDGE.

The House proceeded to consider the bill declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure.

Mr. WOODWARD, who was entitled to the floor from yesterday, finished his argument, showing that the power resided in Congress, under the Constitution, to determine whether this bridge was a nuisance, and such an one as should be removed. [See Appendix.]

Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE then obtained the floor, and proceeded to address the House in opposition to the passage of the bill. Before concluding, he was interrupted by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

THOMAS RITCHIE.

Mr. STANTON. I call, then, for the regular order of business—the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANLY. Is that printing business now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am anxious to get through with the Army appropriation bill to-day if possible, so that we may devote to-morrow to private bills; and if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] will allow me to do so—as he will retain the floor—I will move to close debate upon that bill, and then to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and try to finish it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. STANLY. When will this printing matter come up again, if I do?

The SPEAKER. It will come up regularly in the House as the first business in order, unless it be interfered with by some other privileged motion or question that may arise.

Mr. STANLY. I should be glad if the House would consent to postpone the bill in relation to Mr. Ritchie's claim until some day certain, so that I may know when it will come up. I move to postpone it until next Tuesday week.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina, to say next Tuesday.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, no; next Tuesday is too soon.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If it is to be postponed until next Tuesday week, it would be better to postpone it indefinitely and make an end of it at once, for that will be the effect of it.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will not press his motion to-day, but will let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and dispose of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. STANLY. My motion is not debatable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I appeal to the gentleman to yield me the floor to allow me to move to close the debate on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. No gentleman can have the floor on the motion to postpone, for it is not debatable.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I offer the usual resolution to close the debate on the Army appropriation bill in one hour after the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of the same.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that resolution.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. When the report of the Committee on Printing was postponed, it was with the understanding that it should be acted upon yesterday.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know that when it was postponed, it was expressly understood upon my part, and I believe upon the part of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON], that it was not to be acted upon yesterday.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I had no such understanding.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, that was my understanding.

The question now being upon the resolution submitted by Mr. HOUSTON—

Mr. LETCHER. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the resolution so as to close the debate in two hours instead of one.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. If that motion is agreed to, what will become of my motion to postpone the printing matter?

The SPEAKER. That will be the first question put when the matter again comes up.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Will it not come up to-morrow after the expiration of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will be the first business in the House, unless superseded by some privileged motion. Indeed, if the House should now refuse to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will come up at once.

Mr. BAYLY demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. FULLER, of Maine, and FOWLER, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOGOCCK in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that the business before the committee was the Army appropriation bill, and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. MACE addressed the committee an hour in reply to the remarks of Mr. STREVEN, of Pennsylvania, of yesterday, upon the subject of the presidential platforms. He defended the Democratic platform, and maintained that it was eminently proper for a party professing to be governed by principles to avow these principles in a tangible form. He alluded to the evils that might arise to the country should General Scott be elected to the Presidency (of which result, however, he had no fears) under the influences which have brought him forward, and are sustaining him for that office. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, addressed the House a short time in favor of a reorganization of the light-house system of the United States. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour has arrived when, under the resolution of the House, the debate upon this bill must close. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is entitled to the floor for one hour to close the debate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no desire to occupy any of the time of the committee. I wish, if possible, to get through the bill this evening.

The bill was then read by sections for amendments.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment:

After the word "million" in the eighth line, strike out "$703,714," and insert in lieu thereof "$353,206," so as to make the clause read, "For pay of the Army, $1,353,206."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the same committee to offer the following amendment:

After the word "recruiting," in the seventeenth line, strike out "$43,300," and insert in lieu thereof "$32,848 32," so as to make the clause read, "For expenses of recruiting, $32,848 32."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to strike out the word "twenty," in line one hundred and fifteenth, and to insert the word "forty" in lieu thereof, so as to make the clause read:

"For the purchase of horses required for the first and second regiments of dragoons, the companies of light artillery, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, $140,000."

The amendment was adopted.

When the following clause was read, viz:

"For the manufacture of arms at the National Armory, $250,000."

Mr. FAULKNER said: I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice yesterday, to come in at the end of the clause which has just been read.

The Clerk read the amendment as follows:

"Provided, That from and after the first day of October next, so much of the act of Congress approved August 23d, 1842, as places the national armories under the superintendence of an officer of the ordinance corps, be and the same is hereby repealed; and from that day, the said armories shall be under that system of superintendence which existed prior to the passage of the said act of Congress."

Mr. HOUSTON. I raise a question of order in relation to that amendment. A bill has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs for precisely the same purpose; and besides that, it is a proposition to change the whole law, in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama, and rules the amendment out of order, on the ground that it includes in effect a bill now before the House. It is positively forbidden by one of the rules of the House that any amendment shall be offered to an appropriation bill, which is similar to a bill at that time on the Calendar or before the House. The Chair also rules it out of order on the ground that it is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following as an additional section to the bill, viz:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1851, approved 28th September, 1850, as provides extra pay to the commissioned officers and enlisted men serving in Oregon and California, be and the same is hereby continued in force for one year from the 1st day of March, 1852.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to say one word. The amendment explains itself. It merely proposes to continue in force the law of 1850, giving increased compensation to the officers and men serving in California and Oregon, for twelve months from last March. The law which passed at the last session of Congress expired last March, and this amendment is in pursuance of the recommendation of the War Department.

Mr. EVANS. What the gentleman says is perfectly correct, and the amendment ought to be adopted; but it should also embrace New Mexico. The expenses of living there are very great, and all the reasons for increasing the pay in Oregon and California apply with equal force to New Mexico.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am individually opposed to the amendment which I am instructed to offer; but I think I can give reasons why it should not apply to New Mexico, especially in its present terms. The troops in New Mexico, California, and Oregon, get their rations, so that the expense of living has nothing to do with the increased pay. The argument used at the last Congress in favor of this increase of pay was, that anywhere within each of the gold mines in California, the temptation to the soldiers to abandon the service, to desert and go into a better business, was so great that it was impossible to keep the ranks in the condition in which they were sent out. That feeling induced the enactment of the law of 1850, and that feeling exists there at present to a very great extent. But so far as New Mexico is concerned, the same argument does not apply at all, and the greater portion of Oregon, I presume, comes within the principle that I would apply to New Mexico. The officers, I learn, are under the influence of the high price of living. They do not draw their rations in kind, but draw commutation, with which they provide rations. Where the living is very dear, therefore, it might be argued that their pay ought to be somewhat increased. These are the arguments which induced the committee to instruct me to propose this amendment to the House.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I move to amend the amendment so as to extend the operation of the law to New Mexico. The reasons that the gentleman from Alabama has given for increasing the pay of the troops in Oregon and California apply with equal force to New Mexico. The gentleman says that in New Mexico the soldiers get their rations and clothes, and that therefore it cannot make any difference to them what may be the prices of living. Well, sir, so do they get their rations and clothing in California and Oregon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I said so.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. They stand on precisely the same footing as the troops in New Mexico.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think the gentleman understood me. I said that so far as the expense of living was concerned, I did not think that should affect the pay of the soldiers either in California or New Mexico; but that in California, within the region of the gold districts, where such exorbitant wages were given, and such inducements held out for persons to go and labor in the mines, large numbers of men deserted, often leaving the ranks only one third full; and with a view of keeping them in their positions, the Government was compelled to recommend that which was adopted in 1850, and which the Secretary of War proposes shall be continued now.

The Secretary of War has sent me a copy of a communication which he addressed to the Military Committee of the Senate yesterday. I received it but a moment ago, and have not had time to read it through. He says:

"You will perceive that I have left the amount in the draft of the amendment blank. The amount required for the officers on the basis proposed in the draft will be $276,665, and for the soldiers in full pay, $31,892."

Mr. HAVEN. Does that cover the item on the eighth and ninth lines?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir; that item is for the pay proper, as it is called, of the Army, and it was reduced by the Committee of Ways and Means on our first action, about $200,000. Since that time, the Secretary of War has revised his estimates, and recommends a reduction of $500,000 upon his original estimates, which we had reduced about $200,000; so that the estimates are, in truth, reduced to half a million of dollars, in pursuance of the revised estimates of the War Department.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I take occasion to assert, that the prices of living in New Mexico are as high, or nearly so, as they are in California.

Mr. BISSELL. They are higher than they are in California, for the very obvious reason, that the supplies are taken by water to California and Oregon, and by land, by very expensive transportation, to New Mexico.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. As I understand the argument of the gentleman from Alabama, it is this: that the troops in California are to have the benefit of this provision, because desertions take place there; and the troops in New Mexico are not to have the benefit of it, because the soldiers there do not desert. In other words, the troops in California are to be rewarded for deserting the colors of the country.

Mr. HOUSTON. We must take things as they are, and meet circumstances as we find them. I presented my objections to the Secretary of War, in conversation with him here last evening; and he replied to me by saying that these facts existed; that it cost from $150 to $200 to take a man out there, and that for him to desert immediately he got there, would be a very expensive process to the Government. We thought it best to give them this in addition, in order to induce them to remain in the line. But these reasons do not apply to New Mexico at all. I hope the amendment will not prevail. I am willing that it should be made for Oregon and California.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order until the amendment to the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. BISSELL. I have bestowed a great deal of attention to this subject, and to my mind the conviction is irresistible, that this provision ought to be extended to New Mexico, and for the very best of reasons. The cost of living is higher in New Mexico than it is in Oregon or California.

Mr. HOUSTON. But that reason is not applied to support the original amendment.

Mr. BISSELL. But I do apply it, and for this reason: Everybody knows that the soldier does not live exclusively upon his rations. He wants vegetables and very many things which are really necessary, and which, as rations, are not supplied to him. These he has to purchase, and does purchase out of his private means. Now, in New Mexico, as well as in Oregon and California, for many obvious reasons, those necessary articles are two, three, or four hundred per cent. higher than they are here with us. If there is any reason at all, then, for extending these provisions to the soldiers and officers in California and Oregon, there is a stronger, though similar reason, for extending it to those in New Mexico. There can be no question in relation to it, and I believe there will be none with this committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, sir, I am not perfectly well informed upon this subject. I have just received communications from the War Department, which I will have read if it is the pleasure of the committee. I have not had time since their receipt to read them myself. I wish, however, to say this: The estimates now incorporated in the provision now under consideration, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, were in accordance with the recommendations of the Department, $394,116. These may be proper. I do not think, however, they ought to apply to New Mexico. The Secretary of War's communication to me says:

"You will perceive that the estimate is for full pay for the enlisted men, but I think a less addition to their pay, (say not to exceed one half,) would suffice."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut. I would suggest that the amendment pending should be verbally amended, in order to accomplish the object for which it was designed. It now provides that "so much of this act," &c. Now, the act here alluded to does not apply to New Mexico. I would suggest, therefore, a verbal amendment to obviate that difficulty. That is, to add after 1852, the words, "and that the provisions of the last-mentioned act be, and are hereby extended to New Mexico, during the current year provided for by this section."

The question was then taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now propose, in pursuance of the recommendation of the Secretary of War, to offer an amendment. I will read the letter. It is the following:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, August 6, 1852.
SIR: In compliance with your request I have the honor to transmit you a draft of an amendment to the bill for the support of the Army; making provision for extra pay to the officers and enlisted men of the Army serving at distant and expensive posts.

You will perceive that the estimate is for full pay for the enlisted men, but I think a less addition to their pay—say not exceeding one half—would suffice.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. M. CONRAD, Secretary of War.
Hon. JAMES SHIELDS, Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

The following is the letter upon which the Committee of Ways and Means based the original amendment which I offered this morning, under their instructions:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, April 26, 1852.
SIR: I have the honor to refer you to the recommendation, in my last annual report, for the re-enactment of so much of the act of 28th September, 1850, as allows a small additional pay to the officers and soldiers in California, which expired by its own limitation on the 1st ultimo. The necessity for a continuance of the allowance will be seen from an extract of a letter from General Hitchcock, hereto appended, and for which I ask the favorable consideration of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. M. CONRAD, Secretary of War.
Hon. GEORGE S. HORTON, Chairman Committee of Ways and Means.

Extract of a letter from General Hitchcock, commanding Pacific Division, dated Benicia, California, March 13, 1852:

"From the detachment of recruits which arrived here the 27th ultimo, I regret to say thirty-five have deserted up to this date. This was to have been expected, and the more so since the extra pay heretofore authorized by Congress ceased the first of this month. Unless authority for this allowance be re-enacted, I fear the returns will, for some time, exhibit great reductions from month to month, until the most efficient, if not conscientious men, shall have gone to the mines so inviting to their imaginations."

Mr. H. I now move to amend the amendment so as to provide that they shall be allowed one half the amount provided under the law of 1850.

Mr. BISSELL. I rise to a question of order. The amendment now proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Alabama purports to be an amendment to an amendment already offered by the gentleman himself. The original amendment was reported by him from the Committee of Ways and Means. The question I make is, that the gentleman having reported the original amendment cannot amend it himself.

Mr. HOUSTON. I then offered it from the committee, and now as an individual.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, upon the ground that any member of the House is, by the rules, entitled to offer an amendment. The rules do not discriminate one member from another. Any other gentleman would be entitled to offer an amendment. The Chair, therefore, rules that the gentleman from Alabama may offer the amendment, and that it is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. If there is any difficulty about the matter, or if any one objects, I will get the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the gentleman from Alabama has the right to offer the amendment, and the amendment was received by the Chair. Does the gentleman now propose to withdraw it?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will withdraw it.

Mr. HAVEN. I now send to the Clerk's desk an amendment intended to effect the object of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. The object of the amendment is simply this: The law of 1850 provides for giving the officers and soldiers in California and Oregon double pay. This amendment proposes to give to the officers and soldiers in California, Oregon, and New Mexico their regular pay, and one half the regular pay in addition, making one half the regular pay less than provided for by the law of 1850.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I wish to say a word in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York. That amendment proposes to reduce this extra pay to one half the regular pay. That is directly in opposition to the amendment and recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means. The original amendment was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, under instructions from the committee, and I understand the Committee on Military Affairs are also in favor of it. I hope the original amount reported will be voted, and that this amendment will not be adopted. The former is the recommendation of the two committees, the latter the motion of an individual member of this House.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to say a single word more upon this subject. While there are reasons such as those urged by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means for not continuing the full amount of this increase of payment to the officers and men in California and Oregon, those reasons do not exist in New Mexico. The same necessity does not exist in the State of California and Territory of Oregon, because of the immense amount of supplies which have been taken in there in consequence of the great increase of the commerce between the Atlantic and Pacific, and which has nearly brought the Pacific coast upon something like an equality with the Atlantic. But that does not apply to New Mexico, where the transportation is carried on now, as heretofore, upon wheels or upon the backs of mules. There is no particular increase of transportation, nor is there any cheapening in the cost of transportation; and the consequence is, that while the Secretary of War may very properly say that less compensation may answer in California and Oregon, the same reasons do not apply with regard to New Mexico.

Mr. HAMILTON. I wish to inquire if the amendment of the gentleman from New York does not provide for raising the pay of the soldiers in New Mexico one half?

Mr. HAVEN. It does.

Mr. PRICE. I wish merely to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if the letter of the Secretary of War which he has read makes any discrimination between California and New Mexico?

Mr. HOUSTON. It says nothing about New Mexico.

Mr. PRICE. Does he recommend that a reduction shall take place in California and Oregon?

Mr. BISSELL. Does it make a general recommendation? Let the communication be read. I suppose it refers to California and Oregon.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is a general communication; and is as follows:

"In compliance with your request, I have the honor to transmit you a draft of an amendment to the bill for the support of the Army, making provision for extra pay to the officers and enlisted men of the Army serving at distant and expensive posts."

"You will perceive that the estimate is for full pay for the enlisted men, but I think a less addition to their pay (say not to exceed one half) would suffice."

The committee will see that it applies to all, and the amendment is right. The communication was dated August 6, 1852.

The original amendment and the amendment to the amendment were again read.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. HAVEN, and it was agreed to.

The question next being on the original amendment as amended, it was taken and decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to. Mr. BISSELL offered the following amendment:

For the purpose of testing the practicability of employing camels on the plains, as a substitute in part for horses, $20,000.

Mr. B. said: Mr. Chairman, that amendment proposes an appropriation of $20,000 for the purpose of enabling the War Department to test the practicability of introducing camels upon the western plains as a substitute in part for horses. The subject of introducing camels upon the western plains has engrossed the attention of thinking men—those connected with the administration of the Government, as well as others, for many years, and during the last one or two years the Department itself had paid especial attention to it.

The Secretary of War informs me that he has had as minute and thorough an investigation into all the prospects and probabilities of the success of the enterprise as his means enabled him to obtain, and he has arrived at the conclusion that camels may with very great propriety and great advantage be introduced into the public service, to be used upon these extensive plains in the west, in the place of horses; and he asks that an appropriation of $20,000 be made for the purpose of enabling him to make that experiment.

The Military Committee, who have reflected much upon the subject, request the introduction of this amendment, and hope that it may be adopted.

Mr. EVANS. In addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, I would state that this matter was proposed by the Hon. Jefferson Davis, a year or two ago. It is an amendment which ought to be adopted for this single reason, that there are many broad arid plains in western Texas, New Mexico, and elsewhere, where, for want of water, it is impossible to pursue the Indians, and they easily escape. The introduction of camels there, which, as every one knows, can go without water many days, will afford greater facilities to overtake and conquer these Indians. They are uniformly more fleet than horses upon long journeys, and the Secretary of War, from the investigation which he has been able to give to the subject, is satisfied that he can introduce and keep camels there, and can introduce persons to take care of them. The sum of money asked for is small, and the enterprise may be a successful one, and probably will be.

Gentlemen of the committee will recollect that, in some parts of Texas, as we observe from reports of officers who come from that quarter, there has not been rain for a year. Now, it is indispensably necessary to have some animal there suited to the transportation of burdens, and having the proper rapidity of enabling our troops to overtake these Indians. You must have some animal that can go without water for a long time. If any man has read the account of the exploration of Captain French in western Texas, he will there have discovered the fact that his company suffered great torments, and sometimes went seventy miles without water.

Mr. HOUSTON. I confess that I know less about this amendment and of its merits than any of the amendments which have yet been offered to any appropriation bill. I have not examined into the matter, and I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN,] who knows more of the matter than I do.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 135.

Mr. GORMAN. I am the only one, perhaps, of the Military Committee but what agrees to this amendment, as I learn. I did not happen to be present when it was under consideration formally before the committee. I have an objection to it which I think is a good one. The objection to the present mode of transportation is the want of water. It is universally known, that upon the plains of Mexico, just such plains as we have to cross in getting to our extreme western borders and territories, the Government of Mexico adopted quite a different plan, and which has been found to be, in several instances, not only the salvation of their people, but the salvation of their armies, and but for that, Santa Anna never would have been able to return to San Luis Potosi. They adopted the mode of constructing water tanks, and filling them from the large rocky mountains by spouts, and of having the tanks arranged along the routes, and keeping them perpetually filled with water. I have seen them at different times, and but for them—which is a matter of history—Santa Anna never would have been able to have reached the city of Mexico.

Mr. BISSELL. I have seen them, after a hard day's march, without water. After a hard day's march of perhaps forty miles, without water, after arriving at them, we have found them as dry as a powder flask.

Mr. GORMAN. No doubt some of them are as dry as a powder flask; and if they are dry where is the water to be had? After all the experiments of engineers, and of that Government, in that climate where it rains six months and is dry for six months, that is the only plan ever successfully carried out, and made available for the supply of water. To be sure I have seen them dry. I have also seen them stale and stagnant; and I have been compelled to drink out of them, and so has the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL.] And I have been compelled to make coffee and tea out of the water; and that, too, after cattle had passed through them. But, notwithstanding, that was better than none at all.

That is almost the only mode of obtaining water between Buena Vista and San Luis Potosi, a distance of some three or four hundred miles. There is only one stream in that distance that furnishes any water of consequence; and I have heard that there are some two Artesian wells. But this I doubt. There are tanks constructed about every fifteen miles—large places dug out of the earth, walled in, and then cemented with a species of water lime. On the route from San Antonio to New Mexico you find the same kind of soil; and on the route to Oregon and California the same rocky mountains in every direction would furnish facilities for supplying these tanks. And the only mode by which you can obtain water is by this means in a very dry season. I am by no means satisfied that the introduction of camels would facilitate our transportation to these distant Territories.

Mr. VENABLE. I move to amend by increasing the amount to $22,000.

I have had my attention called to this subject, chiefly by the researches of my friend, Colonel Davis, of Mississippi, during the last session of Congress. I am satisfied that there is no experiments in which the War Department can engage which is likely to be more valuable, and promises to save us much money. My friend from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] says the Mexicans have substituted tanks upon their lines of march. But, Sir, we are informed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] that they have been a failure. But whether they have been successful, or have proved a failure, would be a small circumstance in settling this question.

The history of the world, for thousands of years, has proved that the only animal that can be safely and profitably employed in crossing deserts, is the camel. They are the ships of the desert. The history of the earliest days presents us with the fact that the camel has been used in traversing deserts. Whatever improvements have taken place in the modes of transportation throughout the world, no alteration has been made for thousands of years in the modes of transportation and travel over dry and desert countries. The camel is still the ship of the desert, and it is an object very well worthy of the enterprise of the War Department to introduce into our country that valuable animal, that can live in a cold as well as a warm climate; that can live readily upon the rich prairie, and more barren plains of our country; that can live upon good herbage, and in case of necessity can live upon the coarsest; that can travel from fifty to seventy miles a day, with a burden of five hundred pounds upon his back. We will introduce an animal that will be most important to us hereafter in our military operations, in the transportation of our troops and munitions of war; and at the same time that we do this at the expense of the Government, we will aid all agricultural enterprises, and the means of communication between distant and remote parts of our country—we shall enable them to attain to that sort of civilization which can only be maintained by pressing continual intercommunication.

We have never seen an enterprise presented by the War Department, or by any other Department of this Government, which so much deserves the respect and confidence of this House. If it fails, the expense ends. It is a small amount, and it will lead to the introduction of an animal which constitutes the wealth of every eastern country, and that is more valued by the Arab than his own fine Arabian horse, because when the horse fails, the camel will endure.

I trust the committee will have no difficulty upon the subject. It is a moral question connected with the advance of civilization upon our frontiers. It will give to those settlements animals which will bring them the wealth always brought by the camel, in the countries where there are no other means of transportation than by that animal. He can bear fatigue; he can bear coarse food; he can bear abstinences; and above all, he can bear abstinence from water, whilst he can transport water for those who ride him.

Mr. McCORKLE. This strikes me as a very novel amendment, not to say ridiculous one. Travelers to the Pacific coast need not be without water for a single day upon the best roads. The time has been when these roads were new and unexplored, and there may have been cases when the emigrant was caught in the desert without water. But upon the northern route to California, through the South Pass, there is no necessity of ever being without water for a single hour. Upon the southern route to California, by the Colorado river, there are two or three sand deserts, each of thirty or forty miles in length, to be crossed, where there is no water; but the emigrant takes water in his wagon, and gets along without any difficulty, except the suffering his cattle are obliged to endure for the want of water. We have most of us been over the plains in early time to see what we called "the elephant," but we never expected to see the camel. [Laughter.] It will be a new and extraordinary animal in our menagerie.

Mr. VENABLE. Both the cow and horse were introduced into this country by the Spaniards. I never apprehended the man would not be thirsty because the camel drank so much water—never in the world; but the camel can carry water upon his back for the purpose of sustaining the traveler, as is done in the East.

Mr. McCORKLE. I do not know anything of the natural history of the camel. I yield to the gentleman all he claims; but I do not wish this appropriation to be made here upon the ground that that animal is of any use whatever upon the plains. If the gentleman wishes simply to introduce the camel into the United States, let him put his argument upon that ground, and not introduce it upon the ground that it is necessary for traversing the plains between here and California. I do not believe a man who has spent but a year on the plains or in the mountains, instead of one that has been living there for twenty years, would have anything to do with it. He would regard them as a nuisance.

Mr. BISSELL. Are there not sandy deserts of thirty or forty miles in length, to be crossed by the traveler, where there is no water?

Mr. McCORKLE. There is one called the Humboldt.

Mr. BISSELL. I do not place this appropriation upon the ground that there is a want of water, simply, upon the plains. Admit there is water every twenty-five miles between this and California, and I will still vote for this appropriation, and then do a very proper thing. Independent of there not being any water, it is well worthy the experiment to see if that animal is not a useful one upon the plains, and whether it will not propagate there as well as elsewhere.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. VENABLE, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the amendment of Mr. BISSELL; it was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I omitted, in preparing the amendment I submitted a moment ago, the amount of money which should be appropriated. The estimates of the Department were for $394,000 for California and Oregon for full pay. We have added New Mexico, which will make, I suppose, $600,000. We then put it upon half pay, which will be $300,000. I hope the committee will, by unanimous consent, allow the insertion into that amendment of $300,000 for that object.

There was no objection, and the proposition was agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. I submit the following amendment:

Provided, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized to adjust and pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, with interest from the 17th of October, 1813, the balance due to the Petersburg, Virginia, volunteers, who served in Canada during the war of 1812 with Great Britain, said balance for pay, rations, arms, and traveling allowance, having been withheld from them by Paymaster Joseph G. Chalmers, who became insolvent.

I am satisfied that any man who heard the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] on yesterday in regard to that claim, would not hesitate one moment to vote for this amendment. It is necessary that I should say something concerning it, being the member of the Committee on Military Affairs to which the claim was referred. It was referred upon the petition of two of the privates of that company and the captain, who say, upon their several oaths, that this money is due to them. I instituted a correspondence with the proper Department of the Government, and found that this claim had been sleeping for something like forty years, and that the Department had heretofore refused to pay that amount to these volunteers from the simple fact that no pay rolls had been returned by the paymaster. But were all governed by the history of this case, I am satisfied in my own mind that every gentleman upon this floor would unhesitatingly vote for it.

This company performed valuable service in the late war with Great Britain. They were mustered out of service in the State of Ohio; and it was understood at the time of their discharge, that the paymaster would pay what was due them, being ten months' pay, and transportation and subsistence home to Petersburg. They were mustered out of service, but waited several days in the constant expectation of meeting with the paymaster. He never came.

Mr. GOODENOW. I submit the point that this amendment is not in order, it being in the nature of a private claim.

Mr. WILCOX. It is not a private claim. It is the payment of certain amounts due to a whole company for public service.

Mr. HOUSTON. I had intended to make the point of order which has been raised by the gentleman from Maine when the gentleman had concluded his remarks. The Committee on Military Affairs decided that it was a private claim.

The CHAIRMAN. That statement arrested the attention of the Chair upon yesterday, and he took it that it went to produce the impression that the amendment was not in order. If it is a private claim the amendment is not in order. The Chair subsequently considered the subject and determined to rule the amendment in order, upon the ground that it is not a private claim, but an appropriation to pay a large number of men for services rendered the country according to law.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make another point of order, as the Chair rules it is not a private claim in the face of the decision of the Military Committee, which I did not suppose he would. I make the point that there is no law now authorizing the appropriation of this money. Under the 81st rule, no appropriation can be made in any appropriation bill, except in pursuance of law, or to carry on some object already appropriated for. The payment of this claim is not authorized by any law now in existence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that, at the time these services were rendered, a law existed, in pursuance of which they were recognized.

Mr. HOUSTON. That law expired by its own limitation. There is no law now. I make the point that there is no law now, and not that there was no law then, to pay this claim; and is, therefore, not in order here. If this private claim be admitted into this appropriation bill, the whole Private Calendar may be introduced.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. It is perfectly in order to move an amendment to sustain any of the Departments of the Government. There is a law for the support of the War Department, and I think it necessary for the support of that Department that these soldiers should be paid.

Mr. HOUSTON. A Department of Government does not mean that. It means the Department here at Washington.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think the Army is one of the most important Departments of the Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman's construction would cause to be introduced here the whole private docket. Every single one grows out of something done for the Government.

Mr. MEADE. The Third Auditor, in the letter I read yesterday to the committee, considers there is authority for him to pay, and he would pay these claims, but for the decision made by his predecessors. Surely this cannot be considered a private claim. It is for the payment of an entire company, recognized by law as being mustered into the service of the United States, and who have not received their arrearages.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will raise another point. The last section directs that the money appropriated in this bill shall be applied to the current service of the Government, and that no part of it shall go to pay any old debts.

Mr. GAYLORD. We will strike that out. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The section to which the gentleman alludes, is as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts authorizing the President of the United States, or the Secretary of the proper Department, under his direction, to transfer any portion of the moneys appropriated for a particular branch of expenditure in that Department, to be applied to another branch of expenditure in the same Department, be, and are hereby, so far as relates to the Department of War, repealed; and no portion of the moneys appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of any expenses incurred prior to the first day of July, 1852.

The Chair is inclined to the belief that the amendment would be inconsistent with this provision of the bill, which has been passed over, and cannot now be amended. The other points raised by the gentleman, the Chair overrules.

Mr. MEADE. Do I understand the Chair as deciding the amendment to be out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear any suggestions in relation to the matter. Upon the points of order previously raised by the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair decides the amendment to be in order. The Chair is inclined to the belief that it would be inconsistent with the provision of the bill just read, and which has already been acted upon.

Mr. FOWLER. If it be in order to insert this amendment to pay that company, would it not be in order to insert an amendment to pay the claim of Massachusetts for services in the same war? That claim is pending before the House. I desire to know that fact of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order, upon the last point raised by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.]

Mr. MEADE. Has the bill been read through?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read through.

Mr. MEADE. Then I move that amendment in the shape of a proviso, after the last line.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman cannot do it. Other amendments have been added since. We have passed one or two sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must rule that it is not in order.

Mr. POLK. I wish to submit an amendment.

Mr. MEADE. I must take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Has the Chair decided this amendment to be out of order, upon the last point raised by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON?]

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. It is inconsistent with the part of the bill already acted upon, and it cannot be amended.

Mr. STEPHENS. I take an appeal.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is too late to take an appeal.

Mr. POLK. I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object to the withdrawal.

Mr. POLK. As the amendment has not been reported, I have a right to withdraw it.

Mr. HOUSTON. That will not benefit my friend from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] for we have passed from this question. It has been decided, and amendments have been received. We are acting upon other matter, and it is therefore too late to appeal from the decision which the Chair made.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish it understood, that I object to the withdrawal of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. POLK.]

Mr. POLK. The amendment I offered was not reported by the Clerk, and I have a right to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes the rule is, that after an amendment has been submitted, read at the Clerk's desk, and reported to the House, it is too late to withdraw it if any objection be made; but the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. POLK] has not been reported to the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then he cannot withdraw it, because it is not before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to say a few, very few words upon the point of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to any debate upon the point of order. It is not debatable.

Mr. STEPHENS. Why not?

Mr. HOUSTON. Because debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] can state his point of order. It is not, however, debatable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I stated my point of order, and the Chair sustained the point I made. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] appeals, but he cannot make any statement about it. No debate upon it is in order.

Mr. STEPHENS. I insist that I have a right to state the grounds upon which I take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia can state his appeal.

Mr. STEPHENS. We have in committee after debate is stopped, the same limitation to debate an appeal which we have to debate an amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not at all.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is no rule of the House declaring debate on an appeal in committee out of order; and after debate has been closed in committee by resolution of the House, we have the right to debate an appeal the same as the right to debate an amendment—we have the right for a five minutes' debate. This is my understanding of the proper construction of the rules of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. The universal practice of the House is—and my friend from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] will not doubt it—that there is no debate upon appeals from the decision of the Chair. Debate has been stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as every other question is concerned, debate is cut off except in cases excepted by the rule, and that is to explain and oppose an amendment. Under a specific rule debate is now cut off.

Mr. STEPHENS. My object was to show the Chair, and the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] that the decision was wrong. If I cannot have an opportunity to make that statement, I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. WILCOX. I submit the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized to adjust and pay, with interest from the 17th October, 1813, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the balance due to the Petersburg, Virginia, volunteers who served in Canada during the war of 1812 with Great Britain; said balance for pay, rations, and arms, and traveling allowance having been withheld from them by Paymaster Joseph G. Chalmers, who became insolvent; and nothing in any preceding part of this act shall prevent the payment hereby provided for said volunteers.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a point of order. That amendment is out of order, according to the rule adopted in all the appropriation bills. An amendment precisely of the same character as this, offered by my colleague, [Mr. GORMAN,] to pay the clerks of the Delaware breakwater for services rendered in accordance with law, was ruled out in the civil and diplomatic bill. This is clearly a private claim.

Mr. MEADE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] has made a point of order, that this is a private claim, which the Chair has previously overruled. There are three lines added to the original amendment, which obviates the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] and which the Chair sustained. This clause made an exception.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule of the committee, as the Chair understands it, is, that when a bill is read over by sections, and acted upon, no section or paragraph so acted upon can afterwards be altered by a proposition to amend with anything inconsistent with it. The last clause of the bill has been read and passed, and it is a part of the bill, and the Chair rules that there can be nothing added to the bill inconsistent with that clause, and therefore rules the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILCOX] to be out of order.

Mr. MEADE. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was then taken upon the appeal, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. POLK. I offer the following amendment:

Provided, That the first proviso of the thirteenth section of the act approved March 3d, 1847, entitled an "An act making provision for an additional number of general officers, and for other purposes," be and the same is hereby repealed, so as to place the officers of the Disbursing Departments upon the same footing with respect to rank.

The amendment explains itself. It is merely to place officers of the Disbursing Department upon the same footing with those of the Quartermaster's Department. It does not increase their pay, but merely gives the right of position in the Army which is held by the commissaries and quartermasters. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. I am sorry that the gentleman offered that amendment, because it cannot be debated in a five minutes' speech. I cannot see myself, how it is possible that a paymaster does not occupy equivalent rank with the quartermaster or commissary. The mere question of rank in a Paymaster's Department gives no additional pay. That is true. The question of rank is, as I understand it, the same with the paymaster as it is with the quartermaster, except upon courts-martial. Why it is they desire this, unless by some construction given by the War Department it will give additional pay, I am at loss to know. They are now upon the same footing, except perhaps upon courts-martial.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I can explain that fact to the gentleman, if he will allow me.

Mr. GORMAN. They have no lieutenant colonels—they have no colonels. If they have—

Mr. POLK. In the organization of that department by the act of 1849, they have one paymaster general, with the rank of colonel, and two assistant paymasters, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and twenty-five majors.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to raise a point of order upon the amendment. This amendment does not make an appropriation, but it is a change of the law in regard to military rank in the Army, and it is, therefore, not germane to the bill now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It purports to be a proviso, but certainly is not germane to anything in this bill. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston.]

Mr. HOUSTON. There is nothing to which it can be a proviso.

Mr. POLK. Will it be in order to make it an additional section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to rule the amendment out of order. It is changing the rank and condition of the Army, and it is not germane to the subject of the bill.

Mr. POLK. Will the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. Houston] tell me where it can be introduced to be in order?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the committee, I will read the section which my colleague [Mr. Polk] wishes to perfect, to show that—

Mr. BISSELL. If the amendment is ruled out of order, I object to any further discussion upon the subject.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee rise, and report the bill.

Mr. POLK. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Polk] submitted an amendment, which has been reported to the House, and which has been ruled out of order by the Chair. From that decision the gentleman takes an appeal. The question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. McCORKLE. I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $71,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the soldiers and officers who served in the war with Mexico as volunteers under Colonel Frémont, for their services as such, according to the terms on which they entered such service.

Mr. JONES. I submit that that is another private claim, and cannot be offered as an amendment to this bill. I ask the gentleman from California if there is any law authorizing the payment of it?

Mr. McCORKLE. There was a general law passed for the payment of claims of this sort.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment stands pretty much in the same position as the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. Wilcox,] and the Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. BISSELL. I offer the following amendment:

That paymasters' clerks shall be entitled to receive one ration per day when on duty at their stations, to be commuted at the price now authorized when traveling on duty.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise the question of order upon that amendment, that it does not relate to any part of this bill, and that there is no general law authorizing the clerks of paymasters to receive rations.

Mr. HOUSTON. They are not paid in this bill at all, but in the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. BISSELL. If this bill does not provide for the payment of military officers and of persons employed in the military department of the Government, I do not know what it does. This amendment proposes simply to increase the pay of one class of the employees in that department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Alabama to say, that the pay of paymasters and the officers provided for in this amendment is included in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and constitutes no part of the subject-matter of this bill.

Mr. BISSELL. It might be very properly a part of this bill. I apprehend that a paymaster is a military officer.

Mr. HOUSTON. These officers were provided for in the civil and diplomatic bill, which passed a few days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. HOWARD. I offer the following amendment:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to accept the services of as many companies of mounted

Texas rangers as he may deem necessary for the protection of the frontier: Provided, That the whole force thus raised and employed in Texas shall not exceed five companies, of one hundred men to each company. Each of said companies of rangers shall consist of one captain, one first, one second, and one third lieutenant, five sergeants, five corporals, and one hundred privates, who shall engage to serve twelve months from the time they are mustered into service. That said rangers shall provide their own horses, clothes, and equipments, with the exception of arms and ammunition, which shall be supplied by the Government. That the commissioned officers shall receive the same pay and emoluments as officers of the same grade in the United States Army, and shall receive the same forage and rations as those of the same grade in the Army of the United States; and the non-commissioned officers shall receive the same pay, forage, and rations as were allowed to volunteers during the late war with Mexico, but shall in no case be entitled to pay for the loss of horses or private property. That when the President shall deem it necessary to employ any portion of said force, he shall cause the Governor of Texas to be notified thereof, designating the number of companies and place of muster, and the Governor shall select said companies, who, when mustered into service, shall be subject to the rules and articles of war.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That amendment is clearly not in order. It is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment proposes to change the constitution of the forces for the protection of the frontier. It is also inconsistent with a provision of the bill which has been already acted upon and passed over. The gentleman from Texas will remember that the Chair distinctly stated, a little while ago, that the practice of the committee was to read over the bill by sections, that when a section had been acted upon and passed over it was no longer liable to amendment, and that nothing could be adopted afterwards inconsistent with what had been thus passed over.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know what portion of the bill my amendment is inconsistent with.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a section of the bill with which the Chair thinks it is inconsistent.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like the Chair to point out what provision of the bill my amendment is inconsistent with.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas, at any rate, makes an appropriation in pursuance of no law now existing. It proposes to raise a new force.

Mr. HOWARD. My amendment proposes no appropriation, and the Chair will recollect that under a general law, the President—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir; I do not understand what the decision of the Chair is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. HENN. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to distribute arms to the several States and Territories, upon the basis of the number of free white male inhabitants of the respective States and Territories, over the age of eighteen years and under the age of forty-five years, as shown by the latest census taken by authority of Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That amendment is not in order. It is not in pursuance of any law now existing, and it has no connection with this bill. The arming of the militia is a separate and distinct subject from the pay of the regular Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. BISSELL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put, and decided in the negative.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following amendment:

That the sum of $400 be paid to the adjutant of the second regiment of artillery, for the use of the regimental fund, for instruments belonging to the band of said regiment, which were lost or destroyed, by casualties, during the battles of Cerro Gordo and Molino del Rey, the musicians having been ordered into the ranks.

I presume that is in order. It is an appropriation of money.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand, from the reading of the amendment, that this is a private claim.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a proposition to pay for munitions of war, recognized as such by the articles of war.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make the point of order that this is a private claim. I understand that it has not been examined by any committee of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is disposed to regard it as a private claim.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Chair will hear a suggestion in relation to that amendment. I shall be compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair. Here is a claim—for what? For a part of the munitions of war, just as much as the life and drum are. Would it not be in order to make an appropriation in this bill to purchase drums and fifes for the Army? I insist that this amendment is as legitimate as anything can be to this bill, and I can show the Chair, in the last Army appropriation bill, items of a similar character, ad infinitum.

Mr. FOWLER. I raise a question of order upon another consideration, and that is, that the amendment is inconsistent with a section of the bill already passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this to be a proposition to indemnify a particular individual for losses incurred at Cerro Gordo and Molino del Rey, that instruments belonging to the regiment were there lost, that the loss fell upon a particular individual or individuals, and that this amendment proposes to indemnify them for that loss. On that ground, the Chair holds it to be a private claim, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. GORMAN. From that decision I appeal.

The question was put—"Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"—and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. — It shall be the duty of the President of the United States to cause all the troops now in the public service, except such as are necessary for the protection of the frontiers from Indian depredations, and to protect the public property at the forts and arsenals of the United States, to be disbanded and discharged from service during the present fiscal year.

Mr. SWEETSER. I would inquire of my colleague if he wishes to discharge General Scott?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I submit that that amendment is not in order, because it proposes to abolish the Army, for which this bill is to make appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. MEADE. I will again offer my amendment, in order to give the Chair an opportunity of reconsidering the point of order. It seems to me that, by a strict construction of that clause to which exception is taken on the point of order—

[Shouts of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact—

[Shouts of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. MEADE. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized to adjust and pay, with interest from the 17th October, 1813, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the balance due to the Petersburg Virginia volunteers who served in Canada during the war of 1812, with Great Britain; said balance for pay, rations, arms, and traveling allowance, having been withheld from them by Paymaster Joseph G. Chalmers, who became insolvent.

Mr. GOODENOW. I rise to a point of order. I submit that this same amendment has been proposed before, and ruled out of order by the Chair.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the indulgence of the committee to read the last four lines of the section, to show that this amendment is in order. I wish to show that it does not appropriate any money at all.

Mr. GOODENOW. But my point of order is based upon different grounds entirely.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to present this point to the Chair—

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GOODENOW. I object.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the last four lines of the bill, and I ask the indulgence of the committee for that purpose. It provides—

"That no portion of the moneys appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of any expenses incurred prior to the first day of July, 1852."

Now, that amendment does not propose to appropriate any portion of the money appropriated in this section. It directs the money to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Now, this money is otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now insist upon the motion of my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. BOGOCCK) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 220, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30th, 1853, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now ask the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw the demand for the previous question, and allow me to offer my amendment in the proper place, so as to avoid the question of order. I will renew the call if the gentleman will extend to me that privilege.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I would very gladly accommodate the gentleman, but I am appealed to on all sides not to withdraw it.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The usual course will now be pursued. The amendments will be read over by the Clerk, and such as there is no objection to will be adopted by a single vote.

The amendments were then reported by the Clerk.

Mr. WALSH called for a separate vote upon the fourth amendment, and Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for a separate vote upon the fifth amendment.

The question was then put, and the other amendments were concurred in by the House.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the fourth amendment, which is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That so much of the act making appropriations for the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1851, approved 20th of September, 1850, as provides extra pay to the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the United States Army in Oregon and California, be, and the same is hereby, continued for one year from the 1st day of March, 1852; and that the provisions of the last-mentioned act be, and are hereby, extended to New Mexico during the current year provided for by this section; and that $300,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated for that purpose: Provided, That said officers and men shall receive only one half of the increased amount over the regular pay allowed by law."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The fifth amendment was then reported, as follows:

"For the purpose of testing the practicability of employing camels upon the plains as a substitute for horses, $20,000."

Mr. FOWLER. Upon that amendment I demand the yeas and nays, and tells upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BOGOCCK, and STEPHENS of Georgia, were appointed.

Mr. SWEETSER. It is very evident that there is no quorum present. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 68, noes not counted—and the House adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. PARKER, of Pennsylvania: The petition of R. C. Hale and 20 others, citizens of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to pass the bill introduced into the House of Representatives by the Hon. Edward Stanly, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money directed to be made with said States by the act approved 23d June, 1836."

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of George Wood and 41 others, citizens of Lauderdale county;

Also, the petition of Robert Phelps and 17 others, of same county;

Also, the petition of Isham Moody and 60 others, of Wayne county;

Also, the petition of Dougald McLaughlin and 35 others, of same county;

Also, the petition of J. G. Blackwell and 92 others, of Smith county;

Also, the petition of A. McDonald and 51 others, of Newton county;

Also, the petition of D. R. Pool and 130 other citizens of Clarke county, (in all 416,) praying for the removal of the land office from Augusta, Mississippi, to Paulding, in the same State.

By Mr. HART: The petition of G. E. Douglass and others, residing in the city of New York, praying for the passage of a law for the better protection of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled by steam.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 14, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in regard to the controversies between the United States consul at Acapulco and the Mexican authorities; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a report of the Postmaster General, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, respecting the printing, binding, and advertising executed for or by order of that Department; which was read.

A motion by Mr. HAMLIN, that the report be printed, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CONTUMACY OF A WITNESS.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senate will recollect that yesterday morning the chairman of the Special Committee, raised by the Senate on the 6th of this month, reported that a witness, summoned by that committee, had proved contumacious. A resolution was submitted by the direction of the committee, to deal with that contumacious individual. This morning, the witness reappeared before the committee, and took the oath, and his examination as a witness was commenced. By the direction of the committee, I therefore announce this fact to the Senate, and desire that the resolution submitted yesterday may be taken up for the purpose of being laid on the table.

The resolution was taken up, and the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after a short time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of John L. Sullivan, praying that certain amendments may be made to the bill for the protection of lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a petition of the Humane Society of Massachusetts, praying the enactment of such additional laws as will more effectually protect the lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of the New York and Havre Mail Steamship Company, asking the regular appropriation for the service performed by them under their contract with the Post Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of the heirs of Abraham Hunt, praying some allowance in consideration of the services of their ancestor during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SMITH presented a petition of citizens of Willamantic, Connecticut, praying that the homestead bill may become a law; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of Evariste Blanc, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers; which was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time, and passed:

Bill for the relief of Mary F. B. Levely;
Bill for the relief of the petty officers and seamen of the United States frigate Missouri;
Bill for the relief of Purser T. P. McBlair;
Bill for the relief of Emelie Hooe;
Bill for the relief of Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick;

Bill for the relief of John Tucker;
Bill for the relief of C. E. Greneaux;
Bill to grant a pension to the widow and children of John Balster;

Bill for the relief of Sally J. Mathews;
Bill for the relief of John Moore White;
Bill to confer on John W. Quinney, a member of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians, the rights of citizenship of the United States, and for other purposes;

Bill for the relief of George Stealey;
Bill for the relief of Elizabeth Armistead;
Bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Davis, widow of Daniel W. Davis;

Bill for the relief of Priscilla C. Simonds;
Bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, deceased;

Bill for the relief of Catharine Proctor Hayden, only heir of John White, late lieutenant colonel in the fourth Georgia battalion of the revolutionary army; and Bill for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana.

MARY E. D. BLANEY.

The bill for the relief of Mary E. D. Blaney, widow of the late Major George Blaney, was read a third time.

Mr. WALKER. That, I believe, is a bill in which allowance is made for interest. When it was ordered to a third reading, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] was unfortunately out of his seat. I will now content myself simply with asking the yeas and nays on its passage, intending myself to vote in favor of it. There are several cases behind that, involving the same principle, and I ask for the yeas and nays, that we may have a precedent falling within the knowledge of the Senator when we come to act on subsequent bills. I am in favor of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Brooke, Charlton, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Foot, Hamlin, Mallory, Seward, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Walker—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Bright, Cass, Chase, Clemens, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, King, Meriwether, and Weller—17.

So the bill was rejected.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Indiana and Illinois, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Terre Haute to Springfield; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill to establish certain post roads; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The message also contained a request that the Senate would furnish the House with a certified copy of the bill of the Senate appropriating land scrip in full and final satisfaction of Virginia military bounty land warrants; the engrossed bill having been mislaid since it was received from the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the message, and in conformity therewith, it was so ordered.

EMOLUMENTS OF GENERALS SCOTT AND PIERCE.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I ask the Senate to take up the resolution which I submitted on Thursday. I apprehend it will take but a few moments to adopt it.

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate what amount of public money has been paid to General Winfield Scott and General Franklin Pierce, respectively, from the time of their first entrance into the public service up to the present date, distinguishing between regular and extra compensation; also, for what said amounts were paid, whether for pay proper, rations, forage, horses, mileage, transportation, servants, quarters, fuel, medical attendance, or commutation for any of the preceding items; also, that he inform the Senate what amount of extra compensation has been claimed by either, the items of each and every such claim when first presented, and when and by whom allowed or rejected, and the official reasons given at the time for such allowance or rejection, and whether any item or items, claim or claims, once disallowed, were subsequently presented for payment, and if so, how often, and when, and if subsequently allowed or paid, by whom and when, and the amounts thereof, and the reasons for such allowance, and the amounts thereof; and that he also inform the Senate whether either of the above-named generals has received from the public Treasury pay or emoluments for discharging the duties of more than one office or employment at the same time, and if so, what offices or employments, and the amount of such pay and emoluments, and the time when paid, and whether any claim or claims have been presented for the discharge of the duties of two or more offices or employments at the same time by either of them, and disallowed, and if so, by whom disallowed, when, and for what reasons then given; and that he also inform the Senate whether either of the above-named generals has ever, under color of charging for percentage, or for extra compensation, or for any other reason or reasons, or in any manner or form, applied to his own use, or retained in his hands, any of the public funds or property without authority of law, and if so, when, and the amount or value thereof, and whether the amount thus applied or retained, or any part thereof, has ever been repaid to the United States, and if so, what amount and when so repaid, and whether any amount of public money or property, which has ever come to the hands or possession of either of them, remains unaccounted for, and if so, in whose hands, and how much.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I shall not oppose the adoption of that resolution. I desire, however, to amend it, if possible. The Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MILLER,] not now in his seat, also desires to offer an amendment. I therefore move to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Monday next, and also that the special order of the day may now be taken up.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I hope the consideration of the resolution will not be postponed. We want a response to the resolution before the adjournment of Congress, and I fear we shall not receive one if the consideration of the resolution be postponed.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone, and, on a division, there were—ayes 17, noes 20.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. I ask that it may be read.

It was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "date," the words

"Stating, particularly, the exact date of their entrance into the public service, and how appointed; whether as a graduate of the Military Academy or otherwise, and the cost of a course of study at that institution, and the sum paid to either or both while there."

After the words "medical attendance," insert the words "for what diseases, so far as can be ascertained, such attendance was required; whether for wounds received in battle, or for ordinary sickness; and if for wounds, when, and in what service, such wounds were received, and how often such attendance was required by each."

Add the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be also requested to inform the Senate, whether General Scott or General Pierce has rendered service to the country in any capacity other than military; and if so, the length of time each was so employed, and the gross amount paid out of the Treasury for such service, distinguishing between the regular pay and fees, or mileage, or traveling expenses, allowed and paid to each, and the amount so paid.

Mr. JONES. On that amendment I ask that the yeas and nays may be taken.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I will simply suggest, that if that amendment be adopted we cannot hope to get a response to the resolution during the present session.

Mr. BRIGHT. If the honorable Senator from Tennessee will offer his amendment as a distinct proposition, in the form of a resolution, I apprehend it will meet with no opposition from this side of the Chamber; but we are unwilling to embarrass the object of the resolution, as it came from the hands of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JONES. I certainly have no such purpose as that indicated by the Senator from Indiana. It is not my purpose to embarrass the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky. The object of that resolution, as I understand, is to publish to the country at large the amount of money received by each of the individuals named, in compensation for their public services; and the information for which I have asked will not add much to the labor necessary to answer the queries proposed by it. It cannot delay the investigation when they are making up their account current. If I thought it would lead to delay I should not have offered it. I have offered it in no captious spirit, but simply for the purpose of obtaining possession of all the facts; and I conceive that it is perfectly germane to the original resolution.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Inasmuch as the amendment is germane and pertinent to the original resolution, I think it should be adopted. If it were offered for the purpose of embarrassing the resolution or to make the call so broad as to render it impossible for the Departments to return an answer during the present session, I should vote against it. In this case, I do not believe that more than two or three days will be necessary to return an answer, and therefore my view is that we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, and then see whether the answer will be returned in due time. I repeat, that we ought to adopt the amendment, and obtain all the information which the Department can give us.

Mr. PEARCE. Whether the resolution is answered promptly or not, appears to me to be entirely unimportant to the Senate or to the country. No gentleman has undertaken to say to what useful purpose the information called for can be applied. No one has said that he supposes any particular facility to legislation will be derived from it; and no specific charge requiring investigation has been made against either of the parties named. I apprehend that the only purpose to which it will be applied will be to crowd the columns of newspapers, already teeming with articles relating to these gentlemen, who have been nominated for the office of President of the United States. If the amendment is to interfere with any useful legislation, the result of which it can be said will be of importance to the country, I shall not sustain it. Nor will I sustain it if it be only to enlarge a useless inquiry. I shall be as little likely as any one else to sustain a resolution calculated to bring individual character into discussion before the people, the only effect of which will be to produce aspersions on an individual. I should not think of adding anything to this resolution by which it should be inquired how much public money yourself, sir, has received in the course of your long public service, being perfectly well satisfied that whatever you have received you are richly entitled to, both by law and by your meritorious services; and I have not the slightest doubt that General Scott was lawfully entitled to receive whatever he has received, and I apprehend the same remark is true of General Pierce.

Now, the answer to the resolution will disclose what we all know very well—that General Scott has received a much larger amount of the public money than General Pierce, having been much longer in the public service; and it will be no disparagement to General Pierce, a gentleman of whom I always speak with respect, to say, that if the duration of time and character of service be considered, the proportion of pay which General Scott has received will be found by no means in excess of proportion to his long, faithful, and glorious service.

But I desire to wash my hands of any investigation of this sort. I believe that they are both honorable men—both entitled to anything they have received; and I am not willing—not that I charge it as the design of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. MERIWETHER]—to do that which will only overurge a vitiated public appetite already fed to satiety upon political detraction. Our public men on both sides are slandered enough already; and this investigation can benefit the character of neither of these gentlemen; while it may, and probably will, diminish that respect for the dignity of the Senate, which has not usually been thought to lend itself to mere partisan purposes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will answer the inquiry of the Senator from Maryland as to what useful purpose is to be accomplished by the adoption of this resolution. I apprehend that the same useful purpose will be accomplished that his political friends in 1848 accomplished by the adoption of a similar resolution in reference to my distinguished friend from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] when he was a candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. PEARCE. I desire to say for my own consistency's sake, that never, on any occasion, did

I utter one word in relation to that gentleman, on account of the public money he has received. It is an inquiry entirely unworthy of any gentleman holding his position.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I presume that the Senator from Maryland never said a word in disparagement of the Senator from Michigan, and that he did not speak in favor of the resolution of 1848; but I have yet to learn that he then saw the slightest objection to this mode of inquiry. Now, sir, I do not know what facts will be disclosed by this resolution, but I think that we ought to teach our friends upon the other side of the Chamber, that, if they bring forward resolutions of this kind upon us, when we have a candidate for the Presidency who has been long in the public service, we may bring forward the same inquiry upon them, and let them see what the result of this mode of proceeding is. I do not know that anything will be disclosed by the answer to this resolution that is not defensible. If there be anything, let it fall where it should fall. This resolution is broader, more fair, and impartial, than the resolution adopted in 1848; for this resolution includes both the candidates. That resolution was confined to only one, and thus it was made to aim directly against the Democratic candidate. But, why do our friends on the other side of the Chamber assume, in advance, that the effect of the resolution will be against General Scott? Why may it not operate against General Pierce as well as against General Scott? Why do they confess, in advance, that their man is more vulnerable than ours? It may be so. I do not know how the fact is; but I think we had better not judge of the case until we get the information.

Mr. BUTLER. I am perhaps less involved in the presidential canvass than any gentleman upon this floor, and therefore I shall not speak as a partisan in relation to this resolution. I can only regret that such a resolution should ever have been introduced into this Senate for the purpose referred to by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS.] Such a course of proceeding is well calculated to impair the dignity, and I may say respectability, of this Senate. Now, if it were left to these high-minded and chivalrous gentlemen, General Scott and General Pierce, it is the last mode of warfare they would select which has been prepared for them in the public mind. Do I suppose that General Pierce could make any aspersion upon his honorable rival at this time, and comrade at another? Sir, it would be the last thing, in my estimation, that that distinguished gentleman, Winfield Scott, would resort to to assail his former comrade and present rival. Whilst comrades in arms their personal relations were cordial, and I presume, are so yet. Let not politicians tear these relations asunder. Let the two gentlemen be the exponents of their political principles, as they are the exponents of all that belongs to the honor, glory, and renown of their country.

I, sir, deeply regret that this resolution is introduced. I say so not as a partisan, for I stand in a position of comparative indifference, as a Democrat, to the presidential contest, but am opposed to the election of General Scott; yet I think that General Scott might well reply when called upon to answer for the public money he has received, and which has been appropriated from the Treasury for his services, as Scipio did when called upon for an audit of his account: "This, if not the day, is the month in which I won the battle of Zama."

The poverty of the gallant hero and illustrious general would of itself be a vindication against any culpable imputation upon him; and it will be found that he has rather spent money for the honor of his country than saved it for himself.

As to General Pierce, no one can presume for a moment but that his high character as a soldier, and his eminent qualities as a statesman will enable him to pass any ordeal that may be prepared for him by political adversaries.

At least let not the Senate be the arena for a species of warfare which belongs rather to the hustings than to a grave deliberative body.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I feel very much like the Senator who has just taken his seat in regard to this subject, as if I had some regrets that any movement of this sort had been made; but as our political opponents on the other side of the Chamber have pressed this matter, I am willing to gratify them. The information asked for will be of service in a political point of view; and as a part-san, if I had any feelings of that sort, I would vote for giving it; because when you show the greater amount of money which General Scott has received over General Pierce for his services, you will show at the same time the magnitude of those services for which the money has been paid, and you will lead the people to inquire, from which no evil can result. And if any money has been paid improperly, there will be another deduction which the people will make from the inquiry. They will ask which political party in this country paid the money; who was in authority when the money was improperly paid, if any has been so paid; and my word for it, it will fall upon the skirts of the party to which the gentleman belongs who introduced the resolution. If there be any fault—which I do not charge—it will show that the party which does such things is not fit to be intrusted with power.

Mr. WELLER. Then let us all go for the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have said that I intend to go for it, because it came from the opposite party, while I regret that we should make our contest at the polls now turn upon the question, which of the candidates has received most money from the Treasury of the United States.

Sir, there is some tendency in the public mind, and I regret it very much, to speak of distinguished gentlemen who have been long in the public service, as "old fogies," and to say to them, "you have had money enough, and it is time for you to give way, and let younger men come in and participate in the spoils." In this way, our contests are to be determined by the amount of money received, as though intelligence and capacity to serve the country was of less consequence. Sir, I repudiate everything of that sort. I regret it deeply that the resolution has been offered, but since it comes from the quarter from which it does come, I am willing to gratify my friends upon the other side.

Mr. ADAMS. As I shall vote differently from any of my political friends, I wish to state the reasons for my vote. I condemned in 1848 the course pursued by the opposite party in relation to a similar resolution. If I was right in condemning it then, I will not turn round and commit the same wrong now. If it was wrong in that party, as I then believed and still believe, to place a political election on a purely personal feeling, I do not intend to take a contrary course of action now. Again, I do not think that the Democratic cause requires any extraneous influence of this kind, apart from the intrinsic purity and value of its principles; therefore, relying on the intelligence of the people to carry out those principles, which I believe to be best adapted to the interests of the country, I will not be concerned in the introduction of any mere personal feeling into the contest. I never did, and I trust I never shall do anything of the kind. When the party selects an organ, it is immaterial to me whether that organ is worthy or unworthy. It is not by any question of that kind that I am guided. I look solely to the principles of the party with which I act, and if I ceased to have confidence in the principles of the Democracy, I should cease to act with them. For these reasons, I feel constrained to vote against the resolution.

Mr. WELLER. It is somewhat surprising that the argument used by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] relative to the resolution of 1848, did not suggest itself to his mind then. I should like to know if that Senator was here in 1848, and if he voted for the resolution calling for information as to the amount of public money received by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS.]

Mr. PEARCE. With the permission of the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] I will state that the resolution which constitutes the precedent that Senators now propose to follow, was not passed by the Senate. It emanated from the House of Representatives. I hope we will not set the example of offering such a resolution in this body now.

Mr. WELLER. I believe that a resolution of this character was passed in 1832, and I am sure that such a resolution was passed in 1828, calling for the amount of money received by J. Q. Adams, who was then the candidate for the presidential chair.

Now, this information may be useful to the people. Both these gentlemen are candidates for the highest office within their gift. The people are called on to decide the contest between them, and it may be of some importance for them to know the amount of public money which they received during a long series of years. The people are entitled to the information. It can produce no harm. We are not responsible for the use made of it. If it is used for the purpose of ascertaining the character of the respective candidates, you and I are not responsible. It is a sort of information which the people are entitled to if they desire it. It is their money which has been expended, and they have a right to know the amount that has been paid. I shall therefore vote for the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to say that I had no recollection of the resolution of 1848; and as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] says the resolution was passed in the House of Representatives, of course I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BRADBURY. The amendment, as it will be seen, is not only unnecessary, but its adoption may render an answer to the resolution impossible during the present session. It requires that the President shall state the exact date of the entrance of the two distinguished individuals referred to, into the public service. That request is unnecessary because the information is already in the possession of every one. Again, it asks for information whether they entered the public service as graduates of the Military Academy at West Point, and the cost of a course of instruction in that institution. Now, I understand that neither of these distinguished individuals graduated there; certainly General Pierce did not.

Mr. CASS. Neither did General Scott do so.

Mr. BRADBURY. Neither did General Scott, as the distinguished Senator from Michigan remarks.

But this clause of the amendment asks not merely whether they graduated at West Point, but also what is the cost of a course of instruction there, not as applicable to them, but generally.

As neither ever entered or graduated there, the query is not only not pertinent, but would render much delay necessary in an attempt to obtain this general information.

The amendment also calls upon the President to inform the Senate for what diseases medical attendance may have been required, and how often. It is perfectly obvious that the only effect—I will not say purpose—of this portion of the amendment could be to embarrass and delay an answer to the resolution.

The President is also called upon to state whether General Scott or General Pierce has rendered any service to the country in any other than a military capacity. I would like to know how the President can be in possession of any information on that subject which may not be equally in the possession of every member of the Senate and the public generally? It is obvious that the effect of the amendment would not be that which was supposed by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] when he made the remark which fell from him, and I think that its adoption would possibly prevent a seasonable answer to the resolution. If the Senator from Tennessee desires to have a resolution adopted of the character which he proposes, by the amendment, let him present it by itself, and I will not vote against it. If he wants the inquiries made which he proposes, let him take the responsibility of proposing it, and not attempt to fix the responsibility upon another quarter, by making an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. President, we have not only a precedent for this resolution, but there was something in the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] which makes it imperiously necessary that it should be adopted. The honorable Senator would seem to be possessed of some information which warranted him in predicting that "if any money had been improperly received," the responsibility would fall upon a Democratic Administration. I do not know what information that distinguished Senator has, upon which he bases the prediction, that if money has been improperly received, the responsibility of passing it must fall upon a Democratic Administration. I venture to say that the people of this country possess too much candor and fairness to condemn any one for the receipt of money in a proper manner. If money has been received for long and distinguished services, it will be no matter of reproach against any individual to have so received it. If, however, there has been a looseness in regard to its receipt, if there has been any conduct which goes to show that money has been, in the language of the Senator from Kentucky, "improperly received," there might be some degree of responsibility attached to it. I think, that after the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, it becomes important that the truth of history should be vindicated, and that if any money has been improperly received, the responsibility should be fastened where it belongs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not admit that I had any knowledge of an improper payment. Far from it. I made no assumption that I had any such knowledge. I did not intend to communicate any such idea. I said conditionally, if such a thing existed, then, from the length of time the Senator's party has been in power, the probability is that it would fall on his side of the Administration, to show the payment. That is what I said; not assuming that any such thing existed. I hope no such thing does exist; and if, as I hope and trust, it does not, then it will follow, as I said, that all the money which has been paid to General Scott has been properly paid, and it will only show the magnitude and importance of his services, and make the contrast the wider.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, I used the same language which was employed by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD.] He ventured to predict that "if any money had been improperly paid," the responsibility would fall upon a particular Administration. Now, all we desire is to let the facts come out precisely as they are; for we know that, at the present time, we need at the head of affairs a man who will stand firm, and repress the tendency to extravagance and profligacy which is now found to exist. If, then, there is no objection to the resolution, and all desire to have the facts come out, I trust the honorable Senator who has offered the amendment will withdraw it, and allow us to pass the resolution at once. He can then offer his amendment as an independent resolution—as he may without notice; for, I venture to say, no one will object to it as such—and himself take the responsibility of his own call.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I should certainly be very much inclined to conform to the wishes of the Senator from Maine, if I could see any propriety in doing so.

Now, one word of reply to my honorable friend from Illinois. If he meant, by any insinuation, that I was opposed to the introduction of this resolution, or that I am disposed to evade it, he misapprehends me. I shall vote for it, if it is amended as I propose; and I shall not evade any investigation. I had no part or lot, however, in the resolution to which he referred as having been passed in 1848; for I was not here. If I had been here it is probable I should have voted for it, as I shall vote for this. I do not think I shall ever hesitate to vote for any investigation that may be desired in regard to any public servant in this Government, I do not care who he is, whether Whig or Democrat. If any man desires to investigate the character and conduct of any public servant, I shall vote for it at all times. I shall vote for this resolution, if it is put in a fair form.

But the Senator from Maine says he cannot see why I should present this as an amendment to the original resolution; but, that if I will offer it as a separate proposition, he will vote for it. He says there is nothing in the first inquiry, about the education at West Point. Well, if there is nothing in it, it will take no time to answer it, and will not delay the answer to the resolution itself. And when he comes to the second proposition, he says that will simply delay the answer. Now, Mr. President, I presume that our friends on the other side of this Chamber mean to act fairly about this matter. I have never made a presidential speech here, and hope I never shall. I have not a word to say about these things here. Here is a proposition by which the Senators on the other side propose to inquire into the amount of public money paid to General Scott and General Pierce. That is fair and legitimate; and is it not equally fair and legitimate, and does not common justice demand that the services for which that money was paid should go to the country with it? Who knows, do you, sir, with all your public services here, what orders were issued to General Scott or to General Pierce, and what particular services were required at their hands? And when we find an amount of money paid to General Scott, is it not fair and honest that we should know for what purpose it was paid? It is astonishing that my friend from Maine can hesitate for a single moment. If he desires a full investigation of all the facts, which I presume he does, and which I presume all do, there is nothing incompatible in my amendment with the original proposition. It simply requires the President, while furnishing this account current of money received by Winfield Scott, to furnish, at the same time, the services and the objects for which the money was appropriated. That is all; and if the amendment is adopted, I shall vote for the resolution cheerfully, whether it has a precedent or not.

Mr. BRADBURY. If the honorable Senator will limit his amendment to the terms employed in his closing remarks, I will not object to it. He says the only object of the amendment is to call for the services that have been rendered, and the objects for which the money has been paid. If he so modifies the amendment, I shall not object to it.

Mr. JONES. I intend to be as accommodating to my Democratic friends as I can. I will therefore strike out the first proposition in the amendment. I think it is pertinent, and I should like to have the information; but in order that there may be no caviling, I will strike that out with the permission of the Senate, and then let the vote be taken on the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I suppose the Senator from Tennessee meant to strike out all of the first proposition in his amendment, leaving only the additional resolution. I would be willing to go for that.

Mr. JONES. I simply mean to strike out that portion of the amendment which relates to West Point.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. CLEMENS. I shall vote against the amendment, the first and every part of it. I shall vote against it, particularly the medical clause, because it will be absolutely impossible to ascertain the information for which it calls. A surgeon of the United States Army is not paid for particular cases. He receives his pay like an officer of the Army. His compensation is absolute, and it does not depend at all on the amount of service rendered. There is no means of ascertaining what is the value of the medical service rendered to a general officer or to a private. It is absolutely impossible. The amendment amounts to nothing. It is immaterial. I shall vote against the whole of it. I think the matter very unimportant any way. I do not care one straw what amount of money General Scott may have received from the General Government. I am very sure he has never received anything but what he was entitled to, and I believe that he has never received half as much as he deserved.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. For the benefit of my friend from Alabama, I will tell him why I put the clause in relation to medical service in the amendment. It is in the original resolution in part. Medical attendance is specified. They propose to investigate that. The mover of the resolution inserted it himself; and it being so, it is fair and legitimate to know for what particular medical service the payment was made. I have no disguise in this matter. I mean, if General Scott is to be arraigned—I do not know that that is the purpose—but if he is to be arraigned for having money expended for him in the medical department of the Army, I want to know what it was expended for—I want it known that he had been wounded, and had suffered a long time, and that that medical bill was for that particular service. That is what I mean, frankly and honestly, for I have no concealment about the matter.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I will strike out the portion of the original resolution relating to medical attendance, to meet the wishes of the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I would rather have it in.

The PRESIDENT. If such is the pleasure of the Senate, the Senator from Kentucky can modify his resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

The PRESIDENT. Then it cannot be modified. The only way to reach it will be by moving to amend the resolution, by striking out that portion of it, after the amendment which is now pending has been voted upon.

Mr. SOULE. I regret, Mr. President, what has taken place here this morning, though I hope it may teach a lesson, not only to this high and august body, but to the country at large. We have before us an instance of the danger of establishing precedents on light and transitory considerations. In the ardor and excitement which a feverish canvass is but too apt to produce, we suffer ourselves, at times, to be carried away by that frenzy of party spirit which so little behooves serious, deliberative bodies, as should be the two branches of the National Legislature. We look solely to the immediate advantages which we expect to derive from those measures which we advocate and press, on the spur of such ardor and excitement, unmindful of those contingencies of the future, which, soon or late, force us to rue the hour when they entered our minds, and prompted to action our wills.

At a period not far remote from us—at least not far enough remote to be forgotten—a most distinguished colleague of ours, high then, as he is now, and will ever be, in the estimation of this body, and high in the respect, confidence, and affections of the people who know him through that long race of service which he has so gloriously run, was made the subject of a searching inquiry, elicited by a resolution passed in the other House. I am yet to learn that the great Whig party, with the high-souled men that then belonged to it, and who are still now its main champions, ever entered a protest against this tardily-discovered abuse of the legislative franchise. No, sir; that party, and the men of that party, suffered the search to take its course, and to bring forth its results; and comments most ungenerous and unjust were made upon those results, and spread like wild-fire throughout the whole country, without a hand being then extended by those who seem most opposed to the movement made this day in the Senate, to stop its progress and mitigate the poison which it was insinuating into the public breast.

Who, amongst the promoters of that measure, then suspected that it might ever breed the consequences which it now bears? There it stands, however, a dismal precedent recoiling upon its progenitors! And it is in the power of no one to blot it out, either from our memories or from that inexorable recipient of past events, history. There it is, sticking to the recollections of the whole nation, and prompting everywhere a wish that it may be visited back upon those with whom it originated. And, sir, we could hardly now refuse our sanction to its being reproduced, without seeming to be recreant to what we owe to the people. I am not of those who would willingly bow before their whims and caprices; and had the resolution, before us, been introduced with the name of the highly distinguished individual who now heads the Whig ticket alone, I should unhesitatingly have voted against it. Coming as it does, coupling that name with the name of that other distinguished individual who heads the Democratic ticket, I might still hesitate and doubt as to the course it suits me to pursue. But from the moment that it is being provided with the escort of the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Tennessee, all scruples desert me, and I no longer hesitate to give my vote in favor both of the resolution and the amendment. From the turn which the presidential canvass seems inclined to take, a negative vote would infallibly be construed as implying an apprehension which I am far, very far, indeed, from entertaining. For if I know anything of the human heart, and of the motives and influences that prompt it to action; if I can read out a man's mind and character from the manifestations through which he communes with the outer world; if there is any virtue in the warrants of past life, any truth in the unguarded outpourings of the soul, that man of ours, whose name adorns our banner, can bear the most rigid scrutiny, and bear it well too.

Mr. STOCKTON. This is not the first occasion, Mr. President, that I have had the misfortune to differ from views expressed by my political friends. It has always been a source of some regret to do so—it is especially grievous to me to-day. I find myself compelled to dissent from the course which my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] has indicated, that his duty constrains him to take. I have some relief, however, from this embarrassment, in the persuasion that his own sentiments of personal honor and patriotism, as far as they are connected with this subject, do not differ materially from mine. If they did, I should certainly distrust my own instincts and judgment—so far at least as to remain silent. But supposing that my honorable friend in following the example of others, has mistaken his true position, and placed the defense of his vote on political and party grounds alone—and believing likewise that others of my honorable friends here have taken the same erroneous view of this subject, and have looked upon it only in one aspect—I shall venture, even though I have already heard from them a general expression of opinion in favor of the resolution, to make an appeal to both sides of this Chamber, to uphold the dignity of the Senate, and to lay both the resolution and the amendment upon the table.

Sir, gentlemen have discoursed upon this subject as if they had no other obligations in the world except those which are due as party men to General Scott and Mr. Pierce, or to their respective political parties.

Now, sir, permit me to say, that I stand here this morning as a Senator of the United States, and not merely as a politician, and that while I bear in remembrance the long line of grave, dignified, and distinguished men and patriots, who have served their country in this Senate before me, I cannot consent to act or vote upon any measure arising in this body solely on party grounds, or upon any such principles as those assumed by some of my distinguished friends upon this occasion. I have, as a Senator, nothing to do with the party interests or affinities of General Scott or General Pierce in the discussion of this question. I care but little about either one or the other in comparison with my duty to the Senate and the country. In this matter I care nothing about party politics. Mr. President, upon another occasion, and in another place, I said that my party robes hung loosely upon my shoulders whenever the honor, the interest, and the welfare of my country were at stake; and now, sir, here before this Senate and before the people, I say that my party robes will hang loosely upon my shoulders whenever the honor, the dignity, and the usefulness of this august body, in my judgment, may depend upon any vote of mine.

Sir, is this the arena to discourse on the subject of party politics, or to indulge in personal commendation, or vindictive aspersion? I say no. Party politics is a business that our constituents never expected or desired us to waste their time upon here. It is a small business which the Democratic party do not expect or wish us to meddle with; and if I have not wrongly estimated their virtue and wisdom and patriotism, they would prefer that we should lay the resolution and the amendment upon the table rather than that we should do anything to impair public confidence in the exalted reputation and dignity of this body. But it is said that there is a Whig precedent for this resolution. Then let us put the brand of Democratic disapprobation upon it. I move that the whole subject be laid on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the honorable Senator allow me to say a word? It will be very short, and I will renew the motion.

Mr. STOCKTON. No, sir; I cannot withdraw the motion.

Mr. BRADBURY and Mr. MERIWETHER asked for the yeas and nays on the motion; and they were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 23; as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bell, Brooke, Butler, Chase, Davis, De Saussure, Foot, Geyer, Hunter, James, Mallory, Pearce, Smith, Stockton, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Meriwether, Norris, Sebastian, Seward, Soule, Spruance, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to say, that the vote which I gave in favor of laying the resolution upon the table was to meet what I consider a noble avowal on the other side of the Chamber. I stated in the outset that I deprecated this course very much; but the Senators on the opposite side who favor this proposition leave me no alternative. If I vote against it, it is as much as to say I am afraid something would be disclosed against that candidate for the Presidency whom I intend to sustain, which would be degrading and disgraceful to him. I believe nothing of the sort can be disclosed; and therefore when you put the question on adopting the resolution, I am compelled to vote in the affirmative.

I rise to make these remarks to show the consistency, as I think, of the attitude which I occupy in having voted to lay the resolution on the table, while I shall now vote for the resolution itself; and if the Senator from New Jersey had given me the floor when I requested it, it would have been for the purpose of complimenting him for the noble sentiments which he avowed, and in endeavoring by that mode to get clear of a subject, the introduction of which into the Senate of the United States I deprecate. But it being here, and coming from political adversaries, I feel bound to open every channel of investigation to them which they may think proper to demand.

Mr. BORLAND. I would have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, if it were introduced as a separate proposition. I believe, however, that if it be attached to the original resolution, the delay in answering it will be so great, that the information desired will not be obtained in time. I shall, therefore, vote against it as an amendment; but, if the Senator will bring it forward as a separate proposition, I will most cheerfully vote for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment, resulted—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Bell, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Davis, De Saussure, Douglas, Foot, Geyer, Jones of Tennessee, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Underwood, Upman, and Wade—18.

NAYS.—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Cass, Clemens, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Hamlin, Meriwether, Norris, Sebastian, Stockton, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—19.

So the amendment was rejected, and the question recurred on the resolution.

Mr. STOCKTON asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Meriwether, Norris, Sebastian, Seward, Soule, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, Wade, Walker, and Weller—26.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Brooke, Davis, De Saussure, Foot, Geyer, Smith, Stockton, Sumner, and Upham—11.

So the resolution was adopted.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

On motion by Mr. CASS, the Senate resumed the consideration of the President's message, concerning the North American fisheries, the pending question being on the motion to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SEWARD rose and addressed the Senate at great length. [For speech see Appendix.]

Mr. SOULE rose to reply, but gave way to Mr. BRADBURY. If the Senator will allow me, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CASS. I trust not. I hope we shall finish this question to-day. It will interfere very much with the business of the Senate if we take up the subject again on Monday morning. I hope we shall get through with it to-day.

Mr. SMITH. We have only about fourteen or fifteen days to finish all the business of the session, and I think we ought to dispose of this subject now.

Mr. CASS. The mere question of reference has been pending for two weeks.

Mr. WELLER. That is true, but the Senator himself has spoken on it.

Mr. CASS. I know I have spoken, and I would not take the right to speak from any single man who wished to exercise it, but the whole question will come up again on the report of the committee.

Mr. BRADBURY. If I was sure we could get through with the preliminary question to-day, and that we should have a report from the committee in two or three days, I would withdraw the motion to adjourn; but my fear is that we shall get no report.

Mr. CASS. The honorable Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is exceedingly anxious to make a report; I believe he said so the other day.

Mr. BRADBURY. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SOULE. If the wish of the Senate be to take a vote immediately on the question of reference, I cannot be willing to detain them at this late hour of the day; because, if I should go into the merits of the question, it would take me at least an hour. It is impossible that I should run over the argument which has been presented by the honorable Senator from New-York in less than that time. Therefore, if the wish and sense of the Senate be, that we should at once pass upon the motion to refer, I will consider it my duty, in courtesy to the Senate, and out of a proper regard for myself, not to insist upon addressing the Senate now; but I leave it entirely to the Senate.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foot in the chair.) The question is on the motion to refer the message to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WELLER. I move to postpone the further consideration of that question until Tuesday next.

The question being taken, it was found that there were 10 in the affirmative and 10 in the negative; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggested the day before yesterday, when this subject was up, that I should be very glad to have an opportunity to address the Senate. If I have that indulgence, my remarks will be brief. I am not quite willing that this subject should be committed without taking notice of some observations which have been made in the course of this discussion. This is not, by any means, a Massachusetts interest; but, at the same time, my State has a large interest in it. The country has an interest in it. And, although I have on one or two occasions made very brief observations to the Senate on this subject, still I purposely forbore to touch upon the points which have been drawn up by the communication of these papers from the President. I wish a little more time to look into them, if I can, in order to show the posture of this question, and the precise position in which it is now placed, to enable the Senate to understand it, so that we may know how to deal with it. I want an opportunity to do that, either to-day or at some other time, just as the pleasure of the Senate may be.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question was taken a moment ago on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Tuesday, and on the vote on that question no quorum was found to be present.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CASS. I hope the honorable Senator will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. WELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CASS. I wish to give notice to the Senate that I shall on Monday ask it to take up the bill for the construction of a canal around the Falls of the river St. Mary. I pledged myself some time ago to the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] that if I could not put that measure on the ground of defense, and show that it was not connected with a general system of internal improvements, I would not ask the Senate to pass the bill. But the subject has been pending for three or four weeks, and my colleague and myself have allowed it to go over, day after day, not wishing to interfere with the other business of the Senate. We ask, as a favor, that we shall be allowed to take up the question on Monday and have it disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. I would say to the honorable Senator, that I propose on Monday to take up the river and harbor bill.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SAUNDERS, August 14, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

THE SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion to commit to the Committee of the Whole House bill No. 297, declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure and post road, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMART, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (No. 105) for the settlement and payment of the claims of the State of New Hampshire for the services of her militia, and for disbursements for military purposes during the last war with Great Britain, reported the same without amendment.

Ordered, That the said bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Before proceeding to the execution of the business of the morning hour I desire the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. FICKLIN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me to report a bill to prevent the circulation of small notes in the District of Columbia, merely for the purpose of having it printed.

Mr. PENN. I object.

Mr. FICKLIN. I appeal to the gentleman from Louisiana to withdraw his objection.

Mr. PENN. I cannot. I have bills in my desk which I have been anxious to introduce for months.

Mr. FICKLIN. Then I give notice that I shall move to suspend the rules on Monday for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 421, giving to a poor fellow the sum of $3 50 per month. I will state to the House that it is a case of great necessity. I hope the House will consent to take up the bill and pass it.

Mr. LETCHER. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE then resumed and concluded his speech in opposition to the bill declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure. [For speech see Appendix.]

Mr. MILLSON next obtained the floor, and addressed the House until the expiration of the morning hour in reply to Mr. WOODWARD, on the abstract rights of navigation as applied to the Ohio river. He was interrupted by Mr. HOUSTON, who inquired if the morning hour had expired.

THE SPEAKER. It has. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield the floor to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MILLSON. I do, sir.

Mr. HOUSTON. I then call for action upon the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union yesterday.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

THE SPEAKER. That bill is the first business in order under the operation of the previous question. It is House Bill No. 220, "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1853," and the question is upon agreeing to the fifth amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, which is as follows:

"For the purpose of testing the practicability of employing camels on the plains as a substitute, in part, for horses, $20,000."

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that camel question. [Laughter.]

THE SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been already ordered.

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the amendment, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 38, nays 106; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. William Appleton, Bissell, Bowne, Clingman, Conger, Doty, Faulkner, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Harper, Haws, Haven, Holladay, Horsford, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Miller, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Porter, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Skelton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Strother, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Venable, Walsh, and Wells—38.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allison, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bennett, Boccock, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Chandler, Chauman, Chastain, Clark, Cobb, Colecock, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Disney, Dockery, Durham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Floyd, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodrich, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hebard, Hearn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew

Johnson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Marlin, Mason, McCorkle, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Molony, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Perkins, Polk, Price, Reed, Richardson, Robie, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Thurston, Wallace, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, and Wildrick—106.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time and passed.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If that motion does not prevail, will not the first business in order be the report from the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. This being Saturday, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar would take precedence of the motion to take up the report from the Committee on Printing. If, however, the House refuse to go into Committee, the Chair responds to the interrogatory of the gentleman, that the report from the Committee on Printing would be the first business in order.

Mr. WALSH. Is it in order to move to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table merely with a view of getting at the private bills, that they may be referred to a Committee of the whole House?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order, and, in the opinion of the Chair, would take precedence.

Mr. WALSH. There is a number of private bills upon the Speaker's table, and if we can get them referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, we can then easily dispose of them.

Mr. HOUSTON. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question. I am for appropriating the balance of this day to private bills. Will the private bills upon the Speaker's table take precedence of the public bills?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The motion is to go to the private business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw my motion. The question was then taken upon Mr. Seymour's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. HUBBARD in the chair.)

DAVID MYERLE.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order before the committee is the consideration of House bill No. 168, for the relief of David Myerle.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to occupy the attention of the committee very long, but as the case immediately under consideration is one which, in my humble judgment, appeals to the warmest sympathies of every member of this House, I desire very briefly to review it from its commencement until this period. I think I can satisfy the committee that it is a just claim—that it is one which ought to receive the consideration and support of a majority of this House.

A number of years ago—perhaps ten—the subject of water-rotting hemp attracted the attention of the head of the Navy Department, and received some consideration from that gentleman. The Committee on Naval Affairs, who have reported this bill, were satisfied that the agreement entered into between the then Secretary of the Navy and Mr. Myerle justified the conclusion that they arrived at; and my object, sir, will be to prove from the record that they were correct in their conclusion.

In the first place, I will call the attention of this committee to the agreement made between the Secretary of the Navy and Mr. Myerle, where he urges Mr. Myerle to undertake this work—to establish the water-rotting of American hemp—and by that means to accomplish a great national enterprise. Mr. Paulding says, in a letter to Mr. Myerle:

"You sought no contract; the proposal came from me. One of your leading motives in acceding to my proposition was from a wish to confer a benefit on your country. You succeeded, and were ruined. Your hemp was improperly rejected. All previous efforts by the Navy Department to induce persons to come forward with a supply of that article had failed, until you were induced by me to undertake it. The Navy is now supplied with a superior article. You never pretended to be the inventor of the process of water-rotting, but you were the first person to prove its practicability to the United States. After you were established, there were not wanting a sufficient number of applicants to the Department for contracts—among the number was a Mr. Hart, of Kentucky."

This is the declaration of Mr. Paulding, the then Secretary of the Navy: that he made the suggestion to Mr. Myerle; that Mr. Myerle did not seek the contract; but, imbued with characteristic American spirit, he entered into it and became a ruined man, and is now very poor. After the practicability of the experiment had been established, although Mr. Myerle had ruined himself in consummating it, there were not wanting a sufficient number of applicants to the Department for contracts, and among that number was Mr. Hart, of Kentucky. Mr. Paulding says: "That there had been many experiments made for years previously to Mr. Myerle embarking in the enterprise, and that it was considered an unhealthy operation, and impracticable."

Mr. Myerle had to contend with the general prejudice that then existed in the State in which he introduced the system of water-rotting hemp, and had to overcome it by personal exertion and the influence that he could exercise. The result of the test proved that it was not unhealthy.

The report of the Board of Navy Commissioners, dated December 31st, 1839, to the Navy Department, stated that the operation was unhealthy, and that the farmers would not water-rot their hemp. I will read an extract from that report, made by Commodore Morris, which alleges:

"That the Board have at all times been anxious to obtain hemp of the growth of the United States, if it could be furnished, of such quality as would justify its use for the Navy. There is no doubt, that if the hemp of this country were to be properly prepared by water-rotting, and the other necessary processes, it might be delivered at our navy-yards, of equal, if not of greater strength and better quality than any other which had been subject to the chances for injury, to which all imported hemp is exposed. The reason which has been assigned for adhering to the dew-rotting practice, is the injury to the health of those engaged in the water-rotting."

I need not urge another reason, I apprehend, to sustain the position I have assumed, that there was a strong and general prejudice existing against water-rotting hemp. And that it has been entirely and effectually overcome, no one, with the facts to the contrary staring him in the face, is prepared to deny. I will merely state it here, and will prove it conclusively, after a while, that Mr. Myerle abandoned a large and lucrative manufacturing interest to accomplish this national enterprise, by which that and a large amount of property became a total loss to him. The hemp that Mr. Myerle contracted to furnish the Navy Department—and I wish to impress this upon the committee particularly, because upon that I think the basis of the fairness and justice of this claim rests—was not to be rejected. The hemp, I repeat, was not to be rejected, and Mr. Paulding, in his letter of the 8th of March, 1843, says:

"Had I been at the head of the Navy Department at the time your hemp was rejected, I would most assuredly have taken upon myself the responsibility of directing it to be received, notwithstanding it was reported somewhat inferior, not in quality, I believe, but in cleanliness, or something of that sort."

"Satisfied of the great importance of the object aimed to be accomplished, had I not been prevented by a political revolution, I would have fulfilled every pledge I made to you to the very letter, and at least saved you from any loss after all the labor and risk you incurred. You were the very man I wanted for such an undertaking; you were neither too prudent nor too rash. You were willing to risk the labor of an experiment, at that time considered almost hopeless, and you had the best of all support, a reliance on Providence. I saw at once that you would succeed, if any man could, and you did succeed, where I vainly believe not another man in the United States would have done so."

This is the testimony of the then Secretary of the Navy, the gentleman who entered into this contract, who acknowledges that the rejection of the hemp was improper, and that if he had continued at the head of the Department, he would have prevented Mr. Myerle from loss and ruin. It is unnecessary for me to mention why he did not remain at the head of the Department. It was because a political revolution occurred, and another gentleman was appointed to fill his place.

To give assurance, sir, of the intention of the Secretary of the Navy to continue this contract, and to receive the hemp after the contract had been made for two hundred tons, he increased it to three hundred more, entering into a contract with Mr. Myerle to supply five hundred tons of water-rotted hemp; and in a letter to him of the 16th February, 1849, he says:

"I am sorry to hear your bill has been again postponed. I hope this is not a total defeat. Perhaps it may be all for the best in the end by enabling your friends to procure a more adequate remuneration for your exertions and sacrifices. The disappointments of this world are often blessings in disguise."

And in his letter dated February 28, 1849, and addressed to Mr. Myerle, where he refers to the advantages likely to be gained by the Government and the country from the successful introduction of American water-rotted hemp, he says:

"I had been for some time very desirous to procure a supply of American water-rotted hemp for the Navy, in order to render the United States independent of foreign nations for this indispensable article, especially in time of war; and when you first called on me at the Department on business connected with your machinery for manufacturing hemp, I suggested the matter to you. You thought the thing practicable, but stated many objections, and declined the undertaking until I offered such encouragement as overcame your objections. You sought no contract. The proposition came from me, and I have always believed that one of your leading motives was that by which I was myself governed, viz: a wish to confer a benefit on your country; you succeeded and was ruined. A change of Administration had occurred, and I left the Department before I could redeem the engagement I had entered into with you, and which, as I said before, induced you in some measure to enter on this laborious and hazardous undertaking. Though the object I had in view has been completely attained through your energy, perseverance, and sacrifices, and the country is now thoroughly supplied with water-rotted hemp of domestic production, I cannot but regret that it has been by the sacrifices of your own property, aggravated by repeated disappointments in seeking some little recompense for your labors, losses, and mortification, as it was in a great degree through my encouragement and solicitations you were induced to enter on this hazardous enterprise. I have been, am, and always shall be willing to lend my aid, so far as truth will sustain me, in placing your claim on the justice of your country on the footing it merits."

That declaration or letter of the Secretary of the Navy is so full, so clear, and so explicit, that there can be no doubt at all that Mr. Myerle was invited to this experiment; that it was never intended that the hemp which he submitted in the fulfillment of his contract—I was going to say for the inspection of the board of Navy Commissioners, but I do not feel inclined to admit that—that the hemp that was sent to Boston in compliance with his contract was improperly refused, and improperly rejected; and the declaration of Mr. Paulding that I have just read, sustains me in that position.

It is needless, it strikes me, to go one step further than the declaration made in Mr. Paulding's letter of February 28th, 1849, to make this case appear a plain one, and give Mr. Myerle a claim upon this Government.

The benefits that have resulted from the introduction of American water-rotted hemp, may be briefly adverted to. The imports of Russian hemp up to 1836, were from four to six thousand tons per annum. Since then it has been decreased to the small amount of twelve hundred tons. I think this proves conclusively that the introduction of American water-rotted hemp has been advantageous to the agricultural labor of the country. We paid tribute to Russia of about $3,000,000 a year. There is but a very small amount now imported, for the reason that the production of American water-rotted hemp has taken the place of hemp imported from Russia.

I have referred to the fact that an impression prevailed in Kentucky, and also in Missouri, I suppose, that the process of water-rotting hemp was injurious to the health of the surrounding inhabitants. It required a good deal of personal exertion and influence to persuade the people to the contrary. That prejudice has, however, been overcome, and hence the large production of American water-rotted hemp. To Mr. Myerle are we mainly indebted for removing that prejudice, and for successfully carrying on this great national enterprise. Mr. Myerle has up to this hour, received no compensation for this great public work. The receipts for his hemp at the amount agreed upon, were to compensate him for entering into this enterprise with the zeal and perseverance that he manifested.

It was to have been received and paid for by the Government, and was not to be rejected for any trifling reason, or indeed at all.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has offered an amendment, which is now pending before the committee, directing that the amount to be paid to Mr. Myerle shall be held back until the claim of Messrs. Montmullen & Cornwall has been adjudicated in a legal manner. Now, sir, I said the other day, and I am prepared to reiterate the declaration, that Montmullen & Cornwall have no legal or just claim upon the amount that may be voted to Mr. Myerle. He entered into an agreement with them that they were to advance him money, with which he might procure the means of water-rotting hemp. It was understood that they were to have a lien upon the hemp until the amount of the advances made to Mr. Myerle were paid. Thirty tons of hemp—of the two hundred tons under the first contract—were shipped to Boston, where the hemp had to undergo inspection by the Board of Navy Commissioners. That board, as is known, rejected the hemp. Montmullen & Cornwall obtained possession of that hemp, and its future history is only known from the general commercial knowledge which business men obtain from circumstances around them, which informs them that an article like that is sent from one market to another. Montmullen & Cornwall obtained possession of those thirty tons of hemp, had it made into bale-rope, and sent it to some other point for sale. Mr. Myerle never received a farthing from the proceeds of that sale, nor has he had an account rendered to him by Montmullen & Cornwall up to this hour of the amount advanced to him, of which he is profoundly ignorant. The contract with Montmullen & Cornwall, perhaps, ought not to be the subject of comment, certainly not of reflection, here; but it was a pretty hard bargain, in my estimation.

The first contract was for two hundred tons of hemp, for which $60,000 was to be paid by the Government. Taking the contract for two hundred tons of hemp, and placing the cost of the hemp at $250 per ton, that would make a business transaction of $50,000. The average time to close the transactions between Montmullen & Cornwall and Myerle was six months, and the amount of interest paid to that firm was one per cent. per month, which, upon that sum, would have yielded them $3,000. They had from Mr. Myerle two and a half per cent. for guarantying the payment of his drafts, which, taking the $50,000 as a basis, would yield $2,500. They were then paid the difference of exchange between Lexington and Boston, which at that period was seven and a half per cent., yielding upon $50,000, $3,750. For packing and shipping the two hundred tons, they were to receive $8 per ton, which would have yielded $1,600. The acceptances that they gave to the farmers who were engaged in producing this hemp, which were drawn at ninety days, were cashed at one and a half per cent. per month, which would yield $1,115 by the same process of reasoning and calculation. If, therefore, the two hundred tons had been received by the Government, as they ought to have been, $10,000 would have been the profit upon the advances made by Montmullen & Cornwall. They were and, I suppose, still are rich men. Their business was dealing in money, and making advances by which they were likely to be advantaged. It was, perhaps, perfectly proper and consistent with such transactions that they should make the best bargain they could, and I have not submitted this statement to the consideration of the committee with a view to find fault with any business arrangement made between Mr. Myerle and Montmullen & Cornwall; but I have submitted it to show that there was a very strong inducement to enter into this operation, in a commercial point of view, because the profits were likely to be large.

Well, sir, the hemp was rejected, contrary to the agreement and understanding between the Secretary of the Navy and Mr. Myerle. It was immediately taken possession of by Montmullen & Cornwall, as well as about fifty tons still remaining in Kentucky. The eighty tons thus in their possession, if legitimately disposed of, would have been sufficient to have paid all their claim, and, perhaps, have left sufficient to remunerate Mr. Myerle for the great sacrifices that he made in this enterprise. As it happened, he got none of it, and Montmullen & Cornwall reaped the results of all his labor. Mr. Myerle desired to have an opportunity of coming to Washington with the purpose of having an interview with the Secretary of the Navy, to endeavor to persuade that gentleman to relieve him from the conclusions arrived at by the Board of Naval Commissioners. He desired Montmullen & Cornwall to permit the hemp to remain in the possession of the agent of the Government, which they refused to do. As I said, they took possession of the whole of it. Now, if the eighty tons had been sold at $250 per ton, it certainly would have been sufficient to pay all the advances made by Montmullen & Cornwall, at all events. Mr. Myerle had no account of the amount they advanced, or the amount of indebtedness from those advances. Now, I contend that the very knowledge of the fact that these gentlemen had possession of all the hemp, should be sufficient to persuade this committee to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] even if it were in order, because if the hemp had been received by the Government, as it ought to have been, he would have received enough to pay the advances made by Montmullen & Cornwall, as I before said, and probably enough to have paid Mr. Myerle for the influence he exerted in establishing and in perfecting this enterprise.

Mr. Myerle, after having petitioned Congress in 1844 for relief, pleading that he had a just claim, solicited Montmullen & Cornwall to submit a statement of their losses, if any, on the advances they made to him, and desired their cooperation in pressing this claim upon the justice of Congress. Montmullen & Cornwall, however, refused to cooperate with him in pressing his claim. They also refused to submit a statement of the amount of money advanced by them.

Mr. Chairman, I have but one other point to which I wish to refer, and I will conclude my remarks. I desire to submit to the consideration of this committee, the result of the investigation which was made upon the qualities of this hemp, as compared with the best Russian water-rotted hemp. It is the first official report ever made upon American water-rotted hemp. It was made in compliance with an order issued by a board of naval commissioners in Boston. I submit this report for another reason. I submit it, to prove that great injustice was done Mr. Myerle, and to Montmullen & Cornwall, if they suffered by it, by the rejection of this hemp; and that there was no good reason for its rejection, so far as its quality was concerned, except, perhaps, in a want of cleanliness, which was incidental in trying a new experiment.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. FLORENCE. Certainly.

Mr. HALL. I desire to ask the gentleman what Montmullen & Cornwall got for this rejected hemp?

Mr. FLORENCE. That is the question?

Mr. HALL. That is the question I put to the gentleman.

Mr. FLORENCE. Very well, I will tell the gentleman what they did with it; but what they got for it precisely, I cannot tell. After this hemp was rejected by the Board of Naval Commissioners, Montmullen & Cornwall took possession of all of it, and sent it to New Orleans, where it was kept for three years, and made up into bale rope. If they had sold it at the time, they would have realized a large sum of money from it. But, sir, the market fell—to use a commercial term; the price of the article was reduced, and they lost on it in consequence. Now, I want to know, if the fact that Montmullen & Cornwall took the hemp, and kept it in their possession until the price of the article was reduced, is to be urged as a reason to show that this hemp was not a good article? Was it Mr. Myerle's fault that it remained there?

Mr. HALL. I desire to ask the gentleman one other question, for I expect after all, I know more about this matter than the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Was not this hemp found to be such a miserable and worthless article that it had to be sold as dew-rotted hemp for about $100 a ton, while Russia water-rotted hemp was selling at the same time for $230 a ton?

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not admit any such thing. But even admitting it, that makes no difference. This was a new experiment.

Mr. HALL. But I understand this claim is based upon the ground that this hemp should not have been rejected.

Mr. FLORENCE. Very well; then I will satisfy the gentleman upon this point by reading the report made by Mr. Whitmore, of the investigation made under the direction of the Naval Board of Commissioners, affording as it does an additional evidence of the importance of the enterprise in which Mr. Myerle was engaged, and the immediate advantageous consequences to the naval resources of the Republic. The report to which I refer, and to the reading of which I desire the especial attention of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] and to which I crave also the attentive consideration of the House, adduces incontrovertible facts, showing the strength and quality of the first water-rotted hemp forwarded from Kentucky in 1840. It will appear from this report, that the water-rotted hemp of Mr. Myerle was actually proven to be superior to the best Russia hemp. I will add here that this official report was made by Stephen Whitmore, junior, foreman of the naval rope-walk at Charlestown, in the State of Massachusetts. I may also, before I read the report, be permitted to state that in all, about two hundred tons of water-rotted hemp furnished by Mr. Myerle under this contract, was rejected by the agents of the Navy Department, and being thrown upon his hands was sold at a great loss in Europe and in the United States, by which serious and irretrievable embarrassments were brought upon him. But I will hasten to read the report:

"NAVY-YARD, CHARLESTOWN, November 22, 1840.

"SIR: In compliance with your order of November 2, I have examined and experimented upon the different samples of American hemp received from the Board of Navy Commissioners, and have compared them with the best Riga, Rhine, and St. Petersburg hemp. I would respectfully submit the following results of the experiments:

"THE AVERAGE STRENGTH OF THREE TRIALS.—Sample No. 1, tow extracted 14 per cent., sustained a weight compared with a rope of 1½ inches, untarred, 5,040 pounds; tarred, 5,502 pounds.

"Sample No. 2, tow extracted 25 per cent., sustained a weight compared with a rope 1½ inches, untarred, 4,284 pounds; tarred, 4,431 pounds.

"Sample No. 3, tow extracted 22 per cent., sustained a weight compared with a rope 1½ inches, untarred, 5,922 pounds; tarred, 5,481 pounds.

"Riga, Rhine, tow extracted 19 per cent., sustained a weight compared as above, untarred, 4,746 pounds; tarred, 4,893 pounds.

"St. Petersburg, clean tow extracted 22 per cent., sustained a weight as above, untarred, 4,011 pounds; tarred, 3,948 pounds."

Mr. HALL. By whom was this report made?

Mr. FLORENCE. It was made in compliance with an order issued by the Board of Naval Commissioners, on the 22d of November, 1840, by Stephen Whitmore, jr., rope-maker.

Mr. HALL. With reference to what hemp was this report made?

Mr. FLORENCE. It is in reference to Mr. Myerle's hemp. It is a comparison between that and Russian hemp.

Mr. HALL. That report was not in reference to the hemp of Mr. Myerle, which was rejected by the Board.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, I will read the statement, and the gentleman will see what it was. It was an investigation made by order of the Board of Naval Commissioners, for the purpose of ascertaining the difference between American water-rotted hemp and Russian hemp.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman says this hemp of Mr. Myerle was taken possession of by Montmullen & Cornwall, carried to New Orleans and manufactured into bale rope. Now, I want to know if it was upon this bale rope that these experiments were made?

Mr. FLORENCE. No, certainly not.

Mr. HALL. How, then, were these experiments made upon this hemp, if it was all made into bale rope?

Mr. FLORENCE. It was upon that furnished by Mr. Myerle.

Mr. HALL. Then Mr. Myerle had charge of this hemp?

Mr. FLORENCE. No, sir, Montmullen & Cornwall had charge of the hemp which was rejected.

Mr. HALL. How could the experiment have been made upon this hemp, then, if Montmullen & Cornwall had it in their possession?

Mr. FLORENCE. I said they took possession of it and refused to give it up. But if the gentleman will allow me to read, I think the report itself will make the matter plain:

"I will remark that the samples No. 1 and No. 3 of the American hemp were of extra quality and great strength, and much better cleaned than any I ever seen before. Sample No. 2 was of good quality, but not equal to the others. I should judge it to be a fair sample of American hemp generally. American hemp is brought into the market packed in bales, a part of which is good, and a part of inferior quality, no attention having been paid to selecting the good from the bad. The Russia hemp is inspected and separated by a regular inspector into three qualities—the first quality is called the clean hemp, the second out shot, the third half clean. These same qualities are found in the American, which should be inspected and separated in a similar manner."

Now, sir, I desire particular attention to the next paragraphs:

"Subject the hemp of Mr. Myerle to inspection, I have no doubt, judging from the samples he has furnished, that a large proportion of it will be found of very superior quality, stronger than any imported hemp, and nearly as well cleaned."

"The objections to rope made of American hemp are, that it decays sooner than Russia hemp rope; there is a decayed glutinous substance attached to the fibre, which prevents the tar from penetrating it properly, and also has a tendency to rot the rope. These samples I found to be very free from this substance. The process of water-rotting, I should think, would work this substance off, and remove the evil in a great measure. I am informed that American hemp is generally dew-rotted."

"I am, respectfully, your obedient servant.
STEPHEN WHITMORE, JR., Rope-Maker.
To Com. JOHN DOWNS,
"Commandant Boston Navy-Yard."

That is the report of Mr. Whitmore. It is the declaration of a man competent to the task imposed upon him, or I presume he would not have been consulted; and the letter needs no further comment from me, however much I may desire to do so, by contrasting the relative difference between American water-rotted hemp and Russian water-rotted hemp. I have no time to do so. I will now read a statement showing the opinion of the manufacturer of a portion of this rejected hemp:

The following certificate from the manufacturer who purchased a large portion of the rejected hemp, will show its character:

"The quantity of hemp which I purchased from Messrs. Lombard & Whitmore, water-rotted, I found a very perfect article, very clean, free from tow and strong fibre. This hemp, I understood from them, was a parcel they received from you for Government, but they declined receiving it, and was therefore obliged to offer and sell to others."
"B. SEWALL, Boston."

Mr. HALL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires the House to understand this case. Now, I will state that in this investigation upon which this report is founded, the hemp of Mr. Myerle was not touched at all. It was made for the purpose of testing certain specimens of American water-rotted hemp, but it was not that hemp which was rejected by the Board. But what I want to know is, what became of this hemp after it was rejected? How much of it remained in market? and what was the character of it?

Mr. FLORENCE. I have said to the gentleman before that this hemp was made into bale rope; and it was sold as bale rope. It was not sold as hemp at all.

Mr. HALL. It was manufactured as dew-rotted hemp, because it would not sell as water-rotted hemp. For this reason it was manufactured into bale rope.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have evidence to the contrary, if I had time to refer to it. I hope the gentleman who reported this bill, [Mr. Boscok], will satisfy the gentleman upon that subject. I have evidence that a portion of the hemp raised in the gentleman's own State—raised in Missouri—was sent to Liverpool and sold; and I have read the statement of the manufacturer, that it was as good as the best Russia hemp. I will submit here but two paragraphs, extracted from Mr. Myerle's statement:

"I also made a shipment to Liverpool, which sold for £1 10 per ton higher than Russia hemp in that market. (See P. J. Francis's letter, filed with my papers.) A manufacturer who purchased a portion of the same hemp in this country, stated that it was too good for ordinary purposes, and that he was reserving it for some finer qualities of cordage."

"Such has been the advances made in the western country since that period in the water-rotting of hemp, that the Navy can now procure any amount of the article, of a better quality than the imported, and at a lower price."

Mr. HALL. Does the gentleman mean to assert that Mr. Myerle ever manufactured any water-rotted hemp in Missouri?

Mr. FLORENCE. Yes, sir. I will read a letter from a gentleman from Missouri, which I hope will satisfy my friend from Missouri [Mr. HALL] upon that point.

Mr. HALL. Before the gentleman goes on, I will say that David Myerle never was engaged in manufacturing hemp in Missouri.

Mr. FLORENCE. My time is short, and I must say to the gentleman, that I cannot yield another moment. If the gentleman desires to oppose this claim, which I consider just and proper, let him submit his remarks to the committee, who will give them whatever weight and consideration they are entitled to.

I think I have submitted a very clear case, based upon facts and testimony which cannot be controverted, and I ask this committee and House to do justice to a gentleman who has entered into a great national enterprise, by which the Government has been largely benefited, but by which he has been ruined.

Now, for the benefit of my friend from Missouri, [Mr. HALL], I will read a letter from a gentleman from Lafayette county, Missouri:

WASHINGTON CITY, August 26th, 1850.

DEAR SIR: In regard to your inquiries as to my knowledge of your efforts in the State of Missouri, to the promotion of the growth and preparation of hemp, I can state knowingly, from being a hemp grower myself, in Lafayette county, that your efforts have been of incalculable advantage, both to the State and the West generally.

The impetus given by you in the growth and preparation of that article has commanded the highest admiration on the part of the hemp growers and the farmers, generally producing them an unlimited market, not only in the east, but also a foreign one for all they can produce, at such prices as will give them a profitable return for their labor.

Previous to the commencement of your operations in our State in 1839, the growth of hemp was very limited, and was barely considered as an object of attention, arising from the want of a proper mode of preparing it, and a market. But since that period, the instruction as to its culture, encouragement given and held out by you, has increased the growth most rapidly to that extent, as being now the great staple of the State, and the principal reliance which the farmers have for means to purchase land and the necessities in domestic purposes, which has been the means also of changing the appearance of the State from being newly settled to that of wealth and refinement. As an illustration of the facts here presented of the prosperous results attending your exertions for several years in our State, I will state the town of Lexington, located on the Missouri river, in the county in which I reside, was, previous to your efforts, a dull, monotonous village; since that period it has become a prominent (depôt) for receiving hemp and other produce, (hemp being the principal article,) which is forwarded to St. Louis, thence to eastern ports and Europe. The result attending this business gave an impulse to rapid improvements. It is now a flourishing town of several thousand inhabitants. It has been a source of great regret that, as Government had engaged you in this great national enterprise, they had not continued to give you that reasonable encouragement that the importance of the subject required. In that event the result would have been at this time to the country, an abundant supply of a superior article of water-rotted hemp for the Navy—a large surplus for exportation of that article to foreign countries.

But the improper rejection of your hemp by the Government agents was not only calculated to paralyze the enterprise of water-rotting, but also discourage the farmers from pursuing that process, in the preparation of the article for market. In my opinion, the country owes you the price of a great benefit for your patriotic efforts and sacrifices; and I shall be much pleased to learn that Congress has done you justice, by amply remunerating you for your losses, sacrifices, labor, and time, sustained in the prosecution of this laudable enterprise; and I feel confident to say, that were the question of justice by Congress left to the people of Missouri, it would receive a unanimous response to your credit.

I refer you to the Hon. Judge Atchison, of the United States Senate, Hon. John S. Phelps, and the Hon. James S. Green, for further evidence of my citizenship in Missouri.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. D. BENNING,
Lafayette county, Missouri.

DAVID MYERLE, Esq.

Mr. HALL. I wish to ask the gentleman, if Mr. Benning states that the introduction of hemp in large quantities into Missouri has a tendency to civilize our people?

Mr. FLORENCE. Did not you hear what I read? He says it will open a new country there, induce a large settlement, and be of great advantage by making it the staple of your State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have one other point to refer to, and then I will conclude. It was said by my friend [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that Mr. Myerle, at the time he entered into this contract with the Government, was insolvent. I want to satisfy the committee, and through them the House, that such was not the case; but, on the contrary, that this gentleman made large pecuniary sacrifices, and comes here with a just claim; and that it is due to him that Congress should vote him the amount reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I will read letters and an affidavit from Mr. Stewart, a gentleman of Louisville, which, I do not doubt, will be conclusive upon the minds of the committee, and satisfy them of the fact that serious losses were sustained by Mr. Myerle, and that he was not insolvent at the time he entered into the contract to which I have so frequently referred:

LOUISVILLE, July 4, 1839.

DEAR SIR: Our manufacturing operations are going on as usual. I have received highly flattering advices from our agents at New Orleans as to the quality of the cordage. The ship chandlery who have examined it there, pronounced it to be of the very first quality, and say if they can obtain their supplies of us, that they were done ordering from the North. Our agents say they can sell five hundred tons per year. If so, we have only to push the business to insure a fortune. Our payments are all made up to the 25th day of August.
WILLIS STEWART.

DAVID MYERLE, Esq.

LOUISVILLE, February 15, 1845.

DEAR SIR: Annexed you will find a statement of what I suppose an approach pretty nearly to your positive losses by engaging in the hemp operations. I can give the statement only in general terms, for I cannot tell what we might have made by the business had you continued in the management. You understood the business; neither Bland or myself did. That you have done the country, and the hemp growers of Kentucky and Missouri more particularly, a great service by your great exertions, overturning the prejudices which existed in the minds of the farmers themselves against water-rotting, on account of the supposed unhealthiness, is most certainly true. I fear, however, Congress will do nothing for you. The benefactors of our age are not generally those who derive any of the advantages resulting from their sacrifices and labor. With but a faint hope of them doing you justice,

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIS STEWART.

DAVID MYERLE, Esq.

In the fall of 1838, John B. Bland and the undersigned purchased of David Myerle one third each of the Washington Patent Cordage Manufactory, situated about four miles below the city of Louisville, on the Ohio river, at the rate of $20,000, and formed a partnership with said Myerle, under the name and style of Myerle, Stewart & Bland. In addition to the purchase above named, the firm expended almost $4,000 in putting up other necessary buildings, and also purchased sixteen negroes, at a cost of $14,400. The establishment commenced operations, perhaps, in December, 1848; and soon after its commencement, Mr. Myerle left the management of the concern, and went on to Washington to attend to some arrangement that he was about entering into with the Government to supply water-rotted hemp to the Navy. He returned some time during the winter of 1838 and 1839, and thenceforth almost exclusively devoted his time to inducing the farmers of this State to commence the water-rotting of their crops of hemp; and did, in a great degree, succeed in breaking down a prejudice that did exist against the process of water-rotting, which, on account of its supposed unhealthiness, had hitherto prevented the hemp growers from undertaking it, and thereby added, as I conceive, immensely to the value of the hemp growers in the State, and in producing an article suitable to the uses of the Navy quite equal to the Russian. The consequence of this withdrawal from the superintendence of the manufacturing operations of the extensive concern above named, was the total loss to him of his interest in the Washington Patent Cordage Factory, and the additional buildings put up by the firm above referred to, of almost $8,000; and I think I shall not be out of the way to say that his portion of loss on the negroes, and loss by manufacturing operations, would amount, at a fair calculation, to $4,000 more, to say nothing of his time devoted to enlightening the hemp growers on the subject of water-rotting, and what he might reasonably have lost, and to have made by attending to the manufacturing operations of the Patent Cordage Factory.

Having been a partner in the concern, and having the books of the concern in my office, I have a pretty good knowledge of the disastrous effects of Mr. Myerle's withdrawal from the management of the manufacturing operations.

Given under my hand, at Louisville, Kentucky, the 15th day of February, 1845.
WILLIS STEWART.

Subscribed and sworn before me, this 15th day of February, 1845.
J. W. CORMICK, J. P.,
In Louisville, Kentucky.

That must satisfy the gentleman, it seems to me, as to the quality of American water-rotted hemp, and the sacrifices Mr. Myerle made, and the position he occupied before he entered into this contract.

I wish to say a word or two in relation to another letter in my possession, proving the serious losses resulting to Mr. Myerle by this experiment under a contract with the Government. But I suppose I have not time. How much time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. About one minute more.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, then, I have just time enough to earnestly urge the payment of this claim, which I conceive to be just, and in the sincerity of a sympathizing heart, to ask this House to

"Pity the sorrows of a poor old man
Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your door,
Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span;
Oh, give relief, and Heaven will bless your store."

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. The consideration of this bill has already consumed the time of this House two or three days, and how much more of the time of the last Congress it is impossible for me to say, but enough, sir, for the facts involved in it to have become historical. Believing, as I do, that the committee is as well prepared to act upon this case at the present time as they would be at any future period, I move that the committee rise, in order to offer the usual resolution to close debate upon this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will ask my friend [Mr. HARRIS] to withdraw that motion, and I will renew it in fifteen minutes. I ask it for this reason: The question is upon the amendment which I offered, and I have had no opportunity to make an explanation of it.

Mr. HARRIS. I will give the gentleman fifteen minutes in the resolution I propose to offer, if the committee shall rise.

The question was taken on the motion to rise, and it was agreed to; there being, upon a division, ayes 50, noes 27.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. HUBBARD) reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had, according to order, the Private Calendar under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 168, to indemnify David Myerle for expenses and sacrifice incurred in testing the practicability of procuring water-rotted hemp for the use of the Navy.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I move the usual resolution to terminate debate in Committee of the Whole on House bill No. 168, in fifteen minutes after its consideration shall be again resumed.

The question was put upon the adoption of the resolution, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 74, noes 18; no quorum.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn; there being, upon a division—ayes 26, noes 61.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that there be a call of the House, and upon that motion demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and MOLONY were appointed.

The question was taken, and the motion that there be a call of the House was disagreed to—the tellers having reported—ayes 18, noes 101.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out fifteen minutes, and in its stead to insert one hour.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

The call for the previous question was sustained, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then put, and the resolution was adopted.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee proposes to pay David Myerle $30,000 to indemnify him for the expense and sacrifice incurred in testing the practicability of procuring American water-rotted hemp for the use of the Navy. The amendment which I propose requires the sum to be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury until it shall be decided before a court of justice whether Montmullen & Cornwall have a lien on the whole or any portion of this sum; providing at the same time, for the benefit of Myerle, that the suit shall be commenced within ninety days after the passage of this bill. That is the present posture of the question before the committee. I shall content myself, sir, with a summary statement, leaving to the gentleman who reported the bill the general argument in favor of the claim of Myerle. My object is to show that my amendment ought to be adopted. I shall confine myself to that, without arguing the general merits of the bill. Now, sir, it may be said, and said truly, that in ordinary contracts between the Government and an individual, the Government will not allow a third party to come in and interfere, but will settle its own contract with the individual, and leave the third party to his ordinary remedies after the money is paid over. That is generally true, but the present case is an exception to that general principle. This was not an ordinary contract between Myerle and the Government, as I shall proceed to show by the report of the committee itself. It is stated in that report—

"That the great and leading national object was, by the patronage of the Government, and the success of the experiment to be made by the memorialist under that patronage, to establish the practicability and safety of the water-rotting process in our own country, and thus provide for the supply of our own Navy and merchant shipping with an American article equal to the foreign."

They go on to say that—

"This extension of the contract by Mr. Paulding, before any part of the two hundred tons had been delivered, (though the period of the delivery of the whole had passed,) shows, as the committee believe, that the contract entered into with the memorialist was not considered by the Secretary as an ordinary one, nor the relations existing between the memorialist and the Government those existing between it and ordinary contractors."

Again:

"In conclusion, the committee believe, therefore, that whatever doubts may be entertained as to the strict legal right of the memorialist to the relief which he prays, founded upon the breach of his contract by the rejection of his hemp, in violation of the promises and inducements held out to him by the Secretary of the Navy, he has a well-founded claim, both in justice and equity, for his losses and sacrifices in behalf of the Government and country; and that, independent of this, he has strong claims upon that country as a public benefactor, which ought not to be disregarded, and which entitle him to relief out of the common Treasury of the nation, whose commerce, agriculture, and manufactures have been equally benefited by his exertions and individual sacrifices—sacrifices which ought to be borne by all those benefited thereby, rather than by the individual who made and has been ruined by them. The committee, therefore, believe that this is a case in which a full and even liberal measure of relief is required, both by public justice and sound public policy. They therefore report a bill."

That puts it upon the true ground. They consider there is an equity on the part of Myerle for compensation for his losses incurred in experimenting with reference to the practicability of getting American water-rotted hemp. It is a case in equity to be administered by this House or by some authority to which it shall delegate it. Now, sir, if the United States want to pay for any money expended and any sacrifices in experimenting upon the practicability of obtaining water-rotted hemp, those who really incurred the loss and really paid the money in equity, are entitled to be reimbursed by the Government. That is the question. In other words, the basis upon which this report is founded is, that Mr. Myerle has not only given his personal attention, but has expended his funds in making an experiment to the advantage of the Government; and that upon principles of general justice and equity he ought to be reimbursed his losses. That being the basis of the report, I say that the money having been expended, and the losses incurred in the main by the gentlemen who are provided for by my amendment, the equity which Mr. Myerle claims against the Government is their equity, and the extent of their losses, and ought to be provided for by this committee, and by this House. Otherwise, they get nothing at any time under any circumstances, because it is admitted that now Mr. Myerle is insolvent, whatever may have been his condition heretofore. He himself, after first admitting his obligations to Montmullen & Cornwall, I regret to say, in his recent publication addressed to members of the House, repudiates altogether his pecuniary obligations to them. My friend from Virginia expressed his surprise, some time ago, when this matter was up, when I told him Myerle had given Montmullen & Cornwall a lien upon this hemp; but by a publication of Mr. Myerle, which came into my hands lately, I discover the contract, which, I presume, is set forth correctly, in which a lien is given to them upon the hemp. Mr. Myerle, when he made the arrangement with the Government, went out to the Commonwealth of Kentucky and came into my district, the largest hemp-growing district in the United States, and made an arrangement with Montmullen & Cornwall, who advanced him money for the purchase of hemp with which these experiments were to be made; the hemp, as soon as ready and broken out, was to be shipped and held by them in their names until their claims or liabilities for indorsement should be satisfied, &c., &c. They accordingly furnished the money. The hemp was rotted, broken out, and prepared for the use of the Government, the expenditures being incurred by the gentleman named in that amendment.

I have not time—I am so limited—to say anything about the character of the contract alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE.] He says that they charged Mr. Myerle usurious interest, and that the profits which they were to make out of the arrangement would have been great if the hemp had been accepted. I know nothing about that—I care nothing about that. That was the arrangement between the parties, and as it was but an experiment, I presume that both parties expected, if successful, to make large profits. The hemp was taken to Boston and rejected—some thirty or forty tons of it, I believe—the exact amount I do not know. The hemp being rejected, and Myerle being insolvent, Montmullen & Cornwall took the hemp to New Orleans, (but not in violation of their contract with Myerle,) converted it into bale ropes, and I have been informed that the color of the hemp being different from the dew-rotted hemp, and new to the merchants, they took alarm, and it could not be sold for its true value—though the color was a proof of its excellence. The result was, that a heavy loss was sustained all around. Mr. Myerle determined to apply to Congress for relief; and it is said that his agent called upon Montmullen & Cornwall for a statement of their loss, but they refused to furnish it to him unless they could get an equal settlement. Every business man knows that they should not have furnished Mr. Myerle with their statement to enable him to take it as the basis of action, and then make out his own account against them. They declined to do it. Now, it may be said, if Mr. Myerle obtains this money, that he will settle upon equitable terms with these gentlemen. I regret to say that there is no hope of it, because, though Mr. Myerle admits that they furnished the money to buy the hemp, he asserts, in a recent publication which he has laid upon the tables of members, that he is under no pecuniary obligation to them whatever, although by his own admission, in another part of the same paper, he offered them terms of compromise. Then, in the same paper, towards the conclusion, he declares that he does not owe them a dollar, because they had charged him a large exchange and usurious interest. But whatever they may have charged, they got neither principal, interest, nor exchange from him, and the small sum realized for the hemp did not pay a tithe of the losses. In a more recent publication laid upon the tables of members, he says:

"If in truth any loss was sustained by them, it was but the result of their own wrongful act, and therefore I should not be held responsible for it."

He has thus given distinct notice that he does not intend to pay them a cent, and you will therefore appropriate, if you pass the bill without my amendment, $30,000 for the purpose of paying losses which were incurred by them, which will go into the pocket of Mr. Myerle. The facts and details cannot be tried by this House, and the committee will see in a moment the propriety, if there be any color of equity in the amendment I have offered, of allowing a court to adjudicate between these men and Mr. Myerle, and settle the case upon the principles of law and equity. If they have a lien upon equitable principles under their contract, let them have it. If not, they will have to go out of the court. As my time has so nearly expired I will not elaborate the argument. I believe I have stated the substance of the claim. As to the claim of Mr. Myerle for compensation at all, or of anybody for compensation, I will say this: I have looked into the papers, and I believe that Mr. Myerle was induced by the Secretary of the Navy to undertake experiments for the benefit of the Government, in which great losses have been suffered. I have no doubt that those experiments conducted, in a great degree, to give an impulse to the preparation of water-rotted American hemp, and now, in point of fact, the American Navy is supplied for the most part at home instead of from abroad. I consider that the experiments made under Mr. Myerle's direction have given an impulse to the preparation of that kind of hemp which has provided our Navy with all that it requires at home, instead of going abroad for it. I will yield the floor upon this statement, with the expression of the hope that whatever the committee may do with the original bill they will at least adopt my amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Where is the necessity for the amendment you propose? I do not understand why the agent of those who claim this money cannot take this case from the department and file their bill in chancery.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They cannot do it. It requires a positive law. The necessity for it is this: without the action of this House they cannot file a bill in chancery and retain the money in the Department until the case is tried. If they cannot do it, it will be paid over to Mr. Myerle, who is not only insolvent, but announces his purpose not to pay them a dollar.

Mr. BOCOCK. I believe that, though the time limited for the expiration of the debate has arrived, I am entitled, as the person reporting this bill, to an hour to explain and defend it. I will say, however, to the gentlemen who may feel an interest in this matter, or who may be anxious that the debate upon this case may be speedily concluded, that I have no expectation whatever that I shall engage the attention of this committee for anything like one hour. I hope to get through in some twenty or twenty-five minutes. I find myself in a very peculiar and embarrassing condition in relation to this matter. I, who have taken so little part in the discussions of this House, and have consumed so little of its time, even when questions of great public importance have been under consideration, now feel myself called upon to come forward and advocate a claim brought here by a man of whom I know nothing apart from this case, and whose face I never saw until I saw him here prosecuting this claim. I feel uncomfortable about it in another point of view. It is needless for me to say anything in relation to my course in this body. The records will show, and those who have felt any interest in the matter, will remember that I have ranked myself upon the side of the most rigid economists in our expenditures of public money, and have stood by the side of those who have gone furthest to make this Government pure, simple, and frugal. But notwithstanding all that, I find myself here advocating a bill opposed by certain gentlemen with whom I have been in the habit of acting, and with whom, when I differ, I always distrust myself, and always feel regret. However much I may be disposed to act with those gentlemen, and however solicitous I may be to have their names recorded along by the side of mine upon the records of this Congress, I feel a higher interest in recording my name in favor of justice and right, and in favor of honesty and fair dealing between the Government and those who contract with the Government.

It is because, and simply because I believe this man Myerle, of whom I say I know nothing apart from this case, is justly entitled to the sum allowed him by this bill, and because, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, it became my duty to report it, that I come forward to sustain in argument the bill under consideration. What is this case? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] has gone much into particulars and details. I will confine myself to a general statement of the principles upon which this case rests. In 1839, (I think it was,) this man Myerle, then engaged in the manufacture of cordage at Louisville and St. Louis, came in connection with his business to the seat of Government. The gentleman who then occupied the post of Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. James K. Paulding, of New York, a man whose private reputation is entirely unspotted, and to whose integrity, honor, and character, as a public man, many here and thousands elsewhere will testify, came to the conclusion, from their interviews, that Myerle was particularly qualified to conduct an enterprise in which he felt much interest. He thereupon represented to him that he would make himself a great public benefactor if he would establish the practicability of water-rotting hemp in the United States. As a matter of course, Myerle informed him that he was engaged in extensive private transactions, and he could not relinquish them without incurring probable and almost necessary sacrifice. Upon the appeal made by Mr. Paulding, he however agreed to enter into this arrangement. The Secretary of the Navy, under the laws of the land existing at that time, was authorized to contract for materials and supplies for the Navy. Clothed with such authority Mr. Paulding, as Secretary, said to him, if you will enter into this matter and exert yourself faithfully and resolutely to prove to the country that hemp can be water-rotted in America, I will do—what? Now listen to the terms Paulding made with him. I will do what? I will see that you are secured against all loss; and if the Government be such a Government as I believe it is, you shall have a handsome remuneration if your efforts prove successful.

Mr. SWEETSER. He did not succeed.
Mr. BOCOCK. He did, as the facts will show. But for the present it is unnecessary to insist on that fact. If his exertions were faithful, he was to be indemnified against loss; and, if successful, he was to receive handsome remuneration from the hands of the Government. Now, Mr. Myerle does not come here asking that remuneration, although he has been successful. Others have come here representing that they have been or are engaged in great American enterprises, and therefore ask aid from the Government. Some wish large assistance to enable them to outstrip the ships of the British upon the seas, and they get it. Others, perhaps, may be found, who want great compensation for the discovery of the happy effect of ether, in relief of pain in operations of a surgical character. They, too, may realize their exorbitant demand. Mr. Myerle, though successful in an important enterprise for the nation at large, asks no such bounty. He only asks that you will stand up to the arrangement of the Secretary of the Navy, and remunerate him against his losses. I would refer gentlemen to the letter from Mr. Paulding in relation to this matter.

Mr. Paulding says, in his letter of March 18th, 1848:

"I had not been prevented by a political revolution, I would have fulfilled every pledge I made you to the very letter, and at least saved you from any loss after all the labor and risk you incurred."

In the same letter, he says:

"I had been at the head of the Navy Department at the time your hemp was rejected, I would most assuredly have taken upon myself the responsibility of directing it to be received, notwithstanding it was reported as inferior, not in quality, I believe, but in cleanliness, or something of that sort."

Here is the declaration of Mr. Paulding that he had pledged the Government to remunerate Mr. Myerle. The question arises here, will gentlemen say that Mr. Paulding had no right to make such a proposition? Perhaps he had not a strict legal right to make it. I am not here to contend for that. But Mr. Paulding was authorized to enter into contracts to furnish supplies for the Navy. He felt that he was doing good to the country, and not exceeding the reasonable intent of his authority when he entered into this arrangement. Will you, now, when you have been benefited by it, tell this old man, Myerle, that he has been misled by a patriotic but careless officer of the Government, and shall not be paid, according to his contract with him, for his losses and labor? Then, sir, if this bargain was made, and is to be regarded, the next question that arises is, was Myerle faithful in his endeavors in relation to this matter? Why, sir, the proof of it is ample. At the time when the Secretary of the Navy entered into this arrangement with Myerle, there were not a hundred tons of water-rotted hemp prepared in this country. A general belief prevailed that it was unwholesome; and wherever the enterprise was commenced, men fled from it as from a plague or a pestilence. Myerle took it up, and proved that it was not unwholesome; and from that time to this the quantity of American water-rotted hemp has steadily increased, until from less than a hundred tons per year then manufactured, twelve hundred tons per annum and more are now made.

Mr. HALL here made a remark which was wholly inaudible to the Reporters.

Mr. BOCOCK. There are numerous letters here which show that in various neighborhoods of the West water-rotting hemp was considered an unwholesome enterprise, until Myerle demonstrated otherwise.

Mr. HALL. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield me the floor for a few minutes. I wish to make a very few remarks about this bill.

Mr. BOCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman presently. I should have preferred it if the gentleman had made his remarks before I commenced. Indeed, I offered him the privilege of doing so.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will allow me to say a few words some time or other during the course of his hour.

Mr. BOCOCK. Certainly, sir; I will do so.

Sir, I had said that, at the time this arrangement was made with Myerle, there was not one hundred tons of water-rotted hemp manufactured per year in this country. Now, there are twelve thousand tons—enough to supply the whole American Navy. But there is one particular embraced in this case which it is necessary to explain and apply. Mr. Paulding entered into a further contract with David Myerle, that he should prepare and deliver two hundred tons of this water-rotted hemp some time in the year 1841; and for it he should be paid $300 per ton, I think.

In the fall of 1840, the political revolution to which Mr. Paulding alludes in one of his letters, took place in this country, and he saw that he had to leave the Navy Department in March, 1841. Then, sir, before the expiration of his term, some time in the year 1841, he enlarged the contract, and agreed with Myerle that he should deliver five hundred tons of this American water-rotted hemp some time in the year 1842, thus showing his confidence that Myerle was going on honestly and faithfully in the enterprise. In pursuance of that contract, some time, I think, in the latter part of 1842, or very early in the year 1843, David Myerle sent two hundred tons of this hemp to Charleston, in the State of Massachusetts, to undergo an examination. It was examined and rejected. He had on hand a further supply, which would have been delivered if that had not been rejected. But it was rejected, and the balance, therefore, was not delivered. Myerle's creditors then came down upon him, and he was crushed at once; for it was out of the proceeds of that hemp that he expected to meet his engagements, which were numerous, and to sustain his credit, which was largely at stake. Two of the commissioners who examined the hemp condemned it, and one of them said that it was excellent hemp—as good hemp as any foreign hemp. After it was condemned, it was sold to various persons engaged in private shipping interests; and we have the testimony of some of those men saying that it was as strong hemp as they have ever had occasion to use under any circumstances. The hemp was rejected because, as was stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] a little while ago, it was of a darker color than that which had been used in this country; but it was as strong and useful in every practical point of view as the best Russian hemp. Not only was there a great sacrifice upon the two hundred tons sent to Boston, but these very men—the constituents of the gentleman from Kentucky—seized the balance of it against the will of Myerle, hurried it into the market, and sold it at an enormous sacrifice.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I think this is just the point at which I should like to make the remarks which I propose to make, by way of explanation as to the rejection of this hemp by the commissioners at Boston. I desire merely to say that I have no doubt of the fact that that rejection was unjust, and that the hemp was all that it was required to be by the contract with Mr. Myerle. I am informed by a citizen of Memphis, whose character and credibility are unquestionable, that a short time since, in walking through the navy-yard at Boston, one of the gentlemen there said to him: "You do not expect to make rope at Memphis, do you?" "Yes, we do," said the gentleman, "we will give you better hemp than has ever been brought from Russia." "Well," said the other, "you may think so, but we do not intend to let you do it. We have a monopoly in the hemp business here, and we intend to supply all the hemp that is wanted for the Navy. In five years from this time, we will lock up your rope-walks in Memphis, and you shall not supply a pound of it."

Now, this may have been all mere vaporings, or "gassing," as we say in the West; but I have no doubt that that is the feeling which controls the public officers at Boston, and all who are interested in the proceedings there; and it is that feeling which has made them very nearly destroy the public works at Memphis, and produced that state of things which exists, and which is altogether different from what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has stated here to-day. He stated that American hemp is now altogether used in the Navy. That is not so. American hemp raised in the valleys of the Mississippi and Ohio can be purchased at the same price as foreign hemp, and is as strong—ay, stronger, bearing a heavier test than Russian hemp has ever borne; and yet within a short time past no less than five hundred tons of Russian hemp have been purchased.

Now, sir, I have no doubt from the proofs in the case, that this hemp was rejected at Boston by a system of juggling, in order to maintain Boston interests. I have no doubt that it was wrongfully rejected, and that Mr. Myerle was made to suffer immense injustice and loss from the fact that his enterprise conflicted with Boston interests, and must fall before Boston interests. That is a true statement of the case. Mr. Myerle ought to be compensated because he has been unjustly dealt with; because it is unquestionable that he has suffered loss, and that he has suffered it wrongfully.

As to the subordinate question, the rights of these individuals advocated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKENRIDGE,] I do not pretend to decide it. It seems to me, that that is a question which cannot be decided here. It is a disputed question, and I do not think that in justice to Mr. Myerle, the amendment ought to be adopted. This is all I desire to say about the matter.

Mr. BOCKOCK, (resuming.) The remarks just made by the gentleman from Tennessee, come in aid of the position that I am taking, that this hemp was improperly rejected. I had not said anything that would implicate any in malicious feeling towards Mr. Myerle or his section of country, or the commissioners who examined this matter. I did not know that that was an argument that would have much weight with this House, especially when it was the color of the hemp and not its strength that served those gentlemen as an excuse for rejecting it, and when I can show by evidence, that the hemp was strong and good. I will say this, however, in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, that Secretary Mason, in a late report, says:

"Finding by short experience that to insist on the inspection at Charlestown, as heretofore practiced, would be injurious to the western planter; he proposes that the annual purchases of that article, when not provided otherwise by contracts already made, shall be delivered and finally inspected at Louisville and St. Louis."

From some consideration it appears that the Department became satisfied that it was unjust to those gentlemen making western hemp to require it to be inspected at Charlestown; and since that time inspection offices have been established at Louisville and St. Louis.

I have shown that the Secretary of the Navy entered into an arrangement with this man, that he should engage in this business, and promised to indemnify him certainly against all loss, and if successful, to give him a handsome remuneration. I have endeavored to show that this man was faithful and energetic in his efforts to accomplish the purpose in which he was engaged. To do so, I have stated the facts connected with the other and more restricted contract. If the contract for the delivery of the five hundred tons of hemp was violated by the improper rejection of the hemp, as seems to be established by the testimony already adduced, as well as by the emphatic declaration of Mr. Paulding, contained in one of his letters on file here, the right to damages under that breach is clear. If, however, it was properly rejected, which I do not admit, and the defect was an immaterial or unavoidable one, then Myerle is entitled to compensation under the broader agreement first set forth, that he should be protected against loss, if faithful.

A gentleman near me asks whether it was in consequence of this undertaking on the part of Myerle that bankruptcy fell upon him as it has fallen upon him? I cannot say that it did, and I desire to be frank. The proof is, that after entering into this arrangement, he withdrew his personal attention from his extensive and complicated private business, and devoted it exclusively to this public undertaking. Whether from the withdrawal of that attention, or from other causes, those private operations did prove unsuccessful, my friend from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] who asks the question, is as well qualified as any other person, to judge how much depends on a man's personal attention to such business, and how great the danger of withdrawing it.

There is no claim, as stated in the report, for anything connected with his private losses. The only claim is for remuneration for his actual losses incurred in consequence of the rejection of this hemp.

Mr. STUART. I propounded the question to the gentleman from Virginia, whether Mr. Myerle was insolvent, and whether he became so in consequence of his contract with the General Government? If he became so in consequence of this contract, it is not only legitimate, but a very strong argument. If, however, his insolvency results from his private enterprise, the argument from that source falls; but I regard it as particularly applicable to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKENRIDGE,] If his private enterprises were likely to prove unsuccessful, and these gentlemen advanced him this money, probably with that knowledge, upon terms commensurate with the risk they took, then that is a strong reason why this amendment should not be adopted. But I will only add a single word, for I cannot consent to take the gentleman's time. I submit to the committee whether they have ever known a case where a legislative body undertook to interfere between a debtor and creditor that they did not work mischief? I confess I never did.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I wish, in this connection, to read a letter which has already been read from the Clerk's desk, but which perhaps the committee did not hear. It is written by James K. Paulding.

HYDE PARK, DUCHESSE COUNTY, April 12, 1852.

DEAR SIR: I write this to acknowledge the receipt of the two letters of yours during the last winter, and one a few days past, accompanied by an abstract of the last census, printed in the Congressional Globe, from which I learn, among other things, that twelve thousand tons of water-rotted hemp are now annually produced in the United States.

For this I do not hesitate to say, on my own personal knowledge, the country is indebted to your exertions, enterprise, and perseverance, amid every species of discouragement and to the ruin of your fortune. It is to you the United States are under the vast obligation of being made entirely independent of foreign nations for the supply of an article indispensable to their navy and mercantile marine. The recompense you ask of Congress is no equivalent for your own labors and sacrifices, much less for the benefit derived from them; and it seems strange that while that body is appropriating millions of public property for railroads through deserts, and displaying its liberality in behalf of future as well as uncertain benefits it should thus long have hesitated to discharge a debt of gratitude for one already received of such magnitude. For the opposition of Colonel Benton I could easily account; but I confess I am at a loss to find any rational motive for that of the member from North Carolina. If it be from a principle of economy, I would respectfully advise him to turn his attention to the general wasteful extravagance of Government, and stand sentinel over the millions, instead of exhausting his vigilance in defeating a just and equitable claim for a few thousands. I am as much in favor of public economy as he can be; but at the same time I conceive the obligation of justice superior to those of mere penny-saving.

I live in hope of yet seeing something done for you, and cannot but respect your firm reliance on Providence. It is the sheet anchor, and though it may sometimes drag a little, never fails to bring the ship up at last.

With the best wishes for your success, I remain your friend and servant,
J. K. PAULDING.

To DAVID MYERLE, Esq., Washington.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that it is difficult to add to the facts and arguments which are here developed. I have stated, I believe, that Mr. Paulding, in another letter, says that if he had remained in the Navy Department, he would not have permitted the hemp to have been rejected, being satisfied it was done improperly, and that he would have secured to Mr. Myerle what was promised him. This matter is set forth in the report at some length.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] though I desire to say a few words after he has done. He may have ten minutes of my time.

Mr. HALL. I wish to say a very few words in reference to this bill; and in order to give the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOCKOCK] abundant time to reply to my remarks, I shall endeavor to confine what I have to say within the space of ten minutes.

This claim, as I understand it, rests upon two grounds. The first is, that David Myerle introduced the process of water-rotting hemp into the United States, and thereby rendered an important service to the country, for which he has never received any remuneration. That is the first ground. The second is, that he made a contract with the Secretary of the Navy to supply the Navy with water-rotted hemp; but that through the misconduct of the agents of the Government, his hemp was rejected, and thereby he has sustained a loss. These, as I understand it, are the whole grounds upon which this claim rests. Now, sir, as to the first claim, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr.

BRECKENRIDGE,] who represents one of the most extensive hemp-growing districts in the United States, has told you, and every gentleman connected with this matter will tell you, that the process of water-rotting hemp was not introduced into the country by Mr. Myerle at all; that it was a process which has been tried long before that, in Kentucky and in other portions of the United States; that it is about as old as that of water-rotting flax; that it had been often tried in Europe and America, and that Mr. Myerle had only done the same thing when he made this contract with the Navy Department that hundreds of individuals had done before him. It is true the practice of water-rotting hemp had not become very general in the country before Mr. Myerle entered into it, but it is equally true that the same process is not very general to this day.

I represent one of the largest hemp-growing districts in the country, and I do not know a single man in my district who manufactures water-rotted hemp. And why? Because the prejudice still exists to some extent that it is unhealthy, in the first place, and in the next place, because it is a disagreeable and unprofitable business. Our hemp growers in upper Missouri can better afford to raise dew-rotted hemp at $90 per ton, than to raise the water-rotted for $200 per ton. That is the reason why they do not water-rot hemp; but whenever you can make it profitable for them to do so, they will water-rot it—not because David Myerle has done it before, but because they are willing to do whatever anybody else can do with hemp. It is a business they thoroughly understand, and are willing to do it, provided they can get paid for it. But the gentleman tells you that the business of water-rotting hemp has been extended since the commencement of Mr. Myerle's enterprise. That is true, but it is also true that the business of dew-rotting hemp has also been extended since that time. Upper Missouri raised no hemp at all but a few years ago. And why? Because the hemp-growing district of Missouri is a new country. It has not been settled very many years. A little while ago there was nobody in upper Missouri to raise hemp; but since the Kentuckians have gone there and cultivated the country, they have raised hemp—not because Mr. Myerle contracted to water-rot it, and broke at it. It is no such thing. They raise it there because it is a hemp-growing country, and because they can make more by raising it than anything else. They did not raise it many years ago, because there was no one in the hemp-growing country to raise it. You must understand that it requires a great deal of force to raise hemp. A man must have slaves, or negroes, and very few such persons were in the hemp-growing country fifteen years ago. There are many such there now.

But the gentleman says Mr. Myerle encouraged the introduction of water-rotted hemp. Where is the proof? Why, Mr. Myerle made a contract with the Government to furnish the Navy with water-rotted hemp at $300 a ton, when the foreign article could be bought for $230—for $70 more than we should have paid Russia. He made the contract, but broke at it, and thereby encouraged others to engage in it. That is the argument.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to make a remark? I place this claim chiefly upon the ground that Mr. Myerle's hemp was as good as Russian hemp, but was rejected, notwithstanding that fact.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Myerle broke because his hemp was rejected.

Mr. HALL. Well, sir, has not every gentleman who has advocated this claim made the same argument? that he made a contract with the Government to furnish the Navy with water-rotted hemp—that he broke at it, and that he therefore encouraged the practice of water-rotting hemp? Why, sir, is that the way to encourage a thing—to enter into it and then break? It seems to me it is the way to discourage it; and if any discouragement of this process has been inflicted upon the people of this country, it has been Mr. Myerle's mismanagement. He had a contract for $300 a ton, and failed to make money at it; although the Russian hemp could be bought for $230. If this had any effect at all, it was to discourage other people from entering into it, and not to induce them to adopt the process. I will, however, admit that Mr. Myerle did induce the people of Missouri to water-rot hemp in one way. I will tell you how he did it. He came up into my district in the year 1842, and represented that he was a Navy agent, and was authorized by the Government to purchase hemp to supply the Navy. I believe, however, that he denies that he came there himself, but that somebody else came there in his name, and told the people in certain publications that he was a Navy agent, and that if they would water-rot their hemp, he would give them seven or eight dollars per hundred. Upon that inducement and encouragement—for let it be remembered that they had never before adopted that mode of rotting hemp in Missouri, nor had Mr. Myerle ever had a hemp-rotting establishment in that State, if my information is correct—upon that sort of inducement, my constituents went into the business of water-rotting hemp; not because David Myerle had commenced it, but because he told them they would get eight dollars a hundred for that article. They prepared it for Myerle, and lo and behold! there was no David Myerle to come there for it and to pay for it. It turned out a misrepresentation. It turned out that my constituents were induced to spend their money upon a false representation, and they were obliged to throw their hemp into market at three or four dollars a hundred. That is the way he introduced water-rotted hemp into my country; and if the committee think that that sort of process is entitled to a remuneration of thirty or forty thousand dollars, in God's name pass the bill.

But it appears to me, that if the introduction of water-rotted hemp into the United States is to be remunerated, the proper people to remunerate are the farmers of Upper Missouri who, upon the misrepresentation of Myerle, went into it, believing they could get eight dollars a hundred for their hemp.

Now, in regard to the other point—that this hemp was improperly rejected by the commissioners of Boston. What evidence have you of that fact? You have Myerle's statement; you have the opinion of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. BOCOCK;] you have the opinion of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON;] You have the opinion of those three gentlemen that the commissioners of Boston were dishonest, and this, too, without a particle of evidence, so far as I can see. And upon that supposition of theirs, induced by friendship for Myerle, you are asked to appropriate $40,000.

Mr. BOCOCK. I know nothing of Mr. Myerle.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman says he knows nothing of Mr. Myerle; but he seems to think Myerle is an injured man.

Mr. BOCOCK. Did I ever say anything about Mr. Myerle personally?

Mr. HALL. Well, sir, I have only this to say, that all the facts of this case taken together, appear to me to show, that this hemp was not good water-rotted hemp. Now, what does the value of hemp depend upon? Not merely upon strength. Gentlemen who know anything about hemp, know that hemp not rotted at all, is stronger than rotted hemp; but it will not sell for anything in the market, because it is in such a condition that it will not last, when exposed to weather. It is not the strength of hemp alone that makes hemp good. It depends upon the color; it depends upon the cleanliness; upon the amount of tow in it; and upon its strength; upon the character of the staple, and many other things. All these taken together make good hemp.

Now, sir, this hemp of Myerle's was presented to these commissioners, who so far as I can ascertain were honest and capable and faithful men. It was presented to them, and they rejected it. And what was done with it? Water-rotted hemp was selling at that time for $200 a ton or more in the market, and the contract with Myerle was for $300 per ton. Did the persons who had charge of Myerle's hemp after its rejection, sell this hemp for water-rotted hemp? Did they throw it into the market at high figures? No, sir, they treated it as dew-rotted hemp, and tried to sell it at the price that such hemp was bringing. Do you suppose that Montmullen & Cornwall, (for they had charge of the hemp,) admitted to be business men, if this hemp had been valuable, and water-rotted hemp, would have sold it for $80 or $90 a ton, when they could have got $240 in the market? Does not the fact that they treated it as dew-rotted hemp after its rejection, prove that it was not of the quality to sell for water-rotted hemp?

Mr. BOCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the arguments made against this claim. What has this gentleman said in answer to my remarks? I will first revert to the last position he has taken here, and it is that the only proof we adduced that this hemp was improperly rejected by the commissioners, was the testimony of Myerle himself, the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON;] and my own opinion, and he intimated that such opinion sprung from some personal friendship for Myerle. I distinctly stated that Mr. Paulding, the then Secretary of the Navy, said that it was improperly rejected; I distinctly stated that one of the commissioners believed, as is proved here, that it was improperly rejected, and I distinctly stated that the men who used it came forward and testified that it was as good hemp as was ever used in the service. And, sir, he meets such testimony as that, by saying that my opinion springs from personal friendship for David Myerle.

And what testimony does he bring forward when he comes to tell us about Myerle's operations in Missouri? Is there anything in these papers to sustain the facts which he brings forward? Not one single letter of testimony. It is all the declarations of the Hon. Mr. HALL, of Missouri.

Sir, here is the testimony in the case, upon which I ask the committee to rely. I do not ask them to rely upon my declaration, and above all, I do not ask the committee to rely upon his declaration. Somehow there has been a prejudice against this man Myerle, from the State of Missouri, but confined, I believe, to the great ex-Senator [Mr. BENTON] lately elected to this House from the city of St. Louis, and the gentleman himself, [Mr. HALL;] I should like to know when Mr. Myerle went there as the gentleman says, by some agent, to deceive his constituents, whether he was one of the deceived? Did he lose a little from his pocket? Do all his tears flow from thence?

Here is the testimony in the case, and among the letters we find one from Hon. James H. Relfe and John Jameson, of Missouri, both recently Representatives upon this floor from the State of Missouri. I will read them.

Honorable James H. Relfe and John Jameson, of Missouri, says:

"It is an important matter to the Missouri farmers, and would become one of the staple articles of the State; but that until Mr. Myerle came among them they had done but little in its cultivation, and it was owing to his exertions that the farmers were turning their attention to it; that through him many who had never thought of cultivating and preparing hemp for market, had been induced to do it."

Another letter from William C. Anderson, of St. Louis, Missouri, to the Hon. James Farran, M. C., Cincinnati, Ohio, says:

"Mr. Myerle has been largely concerned, at the instigation of the Government, in the cultivation of hemp in the West, in which he has expended a large amount of money, time, and labor, and for which he has received no remuneration. He is a highly honorable gentleman, and a warm friend and patriot."

There are many other letters of a similar character going to show, as the whole history of the case shows, that David Myerle was the man who first proved to the farmers of the country that water-rotting hemp was practicable, and could be profitably engaged in.

But the gentleman very ingeniously distorts our position in a manner somewhat calculated to impose upon those who have not attended very particularly. He represents us as saying, that because David Myerle broke, therefore others were induced to engage in the same business. Why, sir, a friend here suggests that Robert Fulton himself, the man who discovered the applicability of steam to locomotion upon water—a man, too, to whose heirs this Government, in a spirit of gratitude and magnanimity, paid, after his death, $76,000, as a token of their appreciation of him as a public benefactor, and upon no contract whatever—Robert Fulton himself actually died insolvent, and was not completely successful in his world-renowned and world-gladdening enterprise; but he developed the idea, he gave the glorious design into the hands of others, and, profiting by his thought and his labor, we see with what brilliant success they have accomplished it. But, sir, how was Mr. Myerle unsuccessful? He showed that hemp could be water-rotted; and he went about and engaged men to enter upon the business. They, at least, induced thereto by him, pursued it successfully. He delivered two hundred tons, and could have delivered five hundred. It was rejected; and the proof is, by those who used it, that it was good hemp. It was not because he failed in it that they engaged in it, but it was because the experiments he tried upon it were, to an extent successful, and showed the practicability of the enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in relation to the history of this case. This case has been before Congress on some one or two other occasions. It has always received favorable reports at the hands of committees to which it has been referred, and it has never been rejected by the House, I believe. I have heard that it has never been. Once when it had passed this House and went to the Senate it was attacked, I think, by Colonel Benton alone, who, by some means or other, delayed it until the session of Congress expired, and it did not pass.

Now, I wish to say a word or two in relation to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE;] The gentleman does not ask that the House shall decide between the claims of this man Myerle and his constituents, Montmullen & Cornwall. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to ask this House to erect itself into a court of justice, to determine between the rights of David Myerle and his constituents. He contends that David Myerle is indebted to his constituents, and Myerle contends that he is not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I contend in substance that the Government is indebted to my constituents, if at all; and if this $30,000 is intended to supply pecuniary losses in making these experiments, the losses ought to go where the losses fall. At all events we ought to be allowed to try the question.

Mr. BOCOCK. If the Government is indebted to his constituents, why did not his constituents come here and prosecute their claims against the Government? Why did his constituents wait, doing nothing and saying nothing, and put upon Myerle the expense and the trouble of prosecuting their claim? He ought to contend that this money should be paid directly to his constituents, if it be theirs. But the gentleman hardly contends for that. He admits by his amendment that a court of justice is the proper tribunal to decide between his constituents and David Myerle. David Myerle may owe these gentlemen. He may also owe other gentlemen on the same account. These gentlemen may have a mortgage; others may have previous mortgages. If this debt be due there may be others of equal dignity. But Myerle says that this debt is not due.

It would be entirely improper for this Congress in this state of things, with an affirmation upon one side and a denial upon the other, to undertake to settle the affairs of David Myerle, or the gentleman's constituents. Therefore, it is simply an appeal to this committee, to allow his constituents an opportunity to assert their rights in a court of justice. Have they not had that opportunity? If this matter had come up suddenly, Mr. Chairman, and the money was to be delivered over to David Myerle without the gentleman's constituents knowing anything about it, he might come with more show of reason and plausibility to ask us to allow time for his constituents to litigate their claim. But, sir, this thing has been pending before the House for long years past, and they have been lying idle. They have left Mr. Myerle, by his own exertions, and his own untiring energy, to prosecute this claim. When it is up, and likely to be acted on, they come and ask us to hold Myerle off a little longer than we have, in order to give them days, and weeks, and years to do what they ought to have done long ago. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] suggests to me, very properly, to inquire while this matter is suspended, what contest do we have between these parties before the court? David Myerle, a poor, broken down pauper, David Myerle, who has spent all his strength and health in this cause for the service of the country, David Myerle, this feeble man, pecuniarily and physically, against his wealthy, and powerful, and influential constituents! They can come into court with able lawyers and strong purses, and either conquer him at once by these advantages, or fatigue him at length into submission. It is to be in chancery, too! How long would this case be hung up in chancery? Some of his remote descendants might prove that these men had no claim upon Myerle, and perhaps get something from the hands of the Government for the services of their ancestor. But Myerle himself would be long dead and at rest.

My colleague [Mr. MILLSON] suggests that if the Government recognizes its obligation to Myerle for $30,000, would it not have to pay interest for the time the case was held in court? When the Government passes a law acknowledging its obligation to Myerle for $30,000, what right has it, without paying interest, to hold that money back? Now, sir, with these views I submit it to the candor and justice of the committee, whether this amount ought not to be paid to him? I do not wish it to be thought by any that I have been rashly drawn into the advocacy of any claim here that stands upon a loose and tumbling basis, and is sustained by insufficient proof. I have some pride of consistency in a course of rigid economy. That is the only feeling I have about it, except that justice shall be done. Mr. Paulding well calls the attention of the country to the liberality of Congress towards railroad companies, one of which, in the State of Missouri, represented in part by that honorable and efficient member, [Mr. HALL,] has obtained this session 3,000,000 acres of the public land as a gratuity. Fattened and bloated with that enormous bait, he comes now in pride of power to browbeat and drive away old David Myerle, as he stands at the door of justice and asks for the little pittance to which his services and losses entitle him.

Mr. HALL. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that before that motion can be made the question must be taken upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HALL. I then move to insert into the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] after the word "Cornwall" the words "and citizens of Missouri." I must confess my great astonishment that the gentleman from Virginia should manifest so much excitement because I modestly endeavored to express my dissent to this bill. I shall, notwithstanding, give utterance to the opinion I entertain with regard to bills which come before me for my official action. It is my desire at all times to have the good opinion of that gentleman, but I shall discharge my duty even at the risk of incurring his displeasure. He intimates that I have been moved to a hostility for this bill for the reason that I have suffered from Myerle's misconduct. I tell the gentleman most distinctly that he is mistaken. I was not affected by Myerle's misrepresentations, not being at the time a farmer. I was young and just commencing the practice of the law, and had as much as I could do to attend to my profession; but I did see old needy farmers, induced by the misrepresentations of Myerle, incur great expense for the purpose of water-rotting their hemp. I have heard these men complain of the injustice inflicted upon them by his misrepresentations. I should indeed be a faithless Representative of those men and of justice, were I to permit this man to receive the $30,000 provided for by this bill, for swindling my constituents. The gentleman says my testimony is only the testimony of myself. Well, sir, the testimony the gentleman introduces here to bolster up this claim is the unsworn testimony of ex-members of Congress. I presume my word is at least as good as that of persons not known within this Hall, or of gentlemen who were here once and who discharged their duty with no more credit than myself. If the gentleman wishes proof, why, as chairman of the committee controlling this bill, has he not hunted for it? Why has he looked only for proof upon one side? Why has he presented himself before the committee like a feed attorney denouncing those opposing the bill?

Mr. BOCKOCK. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that I am a feed attorney in this case?

Mr. HALL. No, sir; I mean to say that the gentleman has manifested the spirit of a feed attorney. I do not believe that the gentleman has any pecuniary interest in the bill. I ask the gentleman why he did not endeavor to obtain all the evidence in the case? While hunting for evidence upon one side, why did he not upon the other?

Why was it he did not seek to ascertain at what time the process of water-rotting hemp was first introduced into America? He could have easily possessed himself of that fact. He should have made himself acquainted with the operations of Myerle in Missouri. I suppose he was influenced by the consideration that duty did not impose upon him such troublesome labor. He should, however, be willing to receive evidence when voluntarily tendered him, and not turn from it as from a pestilence. The evidence I offer is but the evidence of myself, because—

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish this business may be brought to a termination. I believe, upon the whole, that it would be cheaper for the Government to pay this man what seems justly due to him, than for us to waste the public money by these debates, especially when thereby we delay public business necessary to be accomplished before we can leave this city. I have listened to the exposition of this case—to the explanation made by my colleague, [Mr. FLORENCE,] and to the discussions from day to day upon it, and I have been strengthened in the conclusion at which I arrived a long time ago, that this man, David Myerle, has a valid claim upon the Government for the money which the bill proposes to pay him. He was evidently employed by the Secretary of the Navy, in the belief that that functionary had the right to engage his services and pay for them. He proceeded in his work, but met with the destruction of his property, to which allusion has been made. This mode of dealing with the public servants has become not only injurious to our character, but, if it were not contrary to dignity and what is due to this body, I should say it has become almost disgraceful to ourselves. Congress too often undertakes to throw itself upon its sovereignty to deny the rights of individuals, and places itself in a position which, if any merchant of this country would venture to do, he would find his place vacated in any respectable exchange in any commercial community.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I rise to a question of order. My colleague is not speaking to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Did not the gentleman move to strike out the entire bill after the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman afterwards modified his motion, and moved to insert certain words into the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certain words that vitiated the bill, whilst I desire to strengthen it. We are bound in honor as well as in law to meet the case before us. I do not wish, however, to proceed out of order. I do not wish to waste the time of this body. If the committee will proceed to a vote, I will take my seat. This evidently has come and appealed to us day after day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is called upon to enforce the rule, and the gentleman must, therefore, confine his remarks to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri; which is to insert after the word "Cornwall," in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, the words "and citizens of Missouri."

Mr. CHANDLER. I will only say further, that all amendments, and all amendments to amendments that stand in the way of the passage of this bill—that are lets and hindrances, are inconsistent with my views of the rights of the petitioner, whose claims I would advocate. I therefore oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] because if the bill should pass with that amendment, the sufferer, by the non-fulfillment of the nation's contract, would not be benefited, and instead of legislating to redress those whom the officers of Government have injured, and whom our delay has made to suffer, we only do that which of right the courts of law are competent to perform.

Gentlemen are impatient, and I am regarded as out of order, and therefore I will forbear.

Mr. LETCHER moved that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 42; noes not counted.

Mr. CABLE demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. LETCHER, and HARRIS of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported that there were ayes 56, noes 60.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. HALL. I move to diminish the amount of money to be paid one half. I only wish to notice the change made in the inspection of hemp, which was alluded to by the gentleman from Virginia. It is true that such a change has been made with regard to the inspection of hemp as was stated; but I apprehend if the gentleman from Virginia will extend his researches a little further, he will find that change was not made because it was presumed that the Boston people were dishonest and knavish, or that they were unable or unwilling to do justice to the hemp growers of the West.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. It is not in order for the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] in discussing the amendment he has offered, to do anything more than explain the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion of the Chair. The gentleman must confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. HALL. I wish to show why a part of the money should go to Cornwall and a part to David Myerle; and in order to do this, I must say something about the inspection at Boston. That is the ground upon which it rests. This inspection was changed from Boston to different points in the West, not because it was supposed that the people of Boston were knavish—

Mr. ORR. The gentleman cannot make the application in five minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALL. I will make it in a minute. The change was made on the ground that if the people of the West were to raise hemp, they could not go to the expense of sending it to Boston to be inspected, where it might possibly be rejected, and in consequence the hemp growers of the West might be subjected to great loss. It was considered of great importance, if western farmers should grow hemp for the Navy of the United States, that it should be inspected at their doors, or at least at western cities, where, if it was rejected, they might not sustain loss, but convert it to other purposes in the West. That was the ground upon which the change in the inspection was made, and it was made from no apprehension of unfairness or injustice on the part of Boston people. That is the only point which I wish to notice in the argument of the gentleman. There are many points made by him to which I would like to allude, but I have not the time.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I do not intend to occupy five minutes time. I merely rise for the purpose of saying that perhaps the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] might lead to the impression that I had brought an accusation against the citizens of Boston of being knavish and prejudiced against the hemp-growing interest of the West. The gentleman will do me the justice to say that I did not make any such argument as that. I might have intimated, and I think that intimation was made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] the chairman of the Naval Committee, that full and exact justice was not done by its commissioners to this hemp-growing interest; but I did not mean to make a sweeping charge against the people of Boston, or its commissioners, of being knavish and hostile to the hemp-growing interest of the West.

Mr. HALL. There is another statement which the gentleman did make, that this bill had never been rejected by the House. Now, by reference to the Congressional Globe of the second session of the Thirtieth Congress, I find that it was rejected by the following vote—yeas 71, nays 95. It was laid upon the table by that vote.

Mr. BOCKOCK. When the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] asked me if I made that statement, I told him that I made it to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. HALL. Certainly.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I had examined the proceedings of the House. I found that it had passed the committee, and from the statement of others, I had been led to judge that it was lost in the Senate. I remember distinctly to have known that

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 140.

Colonel Benton made a furious attack upon it in the Senate. I think at that time that it went to the Senate from this House. Perhaps the gentleman is correct in saying that it was defeated.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. KING, of New York, and STANTON, of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 41.

So the committee agreed to rise.

The committee then rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration House bill No. 168, for the relief of David Myerle, but had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to correct a clerical error made in the engrossment of bill No. 166; that is, to change the word Cilley to that of Kelley.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. As the gentlemen who have objected to the fortification bill will not press their objections now, I ask leave to report it for the purpose of reference.

Mr. CARTTER. I object to any such bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask the consent of the House to withdraw from the Committee on Commerce some papers in reference to the custom-house at Biloxi, Mississippi, for the purpose of reference to the proper Department.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

On motion by Mr. LETCHER, the House then adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock, a. m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BRIGGS: The memorial of Nelson Johnson and others, citizens of New York, praying Congress for the passage of a law for the better protection of lives on board of steamboats.

Also, the memorial of Dingwell and others, for the same.

Also, the memorial of D. E. Bailie and others, for the same.

Also, the memorial of Thomas Carter and others, for the same.

Also, the memorial of H. M. Lockwood and others, for the same.

Also, the memorial of E. M. Baldwin and others, for the same.

By Mr. BURROWS: The petition of Eleanor Conlan, praying for pension and bounty land.

By Mr. HART: The memorial of Cyrus Peck, James Crepey, Albert Perkins, Ira Smith, and others, praying the passage of a bill for the protection of the lives of passengers in steamboats.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, August 16, 1852.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a memorial from the laborers on the extension of the Capitol, in which they set forth that the compensation allowed them, taking into consideration the immense increase in the price of provisions in this city, is barely sufficient to support them, even when they receive full compensation; but that deductions are made whenever the weather prevents them working.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of the agent of the State of Maine, praying that the accounting officers of the Treasury may be authorized to allow and pay all claims intended to be provided for by the act of 13th June, 1842, that have been actually allowed and paid by said State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of the widow of C. L. Williamson, late a commander in the Navy, praying to be allowed the pension her husband received during his life; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of residents of Green Point, New York, praying that the homestead bill may become a law; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. SOULE presented the petition of R. B. Sumner and other citizens of New Orleans, proposing to sell the United States a site for a naval depot in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RUSK presented the memorial of the widow of Ira Birdsall, United States mail agent, who died while in the discharge of his duty, praying an appropriation for the relief of herself and family; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SEWARD presented resolutions passed at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of navigation through Hell Gate, and over Diamond Reef; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. BADGER presented the memorial of J. M. Miller, of Louisiana, proposing to place at the disposal of the Government, for a fair consideration, his steam condenser, for the use of their steam navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BORLAND presented the petition of mechanics and laborers employed in the navy-yard at Washington, praying an increase of their pay; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a letter, in the form of a memorial, from the men employed on the public works in Washington, praying an increase of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented a petition of the citizens of Iowa, praying the passage of the homestead bill; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the memorial of Thomas Ap C. Jones, asking to be restored to the list of invalid pensions, and to be allowed arrears of pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of James Wormsley, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of John Mitchell, praying that the increase of pension allowed him may be made to extend back to date of the injury for which the pension was granted, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Thomas W. Phelps, praying a pension in consequence of the loss of sight caused by disease contracted in the naval service, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Frederick Rikow, praying an increase of pension, and to be allowed the amount of money of which he was robbed while in Mexico, submitted an adverse report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Lucy Tate, widow of an officer in the revolutionary war, praying a pension, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Joseph Mitchell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

REMITTANCE OF DUTIES.

Mr. FISH, by unanimous consent, submitted informally the substitute which he intends to offer to the bill to remit or refund duties on goods, wares and merchandise destroyed by fire, which was ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives was presented by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives concurred in the amendment made by the Senate to the act for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Kelley, and William Close, sureties for the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy.

MARY E. BLANEY.

Mr. BRIGHT. On Saturday last, the bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary E. Blaney, widow of the late Major George Blaney, came up on its passage and was rejected. On conversing with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT,] I am satisfied that injustice has been done in that case. Therefore, as I voted with the majority, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to ask the attention of the Senate to that bill. It was ordered to be engrossed on Friday. I supposed that Saturday was to be devoted to the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] and that it was not to be considered a legislative day, and I therefore went home. But I find by looking at the newspapers this morning that the bill was rejected on that day. As my friend from Indiana has moved a reconsideration of that vote, I desire a test vote of the Senate, for it presents a case, if any has ever been presented, in which the Government ought to pay interest.

The facts of the case are these: The husband of this good lady was an officer of the Army. He died in the public service. He had placed to his individual credit in bank some $2,000 or $3,000. The Treasurer of the United States directed the cashier of the bank, under the supposition that the officer was indebted to the Government, to place that fund, which was to the individual credit of the officer, to the credit of the Government. The cashier did so, and the effect was to place this money in the Treasury of the United States. After some ten or twelve years of litigation, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that this man was not indebted to the Government. The result thus has been that money to the credit of an individual at the time he died was taken possession of by the Government. It was used by the Government for a great length of time, and at the expiration of the period, the Supreme Court decided that the money belonged to the individual. If that does not present a case in which the Government ought to pay interest, then there is no case in which it should, because here, by force, it took the money belonging to this individual and used it. I hope the Senate will consent to the reconsideration, and that we shall pass the bill immediately. But a few days ago, an amendment was made to a bill by the Senate, at the instance of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] in which interest was paid under circumstances not half so strong as the present case.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not rise to interpose any objection to the reconsideration of this matter, further than that the whole of the facts may be clearly understood. I understand—and if I am wrong I will thank the honorable Senator from Maryland to correct me—that the difference between the Government and this officer arose from a claim on the part of the officer for the payment of commissions. I understand this was one of that class of claims that had not, up to that time, been recognized as legitimate. Subsequently, he was able to obtain a decision in its favor. When it was presented, it was regarded as among the class of doubtful claims, but I believe the ultimate decision was in favor of the officer. Subsequent legislation deprived officers of that class of claims.

Now, I would inquire whether that is not the true question presented—whether the money was not detained during litigation in regard to a doubtful claim, and whether it could be properly said that the officer was not indebted to the Government until that doubtful question was settled; as it finally was by the determination of the court?

Again, there would seem to be some doubt in regard to the authority of the cashier of the bank to refuse the payment to the legal representative of money that belonged to that representative. If this be the true view of the case, the representative of the estate has an adequate claim against the bank for the detention of the money. I present these considerations in order that a full view of the case may be had.

Mr. WALKER. On Saturday last I called for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill. I announced at the time that I felt a desire that it should be passed, and I voted for it. I still desire its passage, and a very simple observation in reply to the Senator from Maine, it occurs to me, ought to satisfy the Senate. Whatever may have been the difficulty between the officer and the Government in regard to certain commissions which he had charged, it has no bearing whatever on this case; for here was the individual money of the officer on deposit in bank, and on a mere presumption of the officers of the Government that it was the Government's money, they directed it to be changed from the credit of the individual to the credit of the Government. So it remained as long as the litigation continued. That litigation resulted not only in favor of the individual's charge for the commission, but in demonstrating the fact that the Government had, during the whole time, the use of the money of the officer. In the mean time he died. His widow was deprived of the use of the money for twelve or thirteen years, and now it is said that the Government ought to pay nothing to his widow for the use of the money, after having kept her out of it such a length of time. This, it seems to me, is one of those cases where we ought to allow interest. The object for which I called for the yeas and nays was that the attention of the Senate might be directed to the subject, with the view of letting the Senate know that they were voting for an allowance of interest. I wish this to be understood, so that when some of my reports from the Committee on Claims come up, it may not be said that the Senate have always inveterately opposed the payment of interest.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the bill was passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DOWNS. I rise to make a personal explanation. I find that in my absence from the Senate, explanations have been frequently made by other members of the Senate, respecting an amendment to the Census bill which was reported by me from the Committee on the Judiciary, which has passed both Houses of Congress. A great many explanations have been made, to show on whom rests the responsibility of the amendment. I attach no importance to it myself. I reported the amendment, and am responsible for it. When the question was first mentioned, before I went away, I thought it of so little consequence as not to require an explanation; but I find, on looking into the debates which have taken place since I have been gone, that the matter has been referred to so often, and so many different explanations have been made, there seemed to be such an anxiety to fix the responsibility upon me, and so much was said—very unnecessarily, it seems to me—about the responsibility of it, that, although really there is no importance whatever attached to it by me, yet these debates have given an importance to it which requires me briefly to explain it. The matter is a very simple one. There is no necessity for misunderstanding, and no responsibility connected with it of which anybody need be afraid.

The circumstances of the case are these: When the Committee on the Judiciary had this matter before them, a communication was sent by the Secretary of the Interior to the committee, addressed to the chairman, but which came into my hands as acting chairman, in the absence of the chairman, [Mr. BUTLER,] stating that some difficulty having arisen as to the amount of pay which the person acting as Superintendent of the Census or Secretary of the Census Board should receive, he wished some provision made in the law to settle the question; that up to a certain time he had been paid $3,000, and he thought he ought to be paid that yet; but to remove all doubt and difficulty, he suggested that some provision should be made in the bill to settle it. I have before me the letter of the Secretary of the Interior to that effect. But to show clearly the whole state of the case, I have another statement from that gentleman of the whole subject, addressed to Mr. Kennedy, which explains it more fully than I can do:

WASHINGTON, July 29, 1852.

Sir: I have received your letter of this morning in which you refer to the proceedings of the Senate yesterday, and request me to furnish you a statement of such facts as I am acquainted with, connected with your claim for your official salary. In reply, I have to state that, when I took charge of this Department, in September, 1850, I found you receiving a salary of $3,000.

This you continued to receive, as I believe, without objection, for some months. I then learned that objections were raised to your receiving more than $2,500, on the ground that your functions as Secretary of the Census Board had ceased, and that from that time you were to be regarded merely, as "Superintending Clerk." The disbursing agent having made a decision to this effect, the subject was brought before me officially, and on an examination of the law, I was of the opinion that you were justly entitled to $3,000 so long as the Census Board required your services; and that when your functions as Secretary of that Board ceased you would draw your salary, as Superintending Clerk, at the rate of $2,500 per annum.

In pursuance of this opinion, I addressed a note to the disbursing agent, instructing him to allow you, in your double capacity of Secretary of the Census Board and Superintending Clerk, a salary of $3,000. A copy of that note is herewith inclosed, No. 1.

Thus the matter stood until about January, 1851, when objections were renewed by the First Comptroller.

I was of the opinion that the whole matter resolved itself into an issue of fact, viz: when did the functions of the Census Board cease?

I thought it was not competent either for the Comptroller or myself to decide that question; and thereby undertake summarily to dissolve a Board established by law, and composed of gentlemen quite as intelligent and upright as ourselves. In conformity to this view of the subject, I addressed an official letter to the Census Board, under date of 30th of September last, (a copy of which I inclose, marked 2;) in which, after reciting the facts, I requested them to inform me whether their functions as a Board had ceased? and if so, at what time? To this letter I received a reply, signed by Mr. Crittenden and Mr. Webster, (Judge Hall being at the time absent, I believe,) a copy of which is also inclosed, marked No. 3.

This, I believe, was done until about the close of the year 1851. Shortly thereafter you called upon me and stated that the difficulties had been renewed in regard to your salary; and after expressing your regret at the feeling displayed toward you by some of the officers, you stated that, to remove all scruples, you had a thought of asking an amendment of the law, which would make the matter entirely plain. I expressed my approbation of that course, and with your concurrence, if not at your request, I addressed an official note, under date of the 8th of February, 1852, to Hon. A. P. Butler, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, referring to the difficulties which existed, and requesting of him the introduction of an amendment into the supplementary bill, then before the committee, fixing your salary at $3,000. A copy of this note is inclosed, marked No. 4.

I deem it proper to add that, in all my interviews with you, you uniformly disclaimed all right to the two salaries, and contended merely that you were entitled to the larger of the two, viz: $3,000.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. H. H. STUART.

Here is the brief note addressed by the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, March 8, 1852.

Sir: As some difficulty has occurred in regard to the salary of Mr. Kennedy, who has acted in the double capacity of Census Superintendent and Secretary of the Census Board, I would respectfully suggest the introduction of a clause into the supplementary bill which you propose to report, fixing his salary at $3,000.

I think he richly merits it, and I can see no reason why he should stand on a different footing from the other heads of bureaus. Very respectfully, &c.,

A. H. H. STUART.

Hon. A. P. BUTLER,

Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, U. S. Senate.

In accordance with this request of the Secretary of the Interior, a clause was inserted in the bill, the object of which was to give the Superintendent of the Census, acting also as Secretary of the Census Board, the salary of $3,000 a year, and nothing more. Nothing more has ever been contended for; nothing more was contended for at the time. As to the form in which the amendment was made, after the committee agreed on the changes in the bill in other respects, the matter was referred to Mr. Kennedy, or the Secretary of the Interior, I do not recollect which, but to one of them, to draw the bill in form; and as they presented it with this clause, so it was reported. Instead of expressing directly that the salary should be $3,000, it repealed a clause in the act of 1850, about which there was some ambiguity. Now, the only doubt which rests on this subject as to the propriety of the law, is whether the functions of the Census Board did exist after the act of 1850 was passed. I apprehend that all the difficulty in this case has arisen from a misinterpretation of the law in that respect. The Senator from Massachusetts seems to adopt the idea, that the functions of the Census Board ceased after the passage of the act of 1850. But that clearly is not the case. In the act of 1850, there is an express provision that the functions of the Board, for certain purposes, shall be continued. In the nineteenth section of that act, is this provision:

"The blanks and preparatory printing for taking the census shall be executed under the direction of the Census Board; the other printing hereafter to be executed as Congress shall direct."

That clearly continued the Census Board; but this is not the only proof of the matter of fact, which is the main point in this controversy; for we find that immediately on the passage of the law, the proper officers of the Government gave that construction to it. We find in July, 1850, the Census Board, under General Taylor's administration, gave this statement and opinion:

OFFICE CENSUS BOARD, WASHINGTON, July 1, 1850.

Mr. Kennedy, appointed Secretary of the Census Board in accordance with the act of the 4th of March, 1849, continues to perform his duties as such, and will continue to perform the same until the requirements of the twentieth section of the act of the 23d of May, 1850, have been complied with, and the accounts settled.

J. M. CLAYTON,
REV. Y. JOHNSON,
J. COLLAMER.

So that, after the passage of the law of 1850, he continued in his functions, and we find that on the 30th of September, 1851, when the question was raised again as to whether those functions were continued, an application was made by the Secretary of the Interior to the Census Board, then consisting of different individuals—the present Attorney General, Secretary of State, and Postmaster General—for their opinion. The following letter was received in answer:

WASHINGTON, September 30, 1851.

We have received your letter of to-day, and have the honor to reply, that we do not consider the Census Board (of which we are members) as dissolved, or Mr. J. C. G. Kennedy, the Secretary of that Board, as discharged from office. The duties for which that Board was constituted, and the Secretary appointed, have not been finally completed. We regard the Board as still continuing, and the Secretary as still in office, and we unite as such to the salary of $3,000 per annum, and at that rate.

We are, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

J. J. CRITTENDEN.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

Hon. A. H. H. STUART, Secretary of the Interior.

P. S. When the Board, by its own official act, shall be dissolved, we will not fail to make it known to you.

J. J. C.

D. W.

So, Mr. President, it is very clear, both from the construction of the law, and the construction which has been given to it by the law officers of the Government, (for the Attorney General, and two other distinguished officers of the Government, constitute the Census Board,) that the functions did so continue. I apprehend that the reason why the Senator from Massachusetts fell into the difficulty on this subject is, that, as the Census bill of 1850 was reported and first adopted in the Senate, it did not contain this provision continuing the Census Board, but afterwards the twentieth section was adopted, which has been modified to the act which has given rise to this discussion. It contained the following:

"That, for the purpose of carrying into effect this act, and defraying the preliminary expenditures, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $150,000, out of which the said Secretary of the Interior may allow the person employed as Secretary of the Census Board a compensation after the rate of $3,000 per annum, from the period he has been in their employ."

Now, that was evidently based on the idea that these functions should not continue; but, afterwards, by an amendment made in the House, the proviso was inserted which contained that provision of the bill; but it was not adverted to at the time. It was necessary to change in some respects the phraseology of the twentieth section; and therefore it was adopted. There was some ambiguity in it, and in consequence, it was necessary to make the amendment to the law suggested by the Secretary of the Interior and adopted by the committee.

Now, where is the great responsibility for the impropriety of this amendment? Is it not evident that if the functions of the Secretary of the Census Board so continued, that individual was entitled to some compensation for performing them? Evidently, I think, he was. He had received that compensation up to a certain time. All the proper law officers of the Government decided, and clearly the act itself contemplated, that he should receive it; but a difficulty was raised by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and therefore some amendment to the law was necessary. Now, I understand that it was said this law ought to be modified, or some explanatory act should be passed in regard to it, because it authorizes the receipt of both salaries—$3,000 as Secretary of the Census Board, and $2,500 as Superintendent of the Census. It is a sufficient answer to that, that no such claim has ever been put in. That was not the object of the application made to the committee. The manner in which the committee understood it; the manner in which the Secretary of the Interior understood it; the manner in which the Senate and House understood it, and passed upon it, was that it never contemplated any such idea as that. Neither has such a claim been set up since the passage of the act. After its passage Mr. Kennedy applied for the payment of $3,000 a year, but for nothing more. Where, then, was the necessity of further legislation on the subject for the purpose of explaining the law?

Before the resolution of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts was brought forward, having reported the bill of which it was explanatory, the first question I asked was, if Mr. Kennedy had asked for the double salary. I understood he had not. I then said, that there was no necessity for providing for evils that might never occur. If Mr. Kennedy applies for the double salary, and it is likely to be paid him, let us make some provision to prevent it; but if he disclaims any such idea, there is no necessity for it. He never made any such claim. The House committee so understood it. So the Senate and the House understood it, so that there was no necessity for providing against a difficulty which might never arise. However, not being influenced by this suggestion, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts brought forward his resolution. I thought so clearly that no necessity existed for it, that although I was present when it was presented, I thought proper not to interfere. Perhaps I ought to have done so, because I reported the bill, but I saw no necessity for it. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts had a right to consult his own judgment on the matter. He had a right to introduce the resolution; but I did not think it necessary to interfere or make any explanation. I make this explanation now, because so many remarks have been made, and the subject has been referred to as a matter of so much importance, and my responsibility referred to, that I was apprehensive that some culpability might be attached to the proceeding which did not exist.

It is then a clear and ordinary transaction. At the request of the Department itself, the clause was put in the bill, and it underwent the ordinary discussion. It was reported by the committees of the two Houses, and nobody then gave it an improper construction; but it seems after the law has gone through all the forms, somebody wiser than Congress, or the committees, or the Department, or anybody else, who seems to have a wish to control and direct matters very unnecessarily, it seems to me, in some cases at least, has made suggestions of difficulties that may occur, and therefore the circumstance is brought before Congress again. There is no reason for it, and there is no reason that so much feeling should have been expressed, and so many explanations made. No difficulty would arise out of it. It is evident, under the circumstances—it having been contemplated that payment should be made to the person as Secretary of the Census Board as long as it existed—he is claiming nothing more than the salary of $3,000, to which he is entitled. He was entitled to it; and even if that were not the fact, still it was a proper matter for the consideration of Congress in making a new law, whether the duties imposed upon him as Superintendent do not entitle him to the salary of $3,000, and whether it was not right for Congress to give it to him in that capacity alone? And if there was any doubt about it, it was still perfectly proper for Congress, if they thought he ought to receive $3,000, to give it to him; and I do not think there would have been anything wrong, or any great responsibility incurred. I am sorry that I have been compelled to make these explanations. I should not have done so but for the very earnest manner in which explanations have been made, and the way in which my name has been involved in the matter.

SAULT STE. MARIE.

On the motion of Mr. CASS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way, and a donation of public lands, for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of St. Mary's river, in said State.

A long debate ensued, in which Messrs. CASS, UNDERWOOD, BUTLER, BELL, TOUCEY, DOUGLAS, ATCHISON, PRATT, and BORLAND, participated, which will be published in the Appendix. Without disposing of the bill, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the further consideration of House bill No. 297, declaring the Wheeling Bridge a "lawful structure, and for other purposes."

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to report a bill from the Committee on Commerce, for better securing the lives of passengers on board steamboats. [Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

I ask this merely for the purpose of having certain matters printed which the Committee on Commerce have recommended; and I ask also that the consideration of this bill may be postponed until Thursday next.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DURKEE. I rise to a privileged question. I have been absent from the city for a few days, and on my return find that a serious charge was made against me, during my absence, by a member of this House. I am charged with nothing less than an act base in its character.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to know whether this case comes out of the time allowed to me?

The SPEAKER. Unless there be a reservation made.

Mr. MILLSON. I must object.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the time proposed to be occupied by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DURKEE] shall not come out of the morning hour?

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the time occupied by the gentleman from Wisconsin shall not come out of the morning hour.

Mr. DURKEE. The most friendly relations have hitherto existed between myself and the member from South Carolina, [Mr. AIKEN,] and since I have occupied a seat in this House am not conscious of having indulged in the least unkind feelings towards any member of it; and I am satisfied that the gentleman who made this accusation will, when I explain the remarks to which he objected, say that he believes no wrong was intended, and withdraw his charge. The issue between us is in relation to an occurrence in the city of Charleston; and perhaps, for the information of the House, it would be proper here to read the remarks to which the gentleman takes exception.

In the speech which I submitted to the House a few days ago on the fugitive slave law, I quoted from able writers on public law, to show that cruel and oppressive enactments are not binding when their observance requires the commission of crime; and among others an extract from the words of a distinguished South Carolinian, which I will now read in connection with my own remarks, which were obnoxious to the gentleman:

"In another case in South Carolina, an act of the Assembly passed in 1712, was, in 1792, held to be void, because it took away the freehold of one man and gave it to another. The court said it was against common right, as well as against magna charta, to take away the freehold of one man and vest it in another, and that, too, to the 'prejudice of third persons, without any compensation or even a trial by the jury of the country; and the act was, therefore, in fact, void; that no length of time could give validity, being originally founded on erroneous principles.'—Bowman v. Middleton, 1 Bay, 252.

"But, Mr. Chairman, the citizens of South Carolina have not only spoken theoretically on this subject, but have given in one case, as I am informed, a practical illustration of this sentiment. I was told a few days since, by a highly respectable gentleman who resided several years in that State, that a negro in the city of Charleston a few years ago was sentenced to be hung for striking his master. The narrator, in speaking of the provocation, said:

"The master was discovered by the prisoner trespassing on the chastity of his wife. Under the excitement of the moment the slave struck his master, for which he was sentenced to be hung! On the day appointed for the execution, the sheriff ascended the scaffold with the prisoner, placed the rope about his neck, but felt so much sympathy for the slave that he could not perform the duties of his office, and offered $1,000 to any person that would; but not one could be found. All were aware of the circumstances, and presumed that a colored man had nerves to feel on such an occasion as well as a white man. After a time, the rope was taken from his neck, and he was permitted to escape from the State."

"Thus we see the triumph of the 'higher law,' even in South Carolina, and another proof that man is stamped with a divine principle by his Creator, that cannot be entirely effaced by barbarous legislation. Sir, this humane and righteous act of the citizens of Charleston is worthy of all praise, and how much more to the honor of human nature than the infamous conduct of the citizens of Boston in kidnapping poor Slips—a crime which will leave an indelible stain upon the inhabitants of that city and upon the Republic in all coming time. How strangely it contrasts with the battle of Bunker Hill, and the conduct of the Boston Tea-Party! I do not wonder at the animated versions of the Rev. Theodore Parker on the shameful conduct of that city, whose 'prejudices' had been conquered by its distinguished leader."

My object in citing this incident was for the two-fold purpose of adducing proof to sustain my views on the "fugitive slave law," and to show the great contrast in the conduct of the cities of Boston and Charleston in two given cases, in which I commended the course of the latter city in its disregard of a State enactment, the observance of which would have involved the commission of a great wrong.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. I do not understand this to be a personal explanation, but an argument to sustain the position which the gentleman took in his speech on the subject of slavery.

The SPEAKER. It is difficult for the Chair to determine for what purpose the House, by unanimous consent, allowed the gentleman from Wisconsin to take the floor.

Mr. LETCHER. It was for personal explanation, as I understood it, and not for the purpose of enabling the gentleman to go into an argument here to define the position which he took in his speech three or four days ago.

Mr. DURKEE. I am endeavoring to show that nothing offensive was intended, and that the remarks to which the gentleman objects admit no such construction. They are simply a narration; and if they contain any inaccuracies, shall most cheerfully be corrected. Sir, what is the difference in our statements? The gentleman, in his own remarks, admits substantially my statement of the case, except in one particular; and that is, that the negro that the people of Charleston refused to execute was guilty of arson instead of a personal assault. He himself commends the people of South Carolina for the course they pursued in relation to the acts to which I alluded. The only difference between us is in regard to the crime of which the negro was found guilty. The statutes of South Carolina, in reference to such persons, put the crime of arson and of assault with intent to kill on the same level. The penalty is the same. That is the main difference between us. He agrees with me as to the modus operandi, the course of procedure by the court, the refusal of the people and of the sheriff, very properly, as he says, to carry out that law. The circumstances were such that the law could not be enforced. The sheriff even offered a reward to any one who would act as executioner, and no man would accept. That was the very principle for which I was contending in my speech. Sir, it was a noble act; and I say again that I will never be deprived of the privilege of bearing testimony in favor of such humane and just principles.

Mr. MASON. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not abuse the privilege which has been extended to him of making a personal explanation by delivering a regular speech, because on some other day some gentleman may really wish to make a personal explanation.

Mr. DURKEE. Mr. Speaker, I have not troubled the House much with speeches, and trust that no gentleman will object to my occupying twenty or thirty minutes in repelling the unprovoked assault on my character.

Mr. MASON. Under the pretext of a personal explanation, it very often happens that a gentleman makes an hour speech.

Mr. DURKEE. I hope the House, out of respect to itself, will permit me to prove my innocence of the wrong imputed to me. If I am as base as represented, it is a duty the House owes to itself to expel me. The maintenance of its honor and dignity demands it.

Sir, I wish to allude to the circumstances which led to my knowledge of this incident.

Not long since I was conversing with a southern gentleman—an educated, talented, and respectable man, who has resided many years in the South, and is well known to many of the citizens of South Carolina.

Mr. AIKEN. Is he here?

Mr. DURKEE. He was in the city a few days ago. I called to see him this morning, and found that he had left. In conversing with this gentleman upon various topics, the slavery question came up. I said to him that the North was greatly in the majority, and still allowed the minority to wield the General Government for the maintenance of the coastwise slave trade and slavery in the District of Columbia. I remarked, too, that I knew southern gentlemen in the Thirty-first Congress willing to support the Wilmot proviso, who declared themselves in favor of circumscribing the institution of slavery—of shutting it out from the vast territory recently acquired, and of letting it die out.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. The gentleman says that he knew southern men in the Thirty-first Congress who were in favor of the Wilmot proviso. I ask him to name one.

Mr. DURKEE. I will do so as soon as I close my remarks. Their names can be found on the record.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be obliged to the gentleman if he will name them. I want to know who they are.

Mr. DURKEE. I recollect one gentleman who voted for it and afterwards changed his vote, for the reason, as he said, that northern men would not stand up in Congress in support of principles which they professed on this subject at home. I said to this gentleman, that I believed southern members were more independent in the maintenance of their peculiar institution, than many northern members were to carry out the principles of their constituents. He assented, and added, that the southern people were naturally kind-hearted, and when really convinced they were right in a good cause, would allow nothing to defeat them. He then related this case in Charleston, just as I have stated it; that the law was rigid; that the man was tried and condemned, but public sentiment was against enforcing the law in this instance. The fact was, public sentiment had outgrown the law passed a long time previous. We have a law in this District, that where a man is found guilty of the crime of arson, he shall be hanged and drawn in quarters; but we have risen above this relic of barbarism in our judicial proceedings. It has become inoperative, and so with the case in South Carolina. Was there anything inflammatory or disrespectful in my alluding to the progress and reform of popular sentiment in South Carolina, in regard to laws of that character? I think not.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise again to a point of order, and I insist that the Chair shall decide it. It seems to me that enough has been said to indicate that the gentleman from Wisconsin is not in order in the course of argument which he is pursuing here. The gentleman's remarks have been as far from being in the nature of personal explanation as anything I recollect to have heard. The object of the gentleman seems to me to be to make an argument here for the peculiar benefit of his free-soil constituents at home, and of an offensive character towards those northern men here, who do not concur with him in opinion.

Mr. DURKEE. The northern men do not complain.

Mr. HART. Yes, they do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it must have been the intention of the House, although not expressed in so many words, to enable the gentleman to make a personal explanation, and the gentleman is requested to confine himself strictly to a personal explanation.

Mr. DURKEE. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks with which the gentleman is displeased, were not intended to injure his feelings or the feelings of his constituents. If, in combating the great evil in which the perpetuity and welfare of the Republic is involved, I find it necessary to advert to the records and public history of our country, I hope never to shrink from my duty. I certainly shall not be deterred by any denunciations uttered on this floor, or by Congressional or Baltimore resolutions. Sir, the freedom of debate, the maintenance of individual opinion and individual independence, gave birth to our constitutional freedom. If we mean to maintain it, we should ever seek to preserve these invaluable blessings which are so dear to every patriot, and to every American citizen. I say, in the words of another, "give me liberty of thought and speech, or give me death." If the gentleman is satisfied there was no wrong intended, I trust he will withdraw his accusation.

Mr. AIKEN. When I came into this Hall at the commencement of this Congress, it was not my disposition or intention to be offensive to any gentleman. Far be it from me to be so. All that fell from me the other day, in relation to the gentleman's speech, was exceedingly repugnant to my feelings, but it was a duty which I owed to my constituents, and which I performed willingly and cheerfully. And not only did I do it on that occasion, but I say that I will do it again whenever the same thing presents itself.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has made a direct appeal to me; and if he is perfectly willing to withdraw the offensive language which he made use of in his speech, I have not the slightest objection to meet him upon that ground. My intercourse with that gentleman has been familiar and social; as I desire it to be with all the members of this House. I do not wish to say anything offensive to that gentleman, or to any other gentleman. If the gentleman will publicly, upon this floor, withdraw the offensive language he has given utterance to, I am willing to meet him in that spirit.

Mr. DURKEE. What is the language that is offensive?

Mr. AIKEN. The gentleman is in error in his statement of the case. He says in his printed speech, that this negro was condemned because he struck a white man for having interfered with his wife. That is offensive language. Such a thing did not occur. The gentleman who gave you the information was either mistaken, or else he wished to deceive you.

Mr. DURKEE. I accept, of course, the correction of any error that may have occurred in describing this case, but will here announce, in vindication of the person who related the circumstance to me, and in my own justification, that on Saturday evening I received a letter from a person now in the city of Philadelphia, in which he states that he was a resident of Charleston at the time, and that there did such a case occur as related in my speech, in addition to the one already admitted by the gentleman from South Carolina, and that the only mistake in the statement is, that the man was finally executed instead of being released. I have the letter before me, and will have it read, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. AIKEN. I understand that case perfectly, and will explain it, if the House will give me leave.

Mr. DURKEE. Would you like to have the letter read?

Mr. AIKEN. No, sir; I do not desire it. I know all the circumstances connected with the case, and can give them if the House desires.

I can explain this case in a few words. It is a matter which I dislike very much to bring before the House; but I will state the facts connected with it for the satisfaction of the gentleman. There was a case of this nature which occurred in Charleston in 1830, but it had nothing to do with slaves. There was a free negro man married a free negro woman, whose character was not of the best description before her marriage. She had been in the habit of cohabiting with other persons; and in a short time after her marriage, I presume she returned to her first love, and did the same thing again. It so happened that this free negro man met a white who was with her at the time. He was a gambler, and a most disreputable person—a man who did not belong to Charleston, but was there for a short time. This free negro did strike him, and was tried, condemned, and hung. The laws were positive upon the subject. An appeal was made to the lamented General Hayne, who was Governor of the State at the time, by a number of citizens, to pardon him. I am sorry to make this allusion, for I do not desire to allude to the subject in this House; but it is true that one of the strongest reasons for allowing that man to be hung, was that this Abolition party had become so powerful in the free States that it became necessary to make an example of this man, to let these free negroes know their duty. Now, sir, I repeat that I do not like to allude to a matter of this kind. If the gentleman had only consulted me before he made his speech, I would have explained it; and these personal explanations before the House would never have occurred.

Mr. DURKEE. I have concluded what I intended to say.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, obtained the floor.

Mr. FICKLIN. Is it in order now to move to suspend the rules to introduce my small note bill?

The SPEAKER. Not during the morning hour. The business first in order is the bill declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure; upon which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was I not recognized by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks pardon of the gentleman. He was recognized by the Chair, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rose in the first place to ask a little favor of the House, but I have no idea they will grant it, and I will not, therefore, press it upon them at this time. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MILLSON resumed and concluded his argument in favor of the bill.

[A message was here received from the Senate through ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage by that body of certain bills.]

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following acts; which received the signature of the Speaker:

H. R. No. 166. An act for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Kelly, and William Close, sureties of the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy;

H. R. No. 158. An act for the relief of Sergeant Leonard Skinner; and

H. R. No. 153. An act for the relief of the heirs of Semioce, a friendly Creek Indian.

Mr. DISNEY then obtained the floor, and proceeded to argue in favor of the power of Congress to erect a bridge over the Ohio, and maintaining that although such a bridge when erected by Virginia alone, might be properly declared by the Supreme Court a nuisance, yet the bridge having been erected, the Congress of the United States, in which lies the jurisdiction, could adopt this bridge as a post route. [This speech will be found in the Appendix.]

THE INDIGENT INSANE.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having expired, the Chair thinks it his duty to call up the privileged motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] on Monday last. It is a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up and acting upon the following bill, viz: A bill "making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons."

Mr. STANLY. I hope the bill will be taken up without the necessity of calling for the yeas and nays.

The question was put, and upon a division there were 47 in the affirmative.

Mr. STANLY demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Tennessee, and FOWLER were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 40; not being two thirds in the affirmative—

Mr. STANLY demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. MILLSON. Is it in order for me to make an inquiry of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Not without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to know if this bill will interfere with the Wheeling Bridge case?

The SPEAKER. It cannot interfere with the morning hour.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 92, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaas, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Curtis, Doty, Duncan, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hall, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenkins, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Newton, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Pennington, Polk, Porter, Price, Reed, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Benj. Thompson, Thurston, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, and Yates—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocoek, Busby, Colcock, Dean, Durkee, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, Letcher, Lockhart, Mason, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Robie, Stone, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—41.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

Mr. STANLY. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] before the House?

The SPEAKER. I understand from the Clerk that it is not before the House.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection to the amendment being offered, and then I wish to move the previous question. This bill has been discussed at two different sessions of Congress, and I desire the House to dispose of it in some way or other.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota can come up in order by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. HALL. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. There are a number of amendments proposed by the committee, which must be acted upon before other amendments can be offered. If the previous question be sustained, it will cut off all amendments except those proposed by the committee.

Mr. SIBLEY. I believe the gentleman from North Carolina does not intend to cut off my amendment by moving the previous question. I wish to ask whether that amendment of mine cannot be received by the unanimous consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] objects.

Mr. SIBLEY. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw his objection.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will not call for the previous question. I hope he will withdraw it; for the bill as it now stands will prohibit the settlement of Minnesota indefinitely.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will it be in order to have the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota read for information?

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

No objection being made, the amendment was read, as follows:

In section 1. "And Territories," interlined after the word "States" in third line.

In section 2. Strike out the words "and the quantity apportioned to any State in which there are no such lands, shall be located in the territory belonging to the United States, to which the Indian title shall be extinguished, and it shall be the duty of the States to offer the said lands for sale immediately, and to complete the same at the earliest practicable delay," in lines eight to fourteen, and also all the provisions contained in said section, and insert in lieu thereof the following words:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to issue to those States in which there are no public lands of the value of $1 25 per acre, land scrip to the amount of their distributive shares in acres, under the provisions of this act, said scrip to be sold by said States, and the proceeds thereof applied to the uses and purposes prescribed in this act, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever: Provided, That in no case shall any State to which land scrip may thus be issued, be allowed to locate the same within the limits of any other State, or of any organized Territory of the United States; but their assignees may thus locate said land scrip upon any of the unappropriated lands of the United States subject to private entry.

In section 5. After the words "are appropriated" in third line insert, "and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for."

In section 6. After the word "land" in second line, insert "and land scrip."

Mr. STANLY. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question. The bill, as it now stands, gives to the old States not a dollar.

Mr. AVERETT. I appeal to the gentleman who moved the previous question to withdraw it, and to allow me to address the House, for the committee have heard nothing about this bill. The friends of this bill have had several occasions to address the committee, and there has been no opportunity to speak against it.

Mr. STANLY. I have had many applications of that kind, and I cannot withdraw the call.

Mr. AVERETT. I hope then that the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. SIBLEY. I wish to ask, whether before the previous question is moved and seconded, it is not in order for me to offer my amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that it is not in order except by the unanimous consent of the House.

The previous question was then seconded.

The question then being, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and the question being taken there were—yeas 76, nays 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaas, Bissell, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Cobb, Conger, Dean, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hall, Harper, Haws, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, John Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Pennington, Perkins, Price, Reed, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Stratton, Stuart, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, and Yates—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Buell, Joseph Cable, Chastain, Colcock, Dimmick, Disney, Durkee, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Howard, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Mason, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Robie, Schoonmaker, Skelton, Snow, Thaddeus Stevens, Sweetser, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—58.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

The following amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was then disagreed to, as follows:

1. In section 1, strike out the following: "Ten millions of acres of land, to be apportioned under the direction of the President of the United States, in the compound ratio of the geographical area and representation of said States in the House of Representatives, according to the census of 1850: Provided, That the area of no State shall be computed at more than fifty thousand square miles," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Public lands at the rate of fifty thousand acres to each Representative in the House of Representatives, according to the census of 1850," so as to make the section read as follows, viz: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be granted to the several States for the purpose hereinafter mentioned, public lands at the rate of fifty thousand acres to each Representative in the House of Representatives, according to the census of 1850."

The following amendments of the Committee on Public Lands were then agreed to, viz:

2. In section 2, after the word "lands," in the fourth line, strike out the words "of suitable quality," and insert after the word "State," in the fifth line, the words "worth $1 25 per acre, the value of said lands to be determined by the Governor of said State," so as to make it read:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the land aforesaid, after being surveyed, shall be apportioned to the several States in sections or subdivisions of sections; and whenever there are public lands in a State worth $1 25 per acre, the value of said lands to be determined by the Governor of said State, the quantity to which said State shall be entitled shall be selected from such lands," &c.

3. Add to section 2, the following proviso, viz: "Provided further, That if said land be not sold within twenty years from and after the passage of this act, the lands remaining unsold at the end of that time, shall revert to the United States."

"4. Strike out the 3d section, as follows, viz:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever the apportionment of said lands shall be completed, patents shall be issued to the several States for the portions which shall be allotted to them respectively; and thereupon the said State shall assume the management and sale of the lands thus apportioned to them."

5. In section 5, after the word "States," in fourth line, insert the words "or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than five per cent. upon the par value of said stocks," so as to make it read:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid, by the States to which the lands were apportioned, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the States or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than five per centum upon the par value of said stocks, and that the moneys so invested, shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall be forever undiminished, and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated to the comfortable maintenance and support of the curable and incurable indigent insane."

6. In section 7, after the word "idiots," in line three, insert the words "the deaf and dumb or blind," so as to make it read, as follows, viz:

"Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That if any State shall establish a public State institution for the maintenance and education of idiots, the deaf and dumb or blind, they may, at the discretion of each State, be permitted to participate in the benefits of this act, under the restrictions hereinbefore specified, and in the ratio of their numbers, relatively to the insane for whose maintenance and support the interest of the fund belonging to such State shall be applied, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. SIBLEY, [inserted previously,] and it was agreed to.

Mr. CHASTAIN moved to lay the bill upon the table; and on that motion he asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 52, nays 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Chastain, Colcock, Dean, Durkee, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Jackson, Jenkins, A. Johnson, J. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Mason, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Robie, Ross, Snow, Sutherland, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—52.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaas, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, J. H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Geo. H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Cobb, Conger, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Edgerton, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Horsford, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Pennington, Perkins, Porter, Price, Reed, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Walbridge, Walsh, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, and Yates—90.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. When shall the bill have its third reading?

Several Voices. "Now!" "Now!"

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Has the bill been engrossed?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I object to the third reading.

Mr. STANLY. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his objection, and allow the bill to have its third reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I must decline to withdraw it.

Mr. STANLY. Then I move to suspend the rules, so as to enable the bill to be read the third time now.

Mr. LETCHER. On that motion, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOCOCK. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER, and STANTON of Tennessee were appointed.

The House was then divided upon ordering the yeas and nays, and the tellers reported 31 in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STANLY's motion, and there were—yeas 90, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Bennett, Bingham, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thomas Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Cobb, Conger, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Edgerton, Evans, Florence, Fowler, H. M. Fuller, Gamble, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Harper, Hart, Hawes, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, J. W. Howe, Ingersoll, G. G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Miller, Miner, John Moore, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Porter, Price, Reed, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, B. Thompson, Thurston, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, and Yates—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocoek, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Chastain, Colcock, Dean, Disney, Edmundson, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Mason, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Milton, Henry D. Moore, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Robie, Ross, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—48.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

MARY B. RENNER.

Mr. COBB. I now make the appeal to the House, of which I gave notice several days ago, in behalf of a suffering widow and six orphan children. I hope the House will allow the bill to pass. It has passed both branches of Congress several times, has been reported on by many committees of both Houses, and has never been reported against. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 152, providing for the settlement by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of the claim of Daniel Renner, deceased, upon such terms as are provided for in said bill, not to exceed the amount therein stated.

Mr. CARTTER. Is it in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Not while the gentleman from Alabama is upon the floor. Is there objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama?

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. COBB. Then I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. STANLY. Was my motion to recommit the bill for the benefit of the indigent insane entertained?

The SPEAKER. That motion has been entertained.

The question was then taken on Mr. COBB's motion, and (two thirds voting in the affirmative) it was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the resolution, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the title of the bill as follows, viz: "An act for the relief of John F. Callan, administrator of Daniel Renner, deceased."

Mr. STUART. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the benefit of the indigent insane was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. I do not wish to press the motion now, but I ask that it may be entered.

The motion was accordingly entered.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Claims unanimously directed the bill now before us to be reported to the House. The committee adopted the report of the Senate committee that investigated this subject.

Mr. HAMILTON. Let us hear the bill read.

The Clerk read the bill through. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay some $6,000 for the destruction of a rope-walk by the enemy in 1814.

Mr. COBB. I have no desire to consume the time of the House about this matter. There is one amendment, however, which must be made in the bill, and that is, to change the name of the administrator. John F. Callan has resigned the administration, and the widow herself has been appointed administratrix. I desire that that amendment shall be made.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to inquire if there is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COBB. There is a report from the Senate committee, and if the gentleman wishes it, it can be read for the information of the House.

Mr. KING, of New York. I desire to hear the report read. This is one of those old war claims.

Mr. CARTTER. I desire to ask a single question. I want to know whether a bill was not once reported in this case and lost?

Mr. COBB. This bill has always been reported on favorably.

Mr. CARTTER. Has this claim ever been provided for by bill?

Mr. COBB. A part of it has.

Mr. CARTTER. How old are the "orphans?" I see that the injury for which indemnity is claimed was sustained in 1814.

Mr. COBB. They are old enough to be sufferers.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. And this is to pay the claim a second time?

Mr. COBB. It never has been paid yet.

The report accompanying the bill was then read.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "John F. Callan, administrator," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Mary B. Renner, administratrix."

Mr. CARTTER. I move to lay the bill and amendment upon the table.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw that motion for a moment, in order that I may say a few words of explanation.

Mr. CARTTER. These claimants have received nearly $20,000 already.

Mr. BROWN. I will explain all that if the gentleman will allow me. I will not consume more than four or five minutes.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask for tellers on my motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and HENDRICKS were appointed.

Mr. BROWN. I again appeal to the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his motion, and let me say a word of explanation. I promise to renew his motion.

Mr. CARTTER. No, sir; I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. BROWN. Then I hope the bill will not be disposed of in this summary way without one word of explanation.

The question was then taken on Mr. CARTTER's motion, and the tellers reported—yeas 62, nays 59. So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON obtained the floor.

Mr. FICKLIN. I appeal to the honorable member from Alabama to allow me to report a bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question. The bill, I understand, was laid upon the table. I voted in the affirmative, with a view of moving to reconsider, but if the House chooses, I will not press that motion now.

Mr. CARTTER. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 152 was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have the floor. I suppose he cannot, therefore, have the motion to reconsider now.

Mr. COBB. I shall not insist upon its consideration at this time. My object is, that the House shall examine into the matter, and at the proper time, I will call up the motion.

Mr. SWEETSER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. COBB. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] had a right to move to reconsider, and there being no other business under consideration, he has a right to the floor, if he chooses to insist upon action on his motion to reconsider.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the Chair this question of order: Whether the motion to reconsider the vote laying the bill upon the table is debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES. Then how is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] entitled to the floor?

Mr. HOUSTON. The Chair recognized me.

The SPEAKER. He is entitled to the floor to insist upon the consideration of his motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. My colleague took the floor from me, to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. He has done it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view of taking up the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I make that motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama, to allow me to move to take up a bill now upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] had been assigned the floor by the Speaker, to move to reconsider the vote by which his bill was laid upon the table. I submit that he is the gentleman now entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] did rise to a privileged question and was recognized by the Chair. He had the right to submit the motion and have it entered upon the Journal, but not to debate it, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] misunderstands the facts. I rose and was recognized by the Chair before my colleague [Mr. COBB] rose. I submit, therefore, that my motion is the only one now in order.

Mr. KING, of New York. I would suggest that the privileged motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] be disposed of now. It will take but a minute, and that will save all difficulty as to which motion is first in order.

The SPEAKER. They are both privileged questions, and the House can determine them both in a minute. The question will be first taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to make a motion to take up Senate resolution No. 26. It is a joint resolution authorizing the completion of a war steamer for harbor defense.

Mr. VENABLE. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are but twelve days of the session remaining, all told, to consider the business now before the House. I am not willing to give way for that bill at all. I hope the House will go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and take up the Navy bill, so that we may progress with the public business as fast as possible.

The question was put, and decided in the negative by the sound.

Mr. HOUSTON. As gentlemen near me desire to dispose of the question of reconsideration, which now stands in the way of my motion, I am willing they should first dispose of that motion. I withdraw my motion.

The question now being upon Mr. COBB's motion to reconsider the motion by which the bill for the relief of the administrator of Daniel Renner was ordered to lie upon the table—

Mr. SWEETSER moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table—

Mr. COBB demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

The question was then put, and the motion to reconsider was ordered to lie upon the table.

MR. LE ROY.

Mr. HOWARD. There is a bill now lying upon the Speaker's table for the relief of Mr. Le Roy, who lost an arm in a very gallant action in the late Mexican war. I do not propose to make any statement to the House in relation to it; but if the House will hear the report read, which is not more than twenty lines, I think they will consent to take the bill up. John Le Roy is here, and must go into the work-house unless the bill is passed.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to suspend the rules.
Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read through. It provides for an invalid pension of $20 per month.

Mr. HOWARD. I now ask that the report may be read. There are not more than twenty lines of it.

Mr. CARTER. There is objection made to its consideration. I do not see any good in having the report read.

Mr. HOWARD. But I move to suspend the rules.

The report was then read.

The question now being upon suspending the rules, it was put, and, upon a division, rose in the affirmative.

Mr. HOWARD demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STRATTON and CLINGMAN were appointed.

Mr. OUTLAW. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. POLK demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STRATTON and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. AVERETT. I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. OUTLAW] to withdraw his motion to adjourn, and allow us to settle this question now before the House.

Mr. STUART. I move that there be a call of the House, and upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill, entitled "A bill to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make records of patents for Virginia military lands, in certain cases."

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions and memorials were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. SWEETSER: The memorial of Levi Johnson, of Cleveland, Ohio.

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of George Phillips and 25 other citizens of Mississippi, praying the removal of the land office from Augusta, to Paulding, Mississippi.

Also, the petition of W. B. Terrell and 54 other citizens of Jasper county, for the same.

Also, the petition of Henry M. Round and 18 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of J. E. Watts and 78 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of T. E. Lightsey and 31 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of James Holden and 41 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of William Kellen and 84 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of J. W. Smith and 14 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of J. J. Husbands and 61 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of F. M. Beard and 4 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of W. B. Dozier and 52 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of J. C. Hirdleberg and 9 others, for the same.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 17, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasury Department, in answer to a resolution of the Senate respecting the practicability and expense of a survey of certain islands in the vicinity of Santa Barbara channel, on the coast of California; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. PEARCE presented the petition of Philip C. Friese, praying an appropriation to test his invention of a safety-jacket for steam-boilers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PRATT. I have been requested to present to the Senate a memorial signed by a committee of working men employed by the Government in the District of Columbia, in which they represent that they have labored under great disadvantages from the very low rate of wages they are now receiving from the United States. They suggest that the arguments which have been adduced in favor of an increase in the compensation of certain grades of clerks employed in the various Departments of the Government, will apply with greater force to their situation. They represent the high price of marketing in the District of Columbia as rendering an increase of wages essential to their comfort. They represent that owing to the loss of time on account of rain, &c., a great many of them are unable to average over $1 25 per day, whilst the majority seldom, if ever, average seventy-five cents per day. They ask that this application may be referred to the Committee on Finance, so that a suitable increase of wages may be put in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I ask that reference be made to the memorial.

It was so referred.

Mr. WALKER presented the petition of James Blackhurst and others, praying that the "homestead bill" may become a law; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a petition of mechanics and laborers employed in the United States Arsenal, in the city of Washington, praying an increase of their pay; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of William Thwaites and others, praying that the "homestead bill" may become a law; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred a report of the Secretary of War in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for a list of the Creek Indian warriors who were killed, wounded, or died in the service of the United States during the late war in Florida, with a statement of the arrears of pay due them, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported the same back without amendment:

An act for the relief of Jacob Shade, jr.;

An act for the relief of Cornelius Hughes, of Tennessee; and

An act for the relief of John Kerbaugh.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives to increase the pension of Henry Click, of Cocke county, Tennessee, reported the same back with a verbal amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of James Wright, jr., asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to:

The petition of Anna Norton and Lois Faskit, heirs of Zephaniah Ross, praying to be allowed a pension for the services of their father during the war of the Revolution;

The petition of Anna Murphy, praying to be allowed a pension for the services of her late husband during the revolutionary war;

The petition of Richard Eaton, praying a pension in consideration of injuries received in the military service during the Florida war; and

The petition of Roda W. Inge, praying the continuation of the pension allowed her for the services of her late husband, Lieutenant Z. M. P. Inge.

Mr. BORLAND said, that with regard to the petition of Roda W. Inge, he wished to say that it was provided for in a general bill which the committee had reported.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Thomas B. Parsons, for arrears of pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of McKean Buchanan, a pursuer in the Navy, praying reparation for loss sustained by him in consequence of an order of his commanding officer, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Harlow Spaulding, asking compensation for services as acting naval storekeeper at Spezzia, from 1847 to 1851, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following memorials, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to:

The memorial of L. L. Chapman, praying an appropriation to aid him in the investigation of his discovery of physical laws;

The memorial of John West and others, praying compensation for the time lost, and sufferings endured in their imprisonment during the war of 1812;

The memorial of Evelina Porter, widow of Commodore David Porter, praying Congress to grant such reasonable sum as may prove their proper appreciation of the services, sufferings, and sacrifices of her late husband;

The memorial of Gottlieb A. Krieger, praying to be allowed the difference between the pay of a marine and that of surgeon's steward, during the time he acted in the latter capacity;

The memorial of the working men at the Washington Navy-Yard, praying that a pension may be allowed for long and faithful services; and also for disability incurred in the performance of their duty; and

The memorial of the present and late watchmen of the Navy Department, praying extra compensation.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of David Butler, praying to be allowed compensation for duties performed and expenses incurred while in charge of Mount Vernon Arsenal, Alabama, from June, 1840, to December, 1841, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS also submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells, passed midshipmen in the Navy, praying to be allowed additional compensation during the time they performed the duties of a higher grade, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEARCE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred sundry memorials of the creditors of the late Republic of Texas, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to provide for the payment of such of the creditors of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTER said that he dissented from the views of the majority of the committee, but had no time to write a minority report.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Cornelius Covert, of Michigan, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. BADGER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Foxhall A. Parker, praying to be allowed compensation for the expenses incurred while in command of the East India squadron, reported a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1853, and for other purposes, reported it back with sundry amendments; which were ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a communication from the heads of Departments in relation to a classification of the clerks, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, of the Interior, and the Postmaster General be directed to report to the Senate, at the commencement of its next session, the number and classes of clerks which will be required in each bureau or division of his Department, upon the supposition that they are to be organized as follows: that is to say, into four classes, viz: No. 1, into which no new appointment is to be made of any person over eighteen years of age, and with a salary of $800 per annum. No. 2, with a salary each of $1,200. No. 3, with a salary each of $1,500, and No. 4, with a salary each of $2,000. The new appointments in each Department in classes 2, 3, and 4, to be made from the class immediately below it in that Department, and the members of class No. 1 to receive five per cent. additional salaries, to commence at the end of each year of additional service; and the other classes to receive three per cent. of like additional salaries for a similar additional service; but none to receive, by virtue of these allowances, a salary higher than the grade above him; and no additional salary to be given to any member of class No. 4 after his salary reaches $2,400. But the clerks in each Department to be subject to removal by its head.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill for the settlement of a certain class of private land claims within the limits of the D'Auvertive claim, and for allowing preemption to certain purchasers and actual settlers in the event of a final adjudication of the title of the said D'Auvertive in favor of the United States, and for other purposes, reported back the same without amendment.

On motion by Mr. DOWNS, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the above-named bill; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. P. FILLMORE, his Secretary; which was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have received a resolution of your honorable body of the 6th instant, appearing to have been adopted in open legislative session, requesting me to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, whether any propositions have been made by the King of the Sandwich Islands to transfer the sovereignty of these Islands to the United States; and to communicate to the Senate all the official information on that subject in my possession. In reply to which I have to state, that on or about the 12th day of June last I received a similar resolution from the Senate, adopted in Executive or secret session, to which I returned an answer, stating that in my opinion a communication of the information requested at that juncture would not comport with the public interest. Nothing has since transpired to change my views on that subject, and I therefore feel constrained again to decline giving the information asked.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, August 14, 1852.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, that message is in reply to a resolution which I introduced to the Senate, and I am desirous that it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. At the same time I desire to offer the following resolution, which I should like to have the same reference:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to send a Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, who shall be instructed to inquire into the expediency of instituting negotiations for the acquisition of those Islands by the United States.

I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator can offer his resolution when resolutions are called for. The question is now upon the reference of the message.

Mr. WELLER. I do not know, Mr. President, but that I may desire to discuss the question of the reference of this message to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The original resolution to which the President of the United States makes reference in his message, was offered in Executive session, and was introduced by me. I had given notice of my intention to offer that resolution in open session, in consequence of some proceedings which had taken place in Executive session, to which I am not at liberty now to refer. I confess I was a little surprised, after this notice thus given by me, that the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] should, on the next day, have taken and offered it in his own name in the precise words in which I introduced it; but of this I have no complaint to make, although I want the fact known. My only object is to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate, and to the attention of the country. I hope, therefore, that the motion to refer this message will go over a few days, as I desire to say something upon it.

Mr. SEWARD. I have no objection to the postponement of the reference.

The PRESIDENT. The message will, in that case, lie on the table.

Mr. BADGER. I hope that course will be adopted, for I have something to say upon that subject myself.

The motion to refer the message to the Committee on Foreign Relations was not agreed to, and it was accordingly laid on the table.

Mr. SEWARD subsequently submitted his resolution.

Mr. FELCH. It will lie over.

The resolution was laid over accordingly.

BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him on the 27th of July, and it was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate (if not incompatible with the public interest) copies of all the correspondence which has taken place, and documents that may have been collected, since the message of the President of the 15th of December, 1845, (printed with the Senate documents, 1st session Twenty-ninth Congress, in volume 3, No. 14,) in relation to the claim of the owners of the brig General Armstrong against the Government of Portugal, including all letters and papers in the possession of the Government material to a full understanding of the subject, and not heretofore communicated to the Senate.

COAST SURVEY OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate whether, without interfering with the regular progress of the coast survey, the reconnaissance of the coast of California may be extended south to Cape St. Lucas.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE CENSUS.

Mr. BORLAND. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to communicate a statement of the account of the expenses of the visit to Europe of the Superintendent Clerk of the Census, to be made out from the vouchers in the case, in lieu of the verbatim copies of the vouchers which were called for in a former resolution of the Senate.

I ask for the consideration of the resolution at this time. I will state to the Senate that it is a mere explanation of a former resolution. A resolution formerly adopted by the Senate required verbatim copies of these vouchers. I am informed by a letter from the Department that it is very difficult, if not impracticable, just now to comply with that request, as many of the vouchers are in foreign languages, and there is no clerk in the Department competent to make out a proper copy of them. It is, therefore, necessary to authorize the Department to substitute a statement of the accounts.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF CLERKS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I offer the following resolution, which I ask may now be considered:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of State, Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, be directed to communicate to the Senate the names and compensation per annum of each of the clerks employed in each of the several offices and bureaus under their direction, including any additional compensation allowed to either for any purpose; and also, the names and compensation of each person employed as an extra clerk, or employed in copying or other business, for each of the said offices and bureaus.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Indiana to include in his resolution a provision requiring a statement of the service performed by each clerk. That is necessary for the purpose of showing the services performed by the different grades of clerks. By which, I apprehend, it will be found that those who do the most service receive the least pay.

Mr. BRIGHT. The resolution comes from the Committee on Finance, who recommend its adoption for the reason that we are receiving various applications to raise the salaries of these officers; and in order to act understandingly upon that subject, it is necessary to obtain this information. I shall not object to an amendment such as that suggested by the honorable Senator from Maine; though I cannot accept it because the resolution is offered at the instance of the committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I move to amend the resolution by inserting, "together with a description of the services performed by such clerks respectively."

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Mr. WELLER. I ask the Senate now to take up the resolution which I submitted some time ago to appoint a committee to investigate the charges preferred by Colonel McClellan against the Boundary Commissioner. I will state that it is very important that the resolution should be adopted immediately, because some of the witnesses who are now in the city are about to leave for New Mexico. I intended myself to make some reply to the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] but I waive all right to do so, in order that the committee may be organized at once.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the charges preferred by Colonel J. McClellan, of the Topographical Corps, and others, against J. R. Bartlett, appointed Commissioner to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, be referred to a select committee of five for investigation, with power, if necessary, to send for persons and papers.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. WELLER, and by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Subsequently, on motion by Mr. BADGER, that the vote on agreeing to the resolution last mentioned be reconsidered, it was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills:

An act making a grant of public lands to the several States and Territories of the Union, for the benefit of insane persons; and

An act to regulate and fix the annual salary of the American consul at the city of Amsterdam.

SAULT STE. MARIE CANAL.

On motion by Mr. FELCH, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of St. Mary's, in that State.

A long debate ensued, in which Messrs. SMITH, BORLAND, FELCH, WALKER, BADGER, DOUGLAS, JONES of Tennessee, and others participated. [See Appendix for this debate.]

The question was taken on Mr. ATCHISON's amendment to increase the grant to 700,000 acres; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE moved to amend by inserting the homestead bill; but, after debate, withdrew it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved to amend by adding Bennett's land distribution bill; which, after debate, was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Butler, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Downs, Fish, Foot, Morton, Pratt, Seward, Underwood, and Upham—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Borland, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Norris, Sebastian, Shields, Smith, Soule, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, and Walker—28.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and on the question of concurring in the amendment of Mr. ATCHISON, it was concurred in—yeas 28, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Borland, Bright, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Morton, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, and Walker—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Meriwether, Pratt, Spruance, and Upham—21.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. There are a few bills from the House of Representatives on the table, which, if such is the pleasure of the Senate, will be taken up in order that they may be referred.

Mr. CASS. Will the Senator indulge me in one word? I wish to say that the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE,] whose remarks were commented upon by the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] the other day, is desirous of answering some portion of the remarks of the latter Senator. He thinks it is necessary in his behalf that he should answer some of the remarks of the Senator from New York. I therefore give notice to the Senate, that on the day after to-morrow, soon after the Senate meets, I shall move that the Senator from Louisiana be heard upon the subject of the fisheries.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I rise to move that the Senate take up the bill "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1853, and for other purposes," in order that we may adjourn on it to-day, so as to have it the special order for to-morrow. I make that motion.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust the Senate will not agree to the motion which has been made by my worthy and distinguished friend from Virginia. I want to make an issue with him now between the civil and diplomatic bill and the river and harbor bill; and I want a test of strength on the subject this evening by a fair vote. If the Senate decide to take up now, in view of the adjournment, and to give preference to the civil and diplomatic bill, thus putting the river and harbor bill behind it, it will, in my opinion, jeopard the fate of the latter bill. The civil and diplomatic bill will certainly go through; there is no mistake about it; but there is some little doubt about the river and harbor bill, judging from some indications here on that subject. If there is a majority in this body in favor of the river and harbor bill, I trust they will vote down the motion which has been made by the Senator from Virginia, and take up the river and harbor bill, and adjourn upon it, so as to have it the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I believe I had obtained the floor, and addressed the Chair; and I think I was recognized as entitled to the floor; but the Chair suggested to me that there were one or two bills on the table from the House which might be referred, and I yielded. Instead of proceeding with those bills, however, the floor was yielded to others. When I obtained the floor, I obtained it for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill, upon which motion I intended to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Virginia to take up the civil and diplomatic bill, is the question pending.

Mr. HUNTER. There are other appropriation bills to be acted upon, besides the civil and diplomatic bill. There is the Army bill, the Navy bill, and the Post Office bill; and I think it would promote the dispatch of business, if we were to take up the civil and diplomatic bill first. If the Senate determine to act upon the river and harbor bill, it can be done after the civil and diplomatic bill is disposed of, because there will be a certain portion of time consumed between the two Houses, in relation to amendments to the latter bill. If all of these subjects are to be acted upon, I believe we should get through more certainly and rapidly by taking them up in that order. I am against the river and harbor bill. I shall vote against it; but it is not my purpose to defeat it by indirection. All I ask is, that the appropriation bills shall have a fair chance. It seems to me, that if we put off the civil and diplomatic bill, there will not be time to consider it. It embraces a great many subjects. It appropriates a large sum of money, and there are a great many amendments to be offered to it. I think, that in order to do justice to the business of the country, that bill should be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, we have been admonished that the river and harbor bill is to be contested at all points, and to be delayed as long as the constitutional rules of this body will enable members to do it. I think that that enunciation was made when the bill was first taken up for the purpose of reference. If that course is to be pursued, I suppose the friends of the bill would think it worth while to take it up at an early day. I gave notice that I should move to take it up yesterday; but the Senator from Michigan had precedence with his bill, and it has occupied us for the last two days, not very profitably I must say; but I hope the friends of the river and harbor bill, if they mean that it shall pass, will feel disposed to take it up at the earliest moment, and consider it, say to-morrow. That seems to be the feeling of gentlemen: I have no disposition to interfere at all with the dispatch of business. On the contrary, I wish to promote it; but there is a strong feeling, and a strong wish, by a great number of members, to take up this bill and dispose of it. Whether it will occupy much time, or little time, will depend on the opposition which it receives. I hope it will be taken up to-morrow morning, and proceeded with until it is finished. I make this suggestion at the request of many gentlemen who feel an interest, a greater interest than I do personally, in this bill; and I wish now that the Senate may take the subject into consideration, whether it is not expedient for them to take it up as the next measure upon which we shall act.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to postpone the previous orders, in order to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I hope that motion will be agreed to. If there is to be a contest at this session, as there was at the last session, between the appropriation bills and the river and harbor bill, I think the sooner we know it, the better. If the appropriation bills are to give place to the river and harbor bill, as at the last session, and the river and harbor bill is to be forced through or we are to run the risk of losing the appropriation bills, the sooner we know it, and are prepared for it, the better.

I am entirely opposed to this illegitimate mode of legislation. I presume that never in the history of this Government, till the last session of Congress, was there such a state of things as existed in regard to the river and harbor bill. The appropriation bills were put behind that bill for the purpose of forcing it through the Senate. We all know the consequence. Within four or five hours of the close of the session we passed appropriation bills to the amount of $40,000,000; and some of them without even being read; and some were in such a mutilated state as to be totally inefficient. Some of the most important measures for the State which I have the honor in part to represent, were rendered entirely nugatory by the manner in which the bills were passed. I hope, therefore, that the forcing that bill before the appropriation bill will not, at this period of the session, be attempted. I believe there is time enough to consider it. I believe there is force enough in the Senate to pass a river and harbor bill; and, perhaps, to displace the civil and diplomatic bill in the manner proposed.

So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of pressing the appropriation bills through rapidly. I am willing to commence early and sit late, but it seems to me to be due to the interests of the country that we should not put the appropriation bills aside and take up the river and harbor bill, as at the last session.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the Senator from California is rather reversing the thing. I think the proposition is not to put aside the civil and diplomatic bill for the purpose of taking up something out of its order, but it seems to me that the proposition of the Senator from Virginia is to reverse the order of things. It is to take up the civil and diplomatic bill in an order which it is not entitled to. The river and harbor bill has been here for some time, long before the civil and diplomatic bill. Now, if the Senator is so anxious that the order of business shall be preserved, I think he ought to go against the proposition of the Senator from Virginia to take up the civil and diplomatic bill out of its order. But to express my view, and to take the sense of the Senate upon it, I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Virginia by substituting the river and harbor bill for the civil and diplomatic bill. That will bring up the question, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Virginia is with regard to the order of business, and it is not subject to amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to take up the civil and diplomatic bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. Then let this be a test question. Those who are in favor of taking up the river and harbor bill will vote against the proposition of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BORLAND. That is my object.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should be glad to concur with my honorable friends, the Senators from Virginia and California—being with them on the Committee on Finance—but I cannot conscientiously vote for giving the civil and diplomatic bill precedence over the river and harbor bill, believing that if it be done we shall not be able to pass the river and harbor bill at this session; and I arrive at that conclusion somewhat from reference to the past history of legislation. I have seen efforts made here, directly and indirectly, to defeat bills having for their object appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors. I think that my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] is wise in pressing his proposition to have the river and harbor bill taken up to-day, and I hope that this vote will be regarded as a test question, believing as I do, that if we get the river and harbor bill before the Senate, we can pass it; and believing also, that if it be put behind the appropriation bills, we shall not be able to pass it at this session.

Mr. BUTLER. The civil and diplomatic bill is absolutely necessary to carry on the Government, and it is said that it is perfectly safe—that it will pass any way; in other words, that we shall be compelled to pass a bill, which is the only kind of bill by which we can control the operations of this Government at last, without discussion, because it is indispensable to carry on the operations of the Government. Now, with regard to the river and harbor bill, who will pretend to say that that bill is indispensable? Cannot the river and harbor bill wait for two months?

Mr. BORLAND. It has already waited four years.

Mr. BUTLER. The river and harbor bill is not indispensable; and I would say to my friend from Arkansas, that the river and harbor bill is not much over four years old. Such a proposition, if brought forward twenty years ago, would have been regarded as a new doctrine in this Government. One of these bills is indispensable, the other is not; and I wish to make that remark, and gentlemen can vote for taking up either of them, as they please.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, we have but eleven days of the session now to work in, and with all the discretion and power we possess, can we do more than properly complete the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill in that time? Can we give it that investigation to which it is entitled in less time? If we take up the river and harbor bill, shall we have an opportunity of investigating that, and its various provisions? If it is to be forced upon the Senate without investigation, I shall only have to record my vote against it. There are provisions in it which I presume I should be very glad to support; but there are others for which I cannot vote. If we are to run the risk of postponing the civil and diplomatic bill for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill, which has not been investigated and looked into by the members of this House—no discussion having taken place in the Senate upon it—and it is to be forced down our throats, the sooner we submit to dictation the better. I will yield, if the majority of the Senate decide against me. All that I can do is, to record my vote against the passage of any important measure, involving not merely millions, but principle, which is above millions, unless I am allowed to investigate it. I never can vote for the bill until it is investigated by the Senate, and until I have heard reasons adduced in favor of its adoption.

Mr. MALLORY. In consequence of the remarks of the honorable Senator from Indiana, I deem it necessary to say a word in relation to this matter, to explain the vote I shall give. I have not examined the river and harbor bill, and the vote which I shall now cast will be no indication of how I shall vote upon that bill when it comes properly before us. Other Senators seem to regard this as a test question as to that bill, but I cannot so regard it. There are certain improvements of that character for which I shall be very happy to vote on a proper occasion, but I do not consider this as a test vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. I did not mean by what I said to be understood as declaring in favor of the river and harbor bill, as it came from the House, just as it reads, without alteration and amendment. I know it needs amendment, and I shall vote for amendments to it. I mean to improve it as far as possible; and if it be so far improved as to bring it within the landmarks that guide me upon such subjects, I shall vote for it. Otherwise I shall not.

Mr. BADGER. There is no disposition to force the river and harbor bill upon the Senate any more than to force any other bill. It properly has priority over the civil and diplomatic bill from the time which it has been before us, and from its position; and the question for consideration is, whether we shall put that bill aside, and take up the civil and diplomatic bill?

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator will allow me to correct him in a matter of fact. I understand the civil and diplomatic bill has priority over the harbor and river bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that some forty or fifty bills are on the Calendar which have priority over the river and harbor bill. It stands the very last bill but one on the Calendar; but the civil and diplomatic bill having just been reported, and having been sent to the printer, has not yet been put on the Calendar.

Mr. BADGER. Then the river and harbor bill has priority over the civil and diplomatic bill. Now, it is proposed by those in favor of it to take it up for consideration. Gentlemen say they cannot vote for that bill without examination and discussion. There is ample time, without consuming a week, for any full and fair discussion on that measure. I admit that if gentlemen who are, or who suppose themselves to be, in a minority here on that bill—for I do not know how the majority may be—resolve to occupy the time of the Senate by reading old reports and old speeches, which nobody listens to, and which have in fact a very faint, if any, connection with the subject before the Senate, and which are not read for the purpose of enlightening Senators; if they are to continue discussion against time, and to compel the supposed majority of the Senate to yield to this prolix discussion and give up the measure, why, then, a month, three months, six months may be consumed just as well as two days. But as to any discussion necessary to understand the merits of the measure, unless gentlemen are resolved that Senators shall not vote upon it, I see no difficulty in our having sufficient time.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I take it for granted that nothing that may be said here now with regard to taking up the civil and diplomatic bill is to affect the vote of any Senator upon the bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors. But whatever is said here now goes out to the country; and what I am to say I want to go to the country, or to that part of the country from which I come. I think it will be of service there at some future day, when the practical working of this Government is brought before them in this shape amongst others.

Here is the civil and diplomatic bill, which is to provide for the general expenditures of this Government for the current year. It is a bill upon which necessarily new points of policy are instituted by the Government. It is a bill to carry on the Government; upon which, according to the usage of all popular Governments, the measures and the policy of the Administration are necessarily involved and discussed. It is a bill the debates upon which enlighten and inform the public mind. We have but eleven days of the session remaining in which to act upon that bill, together with the Army and the Navy appropriation bills. Yet now Senators say that a bill which is purely local in its character—a bill which is for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the different States and Territories—is to take precedence of this great bill—the great bill of the session. And that is to be done, as I understand, because, if we do not pass the river and harbor bill now, time will be necessarily consumed upon the appropriation bills, which will preclude the passage of it at all. Then, as I understand the purpose, it is this: We are to forego and give up every opportunity of debating before the country the points involved in the expenditures of the public money to carry on the administration of the Government, in order that we may insure the expenditure of money for these local improvements.

Gentlemen, I suppose, have made up their minds in regard to this matter. There are those—and I apprehend they are a majority of the Senate—who are prepared to vote for a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors. I do not question their opinions, or their judgments, or their right to form them; but I differ with them toto cælo, both as to the constitutionality and the policy of such a measure. But they have a right to their own opinions. Yet I submit to them, whether, at this stage of the session, when, treat the bill in relation to rivers and harbors as we will, there must necessarily be a long debate upon it—as well upon the particular measures of improvement projected, as upon the general policy—they will place the business of the country in such a condition as to drive us to the necessity of passing the appropriation bills, as at the last session, not only without consideration, but even without reading them.

I say to gentlemen, in all candor and frankness, that if the river and harbor bill does take the precedence which they propose to give it, it will place us in that condition as to the civil and diplomatic bill, and the other bills, which are properly called the appropriation bills. I mean to make no factious opposition to the river and harbor bill. I am against it, as will be shown at the proper time; but I submit to the Senate whether they will place us in the position of having the appropriations for the general administration of the Government—for the support of the Army and the Navy—passed without debate, without deliberation, and without reading; as I apprehend will be the condition in which we shall be placed if we give precedence to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia seems to think that the friends of the river and harbor bill, by giving precedence to that, desire to place those who wish to give precedence to the appropriation bills, at a disadvantage. He speaks of their being forced to consider this bill at the close of the session, when there is no time for consideration. I apprehend that the Senator does not wish to be understood, and that no Senator would wish to be understood, as saying that the merits of this bill are considered and decided by the discussions in the Senate. Does not every Senator take the bill and read it for himself, and determine in his own mind whether he will vote for or against certain appropriations, and what amendments and modifications he intends to propose, or is willing to accept? Do Senators sit here to make up their minds by the discussion on bills before the Senate? I apprehend not. I do not think I have ever seen a bill here decided upon, in consequence of, or as the result of, discussions before this body.

Mr. BUTLER. Why, then, discuss measures?

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose Senators discuss bills to place their views before their constituents. But the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] fails to notice this difference between the two bills: One, as he knows, will pass, and must pass of necessity; and he knows, at the same time, that if we give precedence now to the civil and diplomatic bill, it certainly insures the defeat of the river and harbor bill. We have already received notifications from some of the Senators who are opposed to the river and harbor bill that they intend to resort to every parliamentary means in their power to defeat it—alluding to the very steps that were taken at the last session, when it was defeated by parliamentary means, and not by arguments or by votes; for it was never permitted to come to a vote.

Sir, it is useless to undertake to disguise from ourselves or to throw any mystery or veil over this whole proceeding. The question before us now is neither more nor less than the question of the fate of the river and harbor bill. That is the practical question before the Senate; and Senators might as well confess it, and act upon it. That is the issue. If the river and harbor bill has not friends enough in the Senate to sustain it, it will go down. Let us take the vote and decide it now. It is useless to be occupying the attention of the Senate, and consuming time here, when we might bestow it upon practical measures; and might in five minutes practically say whether we will or will not consider the river and harbor bill at this session.

Mr. GWIN. I wish it to be borne in mind that there is not only the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, but there are other equally important bills to be acted upon, and that the river and harbor bill can be acted upon after we get through with some of them. If there should be a majority of the Senate in favor of bringing up the river and harbor bill, it can be done. After the civil and diplomatic bill is disposed of there are the appropriation bills for the Army and the Navy, and the Post Office, which are just as indispensable to carry on the Government as the civil and diplomatic bill. All I ask is, that we may dispose of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. Then if the majority of the Senate so determine, they can take up the river and harbor bill. I shall not vote for the river and harbor bill as it now is, and I shall avail myself of the liberty of discussing it whenever it comes up, regardless of consequences. I may be induced to vote for the bill if it shall be brought into what I conceive to be a proper shape. But after the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill shall be acted upon, we shall have time to take up this bill before the Army and Navy bills. It is not defeating the river and harbor bill to put it behind the civil and diplomatic bill, for there are other equally important measures that it should not precede. All I am contending for now is, that we should dispose of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. CASS. I do not suppose there is a Senator on this floor who has not made up his mind. It is a subject upon which I do not want any argument to convince me.

Mr. BUTLER. It is said that every one has made up his mind upon this bill, and that there is no use of discussing it. I presume that it is a bill depending on a combination of different interests, and upon that I have made up my mind. As the Senator from Arkansas has said that remarks in the Senate are not intended for the Senate, but for the public, if we are to have discussion, the question resolves itself into this: which of these two bills shall be postponed for the consideration of the other?

The honorable Senator from North Carolina says that he does not want to have discussion. He says that every man of common sense ought to understand the subject without discussion.

Mr. BADGER. I said no such thing.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the honorable Senator to say that there was no use of making old speeches that no one listened to. I wish to discuss the subject, and if nobody in the Senate will hear me, I must discuss it—which I have never done before—for Buncombe. I am not to be suppressed by the impatient motions of gentlemen on the subject.

Mr. CASS. I have not the least idea of restraining the gentleman, but I would say to him that this is not a question on the river and harbor bill. It is a question of what bill we shall take up. If it is taken up, it will be in order to discuss it to the day of judgment. The proper time to discuss it will be when it is taken up. I do not know exactly whether the honorable gentleman referred to me when he spoke of combinations either for or against the bill. I know of no combination; but as I said before, it is a very simple and plain question, and I suppose every Senator has made up his mind.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from South Carolina puts into my mouth words which I have not used—words, the sense of which I have not used, and the substance and meaning of which I have not used. He says that I said that I did not want any argument about the river and harbor bill. I have said no such thing. I have said there is ample time for a full and fair discussion of everything involved in that bill, in my opinion. But I have said that there is not time enough at this session, and there will not be time enough next session, if gentlemen think proper to occupy the time of the Senate—not with a discussion of the river and harbor bill, but with reading old speeches or reports, or President's messages, or anything of that kind. I have not said that I want no argument about the bill; quite the contrary, I have no objection to the discussion of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will qualify my remark. I understand the Senator to mean that he does not want such arguments as other gentlemen might think proper to indulge in. He only wants such arguments as seem sensible in his own estimation. He means that if others confine themselves to such sensible arguments as he suggests, then he is willing that they should go on; but if they go back to old subjects, old reports, and old speeches, there will not be time to hear them—they must confine their discussion to such sensible things as would meet the gentleman's approbation.

tion. That is the Senator's position, I understand.

Mr. PRATT. I do not think that the remarks of my honorable friend from South Carolina are exactly in place. I do not know that he meant them in the sense which they imply. He says there are combinations in reference to this bill, but that he is certain the majority are sufficient to cram it down the throats of the minority. I know nothing of the provisions of the bill. I have not read one word of it. I do not know a single appropriation it contains. With regard to the constitutional power, I believe we have the power to make these improvements. But, sir, if the majority of this body believe the bill to be right, if they believe they have the constitutional power to pass it, it cannot be said to be discourteous or unparliamentary that their will should be carried out. I do not, therefore, think it is exactly proper to say that it is wrong on the part of this majority to carry out the measure which they desire to carry out. It is very clear that this bill is to be discussed. Whether I am to vote for it I do not know, because I do not know its provisions. But it is to be discussed; it is supposed to be a very important measure. I believe the Government have the power to make the appropriations, if they think proper. I shall, therefore, vote for taking it up, that it may have that discussion, and be passed, if that majority exists which my friend from South Carolina supposes to exist.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to explain, for I do not wish to leave an impression on the minds of gentlemen unfavorable to the true position I take. I say, the river and harbor bill is one essentially depending upon a combination of interests in different parts of the United States; and if they do combine, they can carry it. I do not say that they may not do it from a sense of public policy. I am very far from saying there is any impure combination; but a bill of this kind, depending on "you vote for this, and I will vote for that," as it must necessarily be, is stronger by combining many interests together than by acting on them separately. I do not mean anything else.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have the question. I think it desirable that we should decide this evening what we will take up to-morrow, that every one may come prepared.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on taking up, not the river and harbor bill, but the civil and diplomatic bill, and on the postponement of all previous orders with the view to take it up, and it is that to which Senators should turn their attention.

Mr. DOWNS. I merely rise to remark that I shall vote in favor of taking up the civil and diplomatic bill; but I do not wish by that to indicate whether I shall vote for or against the river and harbor bill. I have not examined it. I do not know what it is. I made a very decided opposition to the river and harbor bill which was under consideration at the last session of Congress, but I understand this is a very different bill. I have not examined it; but I can see no necessity of putting aside the appropriation bills to take it up now. We are not in the same situation as at the end of a short session, having a long recess before us. By the joint rules of the two Houses, any bill that remains unpassed at this session, will come up again, within one week of the commencement of the next session, in the same situation in which it was left, as if no adjournment had taken place. Therefore, this bill can come up at the next session without any necessity for its going back to the House.

I have a great aversion, as the Senator from Virginia so well expressed it, that we should be forced to a hasty consideration of this bill. It should have a fair and full consideration. If we had time to take it up and act upon it at this session, I would do it most cheerfully. But I have not examined the bill, and I think we ought to give ample time to consider the appropriation bills.

The question being taken, by yeas and nays, on the motion to take up the civil and diplomatic bill, resulted—yeas 19, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Brooke, Butler, Chastain, Dawson, De Saussure, Downs, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Norris, Soule, and Tougey—19.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Borland, Bright, Cass, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Hale, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Wade, and Walker—28.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone all previous orders for the purpose of taking up the bill of the House of Representatives "making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," so that it may be the order of the day for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 17, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 297, declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCORKLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 8. It is a bill providing for a Board of Claims, to be composed of Army officers, to investigate claims growing out of the conquest of California. I ask that it may be taken up and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that they may report the next session.

Mr. LETCHER. Will that come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I object.

On motion by Mr. HAMILTON, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the papers in the case of Eliza King from the files of the House, for the purpose of having them referred to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will inquire if this comes out of the morning hour? I have no objection to this business being done, but I insist that it shall come out of the morning hour.

Mr. McCORKLE. I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] withdraws his objection to taking up the bill I indicated a minute ago.

Mr. LETCHER. I will not object to it, if it is not to interfere with the morning hour.

Mr. JONES. I do object, if it is not to come out of the morning hour. I insist that the morning hour shall go on.

The SPEAKER. Then the business in order, is the consideration of the Wheeling Bridge case, upon which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] is entitled to the floor.

BOARD OF CLAIMS.

Mr. McCORKLE. I again appeal to the House to allow the bill, to which I have alluded, to be taken up from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection, and Senate bill No. 8, to create a Board of Commissioners for the examination and payment of claims against the United States, growing out of the conquest of California, was taken up from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCORKLE. I ask that the bill also be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman that it will be better to wait till the committee report the bill, as they may change it entirely.

Mr. McCORKLE. Very well. I will withdraw the motion to print.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McCORKLE. I now ask that Senate bill No. 7 may be taken up and referred.

There was no objection, and Senate bill No. 7, providing for the survey of public lands in California, granting donation privileges therein, and for other purposes, was, by unanimous consent, taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE WHEELING BRIDGE.

The House then resumed the consideration of House bill No. 197, declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure.

Mr. DISNEY concluded his argument in favor of the power of Congress to declare the bridge a lawful structure, and a post road. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CURTIS next obtained the floor, and addressed the House in support of the decision of the Supreme Court, declaring the bridge a nuisance. He was arrested by

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIS] will yield the floor, I desire to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means the Indian appropriation bill, with certain amendments, for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask permission of the House to report from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill which I have been a long time endeavoring to get reported—the fortification bill.

Mr. STUART. I object. I wish to call up a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is on the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STUART. I contend that the gentleman has not the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] has the floor, addressing the Chair.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] made a proposition, when I rose and objected to it, and announced that I wished to call up a privileged question.

Mr. HOUSTON. That may be, but I moved that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the business first in order the report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STUART. I wish the question of order determined first.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] allow the bill for the relief of the indigent insane to be disposed of? It is upon its third reading. I hope that the question will be taken upon that bill. It will take but very little time.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the report of the Committee on Printing does not lose its precedence, I shall take pleasure in allowing it to lie over until that bill is disposed of. If it interferes at all with the report, I shall insist upon the report being taken up now.

The SPEAKER. It is in order for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] to submit the motion which he has done.

Mr. STUART. I desire the Chair to determine the question of order. I wish to learn whether the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] or myself is entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. STUART. These are the facts: The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] made a report, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. He then asked—

Mr. LETCHER. Is there any appeal taken from the decision of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. There is no appeal.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I call the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] to order.

The SPEAKER. It is a question for the House to determine. The Chair assigned the floor to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] to make the motion he did. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] questions the propriety of the Chair in thus recognizing the gentleman from Alabama, and it will be a question for the House to determine.

Mr. STUART. I suppose that I can explain the question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan said he wished to make a motion or call up a privileged question.

Mr. STUART. I was about to state the point I intended to make. The gentleman from Alabama moved to refer a bill which he had reported from the Committee of Ways and Means to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The reference was made. He then asked leave to report another bill. I rose, and objected to that report, and immediately said that I wished to call up a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] having been recognized by the Chair, stated that he wished to submit a privileged motion also, which he did.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Stuart] will consume more time in his point of order—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama had a right to submit his privileged motion. It is true that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Stuart,] as he states, and correctly states, objected to the proposition of that gentleman; and he stated that it was his purpose to call up a privileged question. The gentleman from Alabama, without, however, yielding the floor, very promptly, and following the remarks or the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan, proposed to submit a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which is also a privileged question. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston.]

Mr. HOUSTON. As there are many gentlemen around me who object to my withdrawing the motion I made, I refuse to do so.

Mr. STANLY. There was another question which the Chair recognized as having priority—the printing matter.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but it is not called up, or insisted upon.

Mr. STANLY. This printing question has priority over the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that the first business in order before the House, in the opinion of the Chair, is the report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Very well.

Mr. STANLY. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Stanton] to give way, and let us proceed with the consideration of the bill for the benefit of the indigent insane, now pending before the House on its third reading.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Stanton] as yielding to the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Stanly.] In the mean time, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] submitted a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. He could not have done that. I claimed the floor, and made the suggestion I did.

The SPEAKER. What disposition is proposed to be made with the printing report?

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I stated that I was willing to yield the floor, at the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Stanly,] upon condition that the printing matter should come up after the disposition of the bill in reference to the insane.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Let us go on with the regular order of business.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair decide that he overrules the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does so decide.

Mr. STANLY. Am I entitled to the floor upon the printing question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Stanly.]

Mr. STANLY. With the consent of the House, I move to postpone this printing question until we shall have disposed of the bill for the relief of the indigent insane, ordered to its third reading upon yesterday.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move to postpone it to a day certain.

Mr. STANLY. I move to postpone it, then, until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded of the fact that there is a motion now pending to postpone this matter until the 24th of this month, submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. STANLY. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to add, "and that it may be made the order of the day."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be made a special order, if objected to.

Mr. STANLY. It is a privileged question now.

The question was then taken upon the motion to postpone the bill until to-morrow, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANLY. I call up the bill for the relief of the indigent insane, which is engrossed, and I ask the previous question upon its third reading.

Mr. STUART. The question will be upon the motion to reconsider first.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon reconsidering the vote by which House bill No. 76, for the relief of the indigent insane, was ordered to be engrossed upon yesterday.

Mr. STUART. I will withdraw that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Can this question come up properly to-day? Being brought before the House on a motion to suspend the rules, can it come up before next Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is not necessarily confined to Monday.

Mr. JONES. I wish to submit this question of order: This bill was brought up on yesterday before the House upon a suspension of the rules, and could only have got before the House in that way on Monday. When a vote was had upon the engrossment, a motion was made to reconsider that vote, and by that means it is brought before the House again this morning. The motion to reconsider is now withdrawn, and the question I submit is, does not this bill go over until Monday next, as legitimately belonging to the business of Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the practice has been established, such as he suggests, by some of the preceding officers of this body. With others, the practice has been different. The present occupant of the chair thinks that the motion to suspend the rules, was simply to submit a motion to consider the bill. The rules were suspended, and the bill was introduced. The Chair cannot see the reason of confining this matter to Monday, simply because that was the day upon which the rules were set aside. The question is on recommitting the bill.

Mr. STANLY. I withdraw that motion.

The bill was then read a third time; and the question recurred upon its passage.

Mr. STANLY. I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 98, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, William Appleton, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhausa, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Cobb, Conger, Cullom, Curtis, Dimmick, Doty, Duncan, Edgerton, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodnow, Goodrich, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Horsford, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, James Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Mace, Mann, Martin, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Olds, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Polk, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Riddle, Schoonmaker, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Tuck, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, and Yates—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bacoek, Breckinridge, Buell, Bushy, Joseph Cable, Chastain, Clark, Colcock, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Durkee, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Mason, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Sutherland, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—54.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. STANLY. There are some slight verbal amendments, which I desire to have made in this bill. The word "Territories" has been omitted in several places, and at the request of the Delegate from Minnesota, I ask that it may be inserted.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. It is too late to amend the bill.

Mr. POLK. Do the proposed amendments alter the character of the bill at all?

Mr. STANLY. Not in the least. They are mere verbal corrections.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my objection.

The amendments were then ordered to be made. Mr. STANLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

SALARY OF CONSUL AT AMSTERDAM.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will allow me, before his motion is put, to call up a privileged motion now, as I expect to leave the city this evening. A bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce some time ago, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and a motion was made by me to reconsider the vote by which it was so referred. The bill is an important one, and as I find that the House will probably not reach it in committee, I desire to call up my motion to reconsider the reference, so that a vote may be taken on the passage of the measure. The bill proposes to provide a fixed salary for the American consul at the city of Amsterdam. We have to pay our consuls at all the important interior European cities. Our consuls at London and Paris receive $2,000 per annum, besides the fees and perquisites of their offices. Heretofore, our consul at Amsterdam has received nothing but the fees of the office, which are wholly inadequate for the proper support of a commercial agent there. Amsterdam is becoming a city of very great importance to us. This arises from the course of emigration from that country to this, and also from the fact that this city is the central point of an immense continental trade between this country and the central States of Europe. This trade at an early day, I have no doubt, will be greatly increased and enlarged by a direct communication. I do not intend to delay the House by going into the subject. I have a letter from the representative of that country at this Government, but I will not detain the House by reading it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama withdraw the motion?

Mr. HOUSTON. As the gentleman is going to leave the city this evening, I will withdraw the motion, provided that bill will not lead to a discussion.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall not go into an argument about it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to know why this bill is to be brought up now?

Mr. STEPHENS. Because I am going to leave the city.

Mr. FOWLER. Ought not we who are going to stay, to have the liberty to bring up our bills also? I want to bring up bills because I am going to stay. Is not that as good a reason as the gentleman's?

Mr. STEPHENS. I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which bill No. 143, "to regulate and fix the annual salary of the American consul at the city of Amsterdam," was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill was read. It provides that the salary of the American consul at Amsterdam shall not exceed $2,500 per annum, including the fees and perquisites of his office.

The question was put, and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to commit the bill, and being put, it was negatived.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GAYLORD. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of the heirs of Lieutenant Frederick Von Wiesenfels, that they may be returned to the petitioners.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STREPHENS's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FICKLIN in the chair.)

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to take up House bill No. 240, "making appropriation for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1853."

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, addressed the House an hour upon the necessity of reorganizing and improving the Navy, and in favor of building a war steamer with a screw propeller, and of white oak instead of live oak, by way of experiment, with the view to an improvement in the structure of American vessels of war. [Mr. S.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, coming from a State which has a large commerce, and an exposed coast—a State which has suffered from maritime invasion, and presents now more tempting inducements to the invader—I feel a deep interest in the appropriations for the Navy. This interest led me to examine the annual report of the Secretary, the estimates of the Department for the current year, and to compare them with the amounts proposed to be appropriated by the Committee of Ways and Means in the present bill for this great arm of national defense. I remarked, as the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. STANTON] has observed, that the Committee of Ways and Means have reduced the estimates in the increase, repairs, &c., of the Navy, $300,000, and was curious to know the cause of this reduction.

The aggregate amount of the estimates for the Navy proper is $5,518,000. The estimates for other objects under the control of the Navy Department, including the carrying of the mail by steamers, construction of dry-docks in California, the improvement and repairs of navy-yards, hospitals, magazines, &c., $2,684,000. When we compare these appropriations with those for the British Navy, we find a most alarming disparity on our side, considering the relations of this Government towards that, and the relative strength of other naval Powers in Europe. From a newspaper account of the statistics of the Navy of Great Britain, which has lately fallen under my notice, I find the estimated expense for the current year stated at £5,622,488 sterling, nearly equal to $25,000,000. This disparity is not only in the annual expense, more than the same ratio of disproportion exists in the number and character of their ships of war, and the force of their armaments.

A writer in the National Intelligencer, alluding to a recent debate in Congress, says:

"We all know the gallant Commodore in the Senate to be a brave man, but he seems to take for granted that our navy can 'whip' all the navies of the world in case we become involved in war. Now, I think that the present state of our service, particularly as regards the insubordination, if not mutiny, which I am sorry to say exists, we could hardly begin to try to fight them, much less to whip them. I wonder, too, if the Commodore is posted up as to the strength of other nations on the ocean? or does he speak from guess? or does he think the San Jacinto more than a match for La Hogue, or Ajax, fifty-six guns each, and all of the heaviest calibre? The English have ten or twelve just such vessels, and are now preparing for sea the Nonpareil, 81; Agamemnon, of 90 guns and 3,100 tons; the Royal Albert, 120; thirty-four sixty-eight pounders on her lower deck; the James Watt, 90; and Windsor Castle, of 120 guns. These terrible steamers are, in addition to some one hundred and twenty others, more than one half which are quite equal, if not greatly superior to the San Jacinto."

I am not a nautical man. I profess to have no information with regard to naval affairs. But I desire to ask of some gentleman in this House, who is familiar with these matters, whether it can be true, that there are steamers of this immense armament?—whether it can be true that the British Government are building steamers carrying ninety, and one hundred and twenty guns, as represented by the correspondent of the National Intelligencer? If it be true, how much greater the necessity for placing ourselves in a proper posture of defense! I understand from the learned chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that our largest steamers carry only ten guns, and it appears from the above extract, that Great Britain and France are building steamers carrying 100 and 120 guns.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I presume that the steamers to which the gentleman alludes, are those which they are building with the auxiliary steam power. The British Government have adopted the plan, in some instances, of putting auxiliary steam power into their old frigates; and perhaps, into their line-of-battle ships, which carry nearly the same amount of guns as formerly, and yet have this auxiliary steam power below the water line.

Mr. BOWIE. Then I understand, from the explanation made by the chairman of the Naval Committee, that although they may not be regular steamers, having all the velocity and power of that class of vessels, yet they approximate to them in a great measure; they have acquired an increased velocity and power, and will be, comparatively, as dangerous and irresistible. Now, let every man who has the protection and defense of his country at heart—let every one who is not totally indifferent to our competition for equality on the seas, not to say superiority—let every man who is not reckless of the consequences which may ensue, if, unfortunately, war should grow up with Great Britain or any other European nation, consider these facts.

Our ships will sail wherever duty shall require them. They will meet the enemy, however numerous their fleets, or superior their armaments. In a contest against such odds, valor, skill, and discipline will strive in vain; the stars and stripes must sink at last, with the brave hearts which defended them; death and defeat will be theirs; the shame will be on our heads; their blood on our hands.

We are delegated by our constituents, to provide in peace for war, and to take proper steps for the protection of our Atlantic and Pacific frontier; and if, with information like this before us, we can hesitate to vote the supplies which the Executive asks at our hands, we must have some other reason than any which occurs to me, to justify it. No man, who is not wholly indifferent to the consequences which must result from this unequal warfare, can hesitate to vote the necessary supplies. The inequality upon our part, consists not only in the armament of the vessels, but it is equally great and startling in the number of them. The Secretary of the Navy shows us that we have only forty-six vessels in commission, including sloops, and brigs, and steamers—only ten of those being steamers. We have forty-six more in ordinary, and being repaired. Can the Committee of Ways and Means, after regarding the relative strength of the powers of Europe and ourselves, withhold the supplies necessary to keep up the Navy, even in its ordinary condition? This is no party question. It is no party policy emanating from the Whig or Democratic party. It is but a continuation of the policy, sanctioned by all Administrations, and particularly by the late Democratic Administration.

Mr. Chairman, you know that in 1847, the then President of the United States, who was justly high in the regard of his party, recommended an appropriation for the gradual increase of the Navy; and in consequence of that appropriation, four steamers have been, or are now being built. That appropriation has now been exhausted, but surely we will not neglect so good and so patriotic an example? Surely, a Democratic majority in this House, having it in their power, will not repudiate what one of their sages has so lately advised them to do, under circumstances not at all more emergent than the present. The Secretary of the Navy, in his late annual report, states he does not mean to recommend the placing ourselves upon an equality with foreign Powers, but that due caution and ordinary circumspection suggest that we should continue the gradual increase of our Navy. Sir, if he had not suggested it at all, our own observation of the growth of our commerce, the extent of our coast, the increase of our power, the exposure of the new States upon the Pacific, would have suggested the necessity of this increase. If we have a Pacific coast and Pacific States to protect, we must have a Navy riding in those seas. If the State of California, and the cities of that State, should acquire the population and wealth which their friends anticipate, they will be the "optima spolia" of naval warfare; and the power that possesses superiority upon that ocean, will be enabled to grasp them when it pleases.

Mr. Chairman, we should not forget the great debt and obligation which the country is under to the Navy. I am sorry to see the apologetic tone adopted by the Departments in speaking of the estimates for appropriations. It is an arm of the service of which we should be proud—one whose achievements we should glory in and endeavor to reward. From the time of the Tripolitan and Algerine war, to the late war with Mexico, the Navy has rendered us most distinguished services. No branch of the service has been more conspicuous, more devoted, more self-sacrificing. The only mode of placing them in the position they are entitled to occupy, is to give them rank and emolument equivalent to their perils and privations. I do not now suggest an increase of pay, but I say cherish the corps which has already been prolific of such glorious acquisitions, and is so essential to our safety. Much as I respect the Army, highly as I prize their achievements, I believe we would never have been the victors of Vera Cruz or the conquerors of California, if it had not been for the prowess and gallantry of the Navy. That branch of the service has never had a traitor in it from the time of its organization. It has never had an officer who resigned in the face of a war or a difficulty. It has not only always met the foe and conquered them when equal or inferior, but it has often conquered its superiors—both in single ships and fleets.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, we are indebted to the Navy almost exclusively for the monopoly which we now enjoy of the whale fisheries. Anterior to the war of 1812 the British had almost a monopoly of that branch of the fisheries. Our Navy swept the British whalers from the ocean; and, notwithstanding British bounties and the attempts of the British Government to foster that branch of their commerce, from that time to this Americans have reaped all its benefits. We have now not less than nine millions invested in that branch of commerce, and the annual profits derived from it, I am credibly informed, amount to nine millions more. Certainly a commerce so rich and valuable as that must be protected; and as we expand our commerce we must increase our Navy. Will any gentleman be so economical as to insist that we should deny appropriations based upon estimates coming from the Department, and which appropriations, according to the statement of the chairman of the Naval Committee, (whose duty it is to know what is necessary,) will only be sufficient to enable the Government to build one vessel? That gentleman has already pointed out the mortifying spectacle which was presented to the country of having but one ship to send in an hour of great emergency to assert our rights on the coast of Newfoundland. What American in an English or European port would not feel ashamed of the admission that the United States of North America, claiming to be equal with "the mistress of the seas," had but one armed ship to protect their rights. And, sir, if a war—a contingency I cannot contemplate without horror—should result from any unhappy collision on that coast, who can not foresee the devastation and wreck and prostration of our commerce and of our commercial emporiums in consequence of our fatal and lethargic security? I wish some gentleman, possessing the power of rousing this House to a sense of what is due to the dignity of the nation and to our own defense, would become the advocates of the Navy—some gentlemen belonging to that powerful party who now hold the legislation of this House within their hands. Let them do it. They cannot wreath a chaplet of more glorious luster around their brows. We owe it to the country; we owe it to ourselves; we owe it to our posterity; we owe it to those who have gone before us not to suffer the laurels which have been gathered in so many conflicts to wither under presumptive self-esteem and invincibility, or the blight of penurious legislation.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER obtained the floor, and addressed the House an hour in defining the position of the Whig party of New York on the compromise questions, maintaining that that party there, although greatly opposed to the passage of the fugitive slave law, was disposed to acquiesce in the compromise measures, irrespective of any platform. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN obtained the floor, and yielded it to

Mr. POLK. As the gentleman has been giving the history of the Whig party in New York, I would ask him whether or not, in supporting General Scott, that party adopts the platform of the Whig Baltimore Convention?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER. It has adopted the nominees of the National Convention.

Mr. POLK. Does the Whig party of New York adopt the platform as certified from the Baltimore Convention?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER. I can answer for myself, and those with whom I act, that, of course, by supporting the nominees, we support the platform.

Mr. POLK. I then understand that the Whig party of New York supports General Scott upon the platform?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER. I answer for myself and those with whom I act.

Mr. POLK. Who does the gentleman act with? As the gentleman from Massachusetts has allowed me the privilege, I will go into the question in another way. Does Mr. SEWARD support General Scott upon that platform?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER. Will the gentleman answer me a question? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I insist now upon my right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor, and refuses to yield further.

Mr. MANN took the floor, and addressed the committee upon the subject of the institution of slavery, the moral and physical condition of the African race, both in the United States and in their native country, and the position of parties on the slave question. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SKELTON here obtained the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON,] I will move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. SKELTON. I cannot yield to that motion. The remarks which I propose to make in reference to an amendment which I shall offer to this bill, are very brief; but I will yield to a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I make that motion.

The question was then put, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I have obtained the floor at this time for the purpose of notifying the House that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment, which I will send to the table to be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to have completed, without unnecessary delay, the war steamer contracted for with Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed April 14, 1848.

Mr. S. said: In the year 1842, Congress passed an act authorizing Robert L. Stevens, of New Jersey, to construct a steam-vessel for the purpose of coast-defense, which was to be ball and bough proof. From some cause unknown to me, sir, after that contract had been entered into by the Secretary of the Navy, and the work somewhat advanced, the enterprise was abandoned.

The object, sir, in proposing this amendment, is, that this enterprise may be recommenced and carried into effect. Sir, this question of the construction of war-steamers for coast defense is rather a new proposition. Its expediency has never been tested. It was for the purpose of testing that expediency that the Congress of the United States authorized the construction of this vessel. The object of constructing the vessel was not for the purpose of navigating the ocean, not for the purpose of being engaged in wars of conquest, but for the purpose of protecting our country from invasion by a foreign foe.

I believe this enterprise is worthy of the sanction and support of this House. As has already been said this afternoon, the United States has not in existence a navy that can compete with the navies of Europe. Several of the commercial nations of Europe have larger war navies than we have. Indeed, sir, any attempt to establish a naval force equal to that of Great Britain, it is very evident, would not meet the approbation of this Congress. Notwithstanding, sir, we are unwilling to engage in this expensive enterprise for the purpose of protecting our country, and although we do not expect to compete with Great Britain upon the ocean, it is very evident that we must have some means by which to defend ourselves from the invasion of a foreign foe; and the question presents itself, how shall this object be accomplished? Shall we defend our sea-coast by permanent fortifications, or shall we construct forts and fortifications upon the water? Now, sir, this proposition meets my views in this particular, that it is not only perfectly available as a means of defense to the country, but it is much cheaper than local and stationary fortifications upon our shores.

Mr. ROBBINS. With the consent of the gentleman from New Jersey, I will move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. SKELTON. It was at the desire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I yielded for the submission of the motion for a recess.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will merely state that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, of which I am a member, have considered this subject. It is a matter of very great moment, so far as the defense of the country is concerned, and the gentleman ought to have an opportunity to address a considerably greater number of members than are now present. I do not think there is anything which can claim the attention of the committee of more importance than the subject being discussed by the gentleman.

Mr. POLK. With the gentleman's permission, I move that the committee do now rise. He can then submit what he has to say to-morrow.

The question was taken, and the motion to rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 240, making appropriations for the support of the Navy, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON then, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means the fortification bill; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the usual resolution to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the naval appropriation bill half an hour after its consideration shall be resumed. I am willing it shall lay over till to-morrow.

Mr. FOWLER. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. (Mr. JONES in the chair.) That is a question which cannot be objected to. Under the rules, it is the right of any person to present a resolution at any time to terminate debate. The action of the House upon it when introduced is another question.

Mr. POLK moved that the House adjourn; which was agreed to.

And the House adjourned till eleven o'clock to-morrow.

MEMORIALS.

The following memorials were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: Two memorials of citizens of Philadelphia, asking the passage of the bill introduced by Mr. SPRAY, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money directed to be made with the said States, by act of June 23d, 1836.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee: A memorial of sundry citizens of Washington county, Tennessee, praying Congress to pass a bill introduced by Hon. E. STANLY, of North Carolina, which is entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the public money directed to be made with said States by the act approved June 23d, 1836."

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 18, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. DAVIS. I have been requested to present a petition signed by several persons in the city of Boston. They state that they are the inventors of a machine for knitting; that they made application at the Patent Office for a patent, and it was granted by the Commissioner of Patents. From that grant an appeal was taken to the Chief Justice of this District. That appeal they say has been suspended because of the inability of the Chief Justice to try it. His infirmities are such that he cannot attend to the case. It has long been suspended in this way; and they pray Congress to make some provision to relieve them from that condition, by authorizing some other person to hear the case. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I am also requested to present the petition of Samuel S. Lewis, of Boston, who represents himself to be the agent of the Cunard line of steamers. He represents in this petition that when the line commenced operations, running between Boston and Liverpool, there was an understanding with the collector of the customs that the duties upon coal which was consumed on the outward voyage should come upon the basis of drawback for exports, upon the condition that a bond should be entered into for the payment of those duties in case the coal was not exported in that manner and used. He gave those bonds, coming under personal liability, and on the production of the certificates from time to time that the coal had been exported and used in that manner, the bonds were canceled. Of late, from some cause or other, which does not very distinctly appear, upon the production of the certificates, the Department declined to cancel the bonds. These bonds are outstanding, and are claimed against him. What he desires is, that if the law is inadequate; power should be given to cancel these bonds as heretofore, upon the production of the certificates that the coal has been exported and consumed upon the voyage. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. GEYER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following memorials, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to:

Memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin relative to the jurisdiction of the United States district court for that State;

Memorials of citizens of Lee county, Iowa, and of Isaac Galland, praying the appointment of a commissioner to examine and settle all claims to land in the Sac and Fox half-breed reservation; and a Memorial of James M. Crane, praying additional compensation for publishing the Laws of Congress of 1849-'50, in the California Courier.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill supplemental to an act entitled "An act extending the jurisdiction of the district courts to certain cases, upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting the same," approved February 26, 1845, reported it back with a recommendation that it do not pass, the committee thinking that legislation on the subject is unnecessary.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following memorials, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to:

Memorial of F. A. Chenoweth and others, praying the title to certain land settled and improved by them in the Territory of Oregon; and a Memorial of Robert Johnson, praying that patents may issue in his name on certain bounty land warrants held by him and issued in the names of discharged soldiers whose certificates he had purchased.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, to amend an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the settlers of the said public land," approved September 27, 1850, reported it back with an amendment.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of Robert Mills, proposing a plan for a railroad and telegraphic communication to the Pacific ocean, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, memorials, and joint resolution, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Bill to amend the act approved March 2, 1831, entitled "An act to provide for the punishment of offenses committed in cutting, destroying, or removing live-oak and other timber or trees reserved for naval purposes."

Bill to grant the hot springs in Arkansas to that State, and to secure the interests of bona fide settlers within the limits of the hot-spring reservation;

Memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, praying a modification of the act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the "swamp lands" within their limits; and Joint resolution giving the assent of Congress to an act of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi appropriating a portion of the swamp and overflowed lands granted to said State by the act approved September 28, 1820.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill to extend the warehousing system by the establishment of private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes, reported back the same without amendment.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate requesting that committee to inquire into the expediency of establishing an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota, to report a bill to create an additional land office in that Territory. I hope the Senate will take up and pass the bill at this time. There is but one land office in Minnesota, which is a very large Territory. This bill will give to that Territory but two land offices. The people there are subject to very great inconvenience in entering their lands, and I hope the Senate will pass the bill now.

The bill was read a first and second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the creation of a new land district, to be called the "Sac. River District"—the land office to be located at such point within the district as the President may direct, and to be removed from time to time, as may, in his opinion, be expedient; it also authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the necessary officers.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

DAVID MURPHY.

Mr. CHASE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up a bill upon which action was prevented last Friday by a single objection. It is a bill from the House for the relief of David Murphy. I will simply state that it proposes to give a pension of \$5 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  a month to a soldier who was wounded in the last war with Great Britain. It has twice passed the House, and failed on the last private bill day by the interposition of a single objection. It has three times been reported favorably upon by the House. It has undergone a scrutiny by a committee of the Senate, and been favorably reported upon by them. I trust the Senate will take it up and pass it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CANAL IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of California the right of way and a donation of public lands for the purpose of constructing a canal across the Sierra Nevada valley; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LAND DISTRIBUTION BILL.

Mr. FISH. I desire to give notice, that, on the day after to-morrow, during the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill from the House of Representatives, commonly known as "Bennett's land distribution bill." For my own part, I desire to state that I have no disposition to discuss it, and I believe that disposition is common with all the friends of the bill. I think it will lead to no debate, so far as its friends are concerned. I give this notice, in order that Senators may be aware of what is to come up on that day. Many were not satisfied with the vote that was given yesterday, when that bill was offered as an amendment to the Sault Ste. Marie canal bill. Many of the friends of the distribution bill were then compelled to give a vote which might seem to place them in opposition to the principles of the bill which they support. Therefore, as I understand that the morning hour to-morrow is to be occupied on another question, I shall, on the day after to-morrow, during the morning hour, ask the Senate to take up the bill to which I refer.

THE LOBOS ISLANDS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reannexing the Lobos Islands.

COMPENSATION OF A PAGE.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay to F. B. Gilbert, a page in the Senate, the same compensation as was allowed the other pages for the second session of the Thirtieth Congress.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time and passed:

Bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land, for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of St. Mary's, in said State; and a Bill for the settlement of a certain class of private land claims within the limits of the D'Auvere claim, and for allowing preemption to certain purchasers and actual settlers, in the event of the final adjudication of the title of said D'Auvere in favor of the United States, and for other purposes.

CAYUSE WAR.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, there is a bill upon the table from the House of Representatives, providing for the mode in which the expenses of the Cayuse war in Oregon shall be paid. It is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to settle and adjust the expenses of the people of Oregon, in defending themselves from attacks and hostilities of Cayuse Indians, in the years 1847 and 1848," approved February 14, 1851. Congress, at the last session, appropriated the money to pay these expenses; but the Treasury Department find it necessary to have a verbal amendment to that law made, in order to enable them to pay the money. This bill appropriates no money. It is merely to direct the payment of money formerly appropriated. I move that the Senate take up that bill. I have been urged by the Treasury Department, for the last two or three months, to have it passed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of the money appropriated by the act to which this is an amendment, approved February 14, 1851, the amount found due to the persons named in the report of the commissioner to ascertain the necessary expenses incurred by these inhabitants, as that report was communicated to Congress by the Legislature of Oregon, at the second session of the Thirty-first Congress. It also provides, that where a person to whom an amount was found due shall have died, the amount shall be paid to his legal representatives; provided, that if the deceased person shall not have been a permanent resident of Oregon at the time of his death; and shall have left a widow in any one of the States of the Union, the amount due shall be paid to the widow, and if there be no widow surviving, but infant children, the amount shall be paid to the guardian of the infant children; and if no infant children, then to the legal representatives of the decedent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The only change that this bill makes, is this: The act of 1851 required the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain how much was due to each individual. On examination, it has been found that the Territorial Legislature of Oregon did ascertain the amount, and found it to be below the sum appropriated by Congress, and that all the parties, so far as we can learn, are satisfied with that adjudication. It will take a great deal of time to send to Oregon, hunt up the vouchers again; and go through the same distribution of money. Therefore it is thought best, for all the parties, simply to adopt that report of the Legislature of Oregon, without the expense and trouble of having a new statement made out again. The bill does not appropriate a dollar; it simply authorizes a settlement of the accounts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CONSUL AT AMSTERDAM.

The bill from the House of Representatives to regulate and fix the annual salary of the American Consul at the city of Amsterdam, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL.

The bill from the House of Representatives making a grant of public lands to the several States and Territories of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons, was read a first and second time.

Mr. SHIELDS. There was a select committee at the early part of the session to which the subject was referred, and I move the reference of this bill to that committee.

The PRESIDENT. Has that committee reported?

Mr. SHIELDS. The committee have reported on the subject.

The PRESIDENT. The moment a select committee reports on the subject for which it was raised, it is no longer in existence.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I move that the bill be referred to a select committee of five.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this bill should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I do not think there is any necessity for raising a select committee to examine it. It is only in extreme and extraordinary cases that we make use of select committees.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would state to the Senate that I believe the usual course has been to refer this bill to a select committee, and I believe there is a parliamentary reason for it. It is understood that the Committee on Public Lands are opposed to the measure.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not aware that that is the fact.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand that it has always been the practice with this bill, which is commonly known as Miss Dix's bill, to refer it to a select committee; and I move to refer it to a select committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. Senators will prepare their ballots for a select committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would suggest that the Chair appoint the committee.

The PRESIDENT. The rule requires all committees to be balloted for, unless by unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the Chair will appoint the committee.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

And Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. PEARCE, Mr. BEIL, Mr. HAMLIN, and Mr. DAVIS, were appointed the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. In connection with this matter, I wish to submit, informally, a substitute for that bill, which I intend to offer when it comes up for consideration in the Senate. I have prepared my substitute, and I wish it to be printed, so that when the bill comes before the Senate, the substitute will be also before Senators, that they may understand its contents.

The substitute was received, informally, and ordered to be printed.

LANGDON C. EASTON.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the order of the day.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will take the liberty of requesting my honorable friend from Massachusetts to withdraw his call for the present, in order to permit me to take up a bill for the relief of Captain Easton, of the United States Army. It is a bill to which, I presume, there will be no objection. The reason why I wish to have it taken up now is, that the Department is anxious to send this officer to his post in New Mexico. He wishes this bill to be passed, in order that it may go to the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, so that he may have an opportunity of explaining it there before he leaves the City. As his services at his post are very essential, as I am told by the Department, I wish the action of the Senate upon this bill now.

Mr. DAVIS. I will give way to the honorable Senator if his bill does not give rise to debate.

Mr. SHIELDS. If it gives rise to debate I will consent to postpone it.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well; I withdraw my call.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move to take up for consideration the bill for the relief of Captain Langdon C. Easton, Assistant Quartermaster of the United States Army.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the proper accounting officers of the War Department to credit Captain Langdon C. Easton, on the settlement of his accounts, with the sum of $17,651, the amount of which he was defrauded by his late clerk, Gustavus McHarcourt, while stationed at Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Mr. PRATT. I should like to hear the report in this case read.

The report of the Committee on Military Affairs was accordingly read; from which it appears that in April, 1850, Captain Easton was assigned to duty as assistant quartermaster at Santa Fe, New Mexico, having under his direction eleven posts to supply with funds and stores, in addition to which he had charge of the clothing department of the ninth Military Department. The duties of assistant quartermaster were such as to require the services of a clerk. Captain Easton employed as clerk, Gustavus McHarcourt, who had been for several years previously, confidential clerk in the pay department of the Army, and he was recommended by that department as an able and accomplished clerk, and one of trustworthy and irreproachable character. For twelve months before the commencement of his peculations, McHarcourt discharged his clerical duties with honesty and ability, so as to merit the confidence of all who knew him; but during the continuance of Captain Easton in Santa Fe, from July, 1850, to July, 1851, at different intervals, he was defrauded of $17,651 by Gustavus McHarcourt, his chief clerk. The committee, in the report, go into the history of the various abstractions, showing the means whereby McHarcourt made the books appear correctly balanced. The committee conclude with the expression of the opinion, that where a meritorious public officer is defrauded without any fault of his own, by a clerk in whom, from his previous character, there was every reason to repose unlimited confidence, it is a case presenting peculiar claims to favorable consideration.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, I have no doubt in the world of the entire integrity of Captain Easton, the quartermaster, in this case; but this bill certainly involves a principle which I think ought not to be sanctioned by the Senate without discussion. I do not say that I shall be opposed to the bill when I become acquainted with all the facts of the case. But, here is a public officer—a quartermaster; his clerk, his own private agent, defrauds him of certain sums of money, as shown by the report; and the effect of the bill, and the object of it is, that the Government shall reimburse the officer for the frauds committed by his chief clerk.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have promised that if the bill leads to discussion, I shall not insist upon its passage now.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make any motion?

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand that the Senator from Maryland wishes to discuss the subject.

Mr. PRATT. I am perfectly prepared to vote upon the bill now, but, as at present advised, I shall vote against it.

Mr. SHIELDS. If there is no desire to discuss the bill, I hope we shall take a vote.

Mr. HALE. I think the bill ought not to pass without discussion, and I therefore hope it will lie over.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have done my duty in calling the attention of the Senate to the matter; and as it is to give rise to discussion, I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill till Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow, during the morning hour, to take up and consider the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, for I find that the only chance for the appropriation bills will be to take them up in that way.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that I intend, if I can get the floor, to-morrow, during the morning hour, to ask the Senate to take up the homestead bill, and let the civil and diplomatic bill take its course.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. And I give notice that to-morrow morning I shall insist on proceeding with the river and harbor bill.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew the call for the order of the day.

The PRESIDENT. The first bill on the orders is a bill to revive a portion of an act for the relief of widows of deceased soldiers.

Mr. DAVIS. I thought the river and harbor bill was the regular order, being the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT. The unfinished business of the preceding day is the first special order; but according to the rules of the Senate, the special orders do not come up until one o'clock.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the bill which has been announced by the Chair as the regular order will be taken up now. It has been on the Calendar for a very long while, and it is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I supposed that the first hour of the morning was devoted to general business, and that then the special orders of the day come up.

The PRESIDENT. The special orders do not come up till one o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move to postpone the regular orders in order to take up the bill from the House of Representatives "making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," which is the first special order.

Mr. BORLAND. I am as desirous as any one can be that the river and harbor bill shall be taken up and disposed of; but the small bill just now announced by the Chair as the first regular order, I think will not give rise to much discussion. It has been here for a long while, and I would be glad to see it disposed of. It is to do justice to a very meritorious and limited class of widows.

Mr. BELL. Before we take up that bill, permit me to say that there are a great many others who wish to take up particular bills.

The motion of Mr. DAVIS was agreed to, and the Senate accordingly resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives "making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers."

A long debate ensued, in which Messrs. DAWSON, HAMLIN, BORLAND, SOULE, BRIGHT, PRATT, ARCHISON, CHASE, BUTLER, MASON, BELL, HALE, MALLORY, CASE, DAVIS, DAWSON, and others, participated, for which see Appendix.

When, at half-past four, p. m., on motion of Mr. JAMES, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 18, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

THE WHEELING BRIDGE.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 297, "declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes," upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STUART. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 30, confirming to the State of Michigan certain salt-spring lands which have remained suspended in market since 1836, in consequence of an error committed by a clerk of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Its consideration will not occupy five minutes. The bill contains but one section.

Mr. LETCHER. I object, if the time occupied in the consideration of the bill is to be taken out of the morning hour.

Mr. STUART. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like very much to accommodate the gentleman from Michigan, but should I withdraw my objections now, others will ask the same favor. I do not like to make an invidious distinction between the gentleman from Michigan and other gentlemen of the House. If this matter can be disposed of without an interference with the morning hour, I should not object.

Mr. STUART. The bill might have been passed in the time occupied by the gentleman and myself. It has passed the Senate, and been examined and favorably reported upon by the Committee on Public Lands of the House. It simply corrects an error, in consequence of which these saline lands have been suspended in market since 1836.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and further discussion is out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to take up a small matter—a bill for the relief of Margaret Farrar. I have been endeavoring to get the floor for some time past to call it up. I did get the floor a few days ago, but was interfered with in consequence of a personal explanation of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. DURKEE,] and was compelled, under the circumstances of the case, not to press it at that time.

Mr. LETCHER. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CURTIS concluded the argument which he commenced yesterday in opposition to the Wheeling bridges. He apprehended that the proposition involved in this case was simply this: Should Congress sit as a court of errors and appeals over the decision and adjudication of the Supreme Court of the United States, and consider matters which, without a doubt, properly belonged to that tribunal; and review them in a manner entirely unknown to law? He contended that in this case they were not qualified to act as judges; they were not impartial, and could not be in the consideration of this question. He also argued that the bridges should be elevated, so as not to be the least obstruction to navigation, declaring that this was the only issue. [See Appendix.]

Mr. NEWTON contended that the bridges were not a nuisance, and that the Supreme Court had no power over the question. [See Appendix.]

Mr. STUART. I think, sir, this is a very important subject, but there are numerous other important matters that have to be disposed of, or ought to be disposed of, by this Congress, in the morning hour; and with a view to test the sense of the House upon this subject, and believing that we are as well advised upon it as we shall be by any further discussion, I move the previous question.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a moment? I am very anxious to publish my remarks upon this question, and if I can do so, I have no objection to the previous question. [See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. This can be done, as there is no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his demand for the previous question for a moment. I desire five or ten minutes' time to give certain reasons which will influence my vote upon this question.

Mr. STUART. I would do as much as any man upon this floor in the way of courtesy; but it is obvious that we all wish to bring this discussion to a close; at least I desire to test the sense of the House upon this subject.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his call for the previous question, to allow me to present an amendment to the bill?

Mr. STUART. I cannot do so, for many gentlemen have asked me the same thing.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire merely to get in an amendment which I shall have no opportunity of doing if the previous question is seconded.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No 141.

The SPEAKER announced that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] as chairman of the committee who had reported the bill, was entitled to one hour to close the discussion.

Mr. FOWLER. Will my colleague, the chairman of the committee, allow me one third of his time to defend the minority report?

Mr. OLDS. How much of the morning hour is left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-one minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Will you allow me fifteen minutes?

Mr. OLDS. If the House assents to the proposition, I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood the gentleman gave way.

Mr. OLDS. I find there are many gentlemen near me who object to that course.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Ohio is not ready to proceed this morning, and if he will yield the floor, will it be in order now to proceed to other business?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent that can be done.

[Loud cries of "Object!"]

Mr. OLDS. I prefer yielding the balance of the morning hour, and closing discussion to-morrow morning.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me ten minutes of his time?

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Ohio says he is not ready to proceed in the discussion of the matter.

Mr. CARTTER. The minority of the committee have not yet been heard at all.

Mr. FOWLER. I am sure the chairman of the committee will allow me fifteen minutes. The minority have not been heard at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is right. Let him be heard in the balance of the morning hour.

Mr. OLDS. I am not prepared to go on with my remarks this morning. I am desirous to place this case before the House, but still I will proceed this morning, if it is the pleasure of the House, with the few remarks I have to make.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand the chairman to give me a few minutes?

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] as well as my colleague upon the committee, [Mr. FOWLER,] are both anxious to occupy a portion of the time. I will give each of them fifteen minutes, if the House will agree to it.

The SPEAKER. That arrangement can be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, as a last resort, will the chairman allow me to ask the privilege of presenting my remarks?

Mr. OLDS. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I will then present my remarks. [See Appendix.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote upon seconding the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order if the gentleman could obtain the floor for that purpose, but the gentleman from Ohio is now upon the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I am very anxious to occupy ten minutes. I hope the gentleman will allow the previous question to be reconsidered. I will call it when I have done.

Mr. OLDS. I will leave the matter entirely in the hands of the House. I am anxious to close the debate, but the question is not with me at all, it is with the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will yield to my colleague who wishes to address the House for a few moments upon this subject. It will be remembered that there have been but two speeches upon the other side of the question, and I think the House should extend that courtesy to my colleague which has never been denied before. This is a matter of very great importance to the people of Pennsylvania, and I hope the courtesy will be extended to my colleague.

Mr. OLDS. Well, sir, I have offered to divide the loaf with my friends upon the other side of the House. The objection comes not from me, but from other members of the House.

Mr. POLK. I insist that the gentleman from Ohio shall proceed to speak or let some one else do so.

Mr. OLDS commenced his speech in favor of the bill, maintaining that in its passage there was no conflict between Congress and the decision of the Supreme Court, declaring this bridge a nuisance.

Mr. HENN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HENN. Then I move to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will it be in order for me now to call up the resolution which I offered yesterday, to close debate on the naval appropriation bill, and which was pending when the House adjourned?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, it is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I call up that resolution, and modify it so as to close the debate in thirty minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the bill. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that the vote by which the resolution was adopted be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The effect of that motion, if adopted, will be to postpone the consideration of the report of the Committee on Printing, which is the business regularly before the House. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STANTON demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON's motion was then agreed to.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FICKLIN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 240, making appropriations for the Naval service for the year ending the 30th June, 1853; and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SKELTON] is entitled to the floor.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House of the passage, by that body, of the following bills, viz:

House bill No. 257, to amend an act entitled "An act to settle and adjust the expenses of the people of Oregon, in defending themselves from attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians, in the years 1847 and 1848," approved February 14th, 1851;

House bill No. 176, for the relief of David Murphy;

Senate bill No. 508, for the settlement of a certain class of private land claims within the limits of the D'Auvergne claim, and for allowing preemption to certain purchasers and actual settlers, in the event of the final adjudication of the title of the said D'Auvergne in favor of the United States, and for other purposes; and Senate bill No. 28, granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land, for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of St. Mary's, in said State.]

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I request the indulgence of the House for a few moments to allow me to make some remarks upon the amendment placed in the hands of the Clerk last evening. The great importance of this amendment is my only apology for occupying the time of this committee at this late period of the session and under the present pressure of business.

The amendment which I have proposed to offer to this bill is in the precise language of a resolution passed by the Senate a few weeks since, and which is now on the Speaker's table. The resolution received the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Senate, and passed that body without opposition. I understand the Naval Committee of the House agreed upon reporting favorably upon the resolution. Certainly the majority, if not the whole committee, were favorable to the object of this amendment, as I am informed by the chairman of that committee, [Mr. STANTON.]

The amendment proposes the construction of a steamship, which shall be ball and bomb proof, for harbor defense. It is not necessary that I should speak to you, upon this occasion, of the consummate ability of Robert Stevens for the purpose of engaging in such an enterprise as this. This gentleman, sir, is well known to most of the people of the United States. He is, at least, well known to the mechanics and engineers as one of the ablest mechanics and engineers and naval constructors in the country. I say his name is too well known to need any eulogy from me. I presume he has the entire confidence not only of both Houses of Congress, but of the people of this entire country, and that there is no one who disputes his ability to carry out this purpose if he becomes a contractor with the Government. Mr. Stevens is no speculator in Government funds. He is a man who has wealth as well as ability, and his only object in proposing the construction of a vessel of this kind is that he may identify his name with the history of his country and with the improvements and progress of the age in which he lives. This appears to be his only motive. For the good of his country he is willing to sacrifice his ability, his time, and his energy; and to refuse to pass the amendment or resolution before the committee, would be an act of the grossest injustice to one of our ablest, most enterprising, and most liberal citizens.

The method has already been entered into by Mr. Stevens for the construction of this vessel. Much labor, and time, and money has already been expended by him. He has gone to considerable expense to procure materials. He visited Europe for the purpose of obtaining the materials and information necessary to carry out the enterprise. The only thing which has been at all in the way is the fact that there has been some delay. But it will be very apparent to every gentleman, upon a moment's consideration, that delay is necessary, in carrying out an enterprise of this kind, to insure success. These experiments necessarily required time and expense.

The only reason urged against carrying out the contract entered into by this gentleman, by authority of Congress, is, that he did not submit his proposition to the Naval Board of Constructors. Now, sir, it appears from documents before this House, before the Senate, and before the country, that his contract specified and gave the plans upon which the vessel was to be constructed. What the motives of the Secretary of the Navy might have been, in arresting the progress of this work, it is unnecessary here to discuss, nor do I pretend to know. It is enough for us to know that the execution of his contract has been arrested by the action of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MASON. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey to say that Mr. Stevens is a wealthy individual, and only desires to carry out this enterprise in order to connect his name with the history of his country and with the progress of the age. If this is true, I suppose he only requires the sanction of the Government, and not an appropriation of money.

Mr. SKELTON. He only wants the Government to pay the actual cost of construction. He asks no compensation for his own time and labor.

Mr. MASON. I thought he was a wealthy man, and only wanted to be recognized by the Government.

Mr. SKELTON. He is wealthy, but not sufficiently so to construct a large naval vessel at his own expense to be presented to the Government; nor do I suppose a single man upon this floor would ask a man of enterprise, if he gives his time and his great ability to the country without remuneration, to do more. That is, certainly, all that could be asked.

There is no necessity for a doubt of Mr. Stevens's ability to construct a vessel of this kind. Experiments have already been tried sufficient to show the feasibility of his plan. His project is one which can be carried out successfully, though with great labor. The probable cost would not exceed $500,000. A large amount of money has already been expended. This gentleman has not only expended all the money placed in his hands by the Government, but he has expended a large amount of his own private funds in order to obtain the necessary information to enable him to carry out, successfully, his enterprise.

Sir, this proposition is an important one to the interests of our country. We ask not only that it shall be carried out in order to prevent doing the greatest injustice to one of the citizens of this country, but we ask it upon a broader ground. We ask it for the benefit of the country. We ask it that our coast may be placed in a situation of defense that will guaranty our citizens from invasion, and guaranty a vast amount of property in case the country should be invaded by a foreign foe.

The true policy of the country is always to engage on the defensive. We cannot attempt to compete with the navies of England and France upon distant shores. The expense would be too great; nor do the wants of the country demand that we should engage in such an enterprise. But it is due to ourselves and to our own country that we should place our own shores in defensive positions, capable of resisting the most powerful forces that could be sent to invade our borders. This vessel would have many advantages over the permanent fortifications of our country, and at the same time it would have many advantages, in a defensive point of view, over any of the lighter constructions of naval vessels now in existence in our Navy.

It is proposed that this vessel shall be made entirely indestructible, that no gunnery now in the possession of any foreign Power should be able to make any impression upon. She is to be indestructible to ball, shot, and bombs.

A vessel of this kind would be exceedingly valuable in the harbor of New York, where there is a large amount of property exposed, and where the fortifications on the shore would not be sufficient to protect the city. In the city of New York alone, there is property, shipping, and real estate, to the amount of a $1,000,000,000; and I ask you, Mr. Chairman, what there is to prevent a powerful naval force of steamers from approaching the shores, and throwing their bombshells into the city, and destroying the whole town by conflagration? Steamships can approach these shores, and pass, in a few minutes of time, the stationary batteries; but suppose we had a vessel of this kind, it would not only defend the harbor, but it could be brought to defend our shores in any location. It would not only save our cities from destruction, but our shores from invasion. Its power would be sufficient to break up the most powerful fleet which could be thrown upon our coast. Imagine this vessel sailing out of the port of New York, when that port was blockaded by a powerful naval force, lying off the Straits. Every vessel she ran into would be immediately sunk. In addition to her great defensive power, she would have strength sufficient to sink any vessel with which she came in contact. Her power would be sufficient to sink the most powerful navy that could be cast upon our coast. By her powers of locomotion, she could defend the seaboard where wanted, and could defend our harbors where such an immense amount of property is located. I ask gentlemen to consider the large extent of sea-coast, and the number of harbors in which an enemy could land at any time. There is not a single fortification upon our shores that would prevent it, and it is not likely that this Government will ever attempt to protect them by permanent fortifications.

Sir, the true policy of our country is peace; and in order that we may be able to maintain peace and promote the interests of our growing country, it is necessary that we should be fortified in such a way as to destroy the possibility of our shores being invaded. While it is our true policy to remain at peace with all the world, and foster the arts of industry, and extend our commerce, it is in vain to close our eyes to the fact that the monarchs of Europe look upon this country with a jealous eye. Our example of unparalleled prosperity, our example of self-government and independence, has awakened a spirit of liberty throughout the world, and the monarchs of Europe look with a jealous eye upon our prosperity because it sows the seeds of republicanism upon their own shores, and endangers the permanency of their own political institutions; and if the opportunity should ever present itself to overthrow our liberties, the monarchs of Europe would combine against our institutions, and our country; and the only way, sir, that we can maintain peace and our independence, and preserve our living example of prosperity and happiness, is to be placed in a permanently defensive state.

I see in this morning's paper, that France, whether true or not I cannot say, is already inviting a conference of the combined powers of Europe to resist the aggressions of the United States upon Mexico. What, sir, does this mean? Does not it show to us plainly and distinctly that there is a jealousy burning upon the continent of Europe that will, whenever a suitable opportunity presents, attempt to involve us in a war for the purpose of destroying our prosperity?

The improvements in steam navigation during the present age have gone forward with such rapidity, and multiplied to such an extent, that the warfare of the world has almost entirely changed. The implements of war have been made every day more destructive, and the increased rapidity of navigating the ocean by the application of steam, has brought our continent within a very close distance to the shores of Europe; and as these improvements go forward, and our contact is brought closer and closer with the continent of Europe, so, sir, will be the increased facilities to invade our shores in a moment when we are found unprepared and in a defenseless condition.

So early as 1805 you will find, by looking over the messages of President Jefferson, that the mind of that sagacious statesman was directed to the necessity of some auxiliary defensive power, to the permanent fortifications upon our coast; and in reference to this subject it will be remembered that his proposition was to build gun-boats, a proposition which was not carried successfully into practice; but it established this fact, that there appeared at that time, to the mind of that sagacious statesman, to be a necessity for some further defensive power beyond that of permanent batteries upon our sea-board.

Notwithstanding this proposition of gun-boats has failed, the proposition now presented by this gentleman from New Jersey appears to be one calculated to answer the purposes contemplated at that early day. No individual at all acquainted with the naval affairs of the world, or to the means resorted to in hostile combat, can for a moment doubt the absolute necessity of better fortifications for our sea-board.

In addition to this fact, it contains other elements which recommend it to the attention and support of this House. It is not only the most effective method of defending our shores, but is the cheapest method. A floating battery of itself can cost but very little more than a stationary battery upon any particular point, and it has this advantage, that it can be changed from post to post, and can supply the place of a large number of expensive batteries upon land. I say it not only combines cheapness, but it combines cheapness and efficiency together, which is what the people of this country desire in carrying forward her system of defenses.

The great danger to this country is from sudden invasion of our soil. There is no risk of an enemy's ever gaining a permanent footing upon our shore, if time is allowed for defensive measures for expelling them. The rapid increase of railroads throughout our country afford facilities for throwing upon any particular point of the country a strong force for defensive purposes, in a very short space of time. What we want is something that can be brought to act immediately in case of sudden invasion. We want to prevent a sudden incursion upon our soil, to the destruction of vast amounts of property. We have an illustration of the necessity of this in the burning of our Capitol in the war of 1812, when the British forces came suddenly upon the Capitol of our country; and before the freemen of the nation had time to rally for defensive purposes, our public buildings and our public records were consumed. It is to prevent the recurrence of such a catastrophe that this proposition is proposed to be carried out. It is to defend our shores from sudden invasion, and to prevent the destruction of vast amounts of property, as well as of human life.

I will not occupy the attention of the committee at this late period of the session by any lengthy discussion of this subject. I felt that it was due to myself, and to the State I represent, that it was due to the great importance of this proposition that some remarks should be made upon the subject.

I will close by simply remarking, that this presents a proposition which appears to be the peculiar want of the country at the present time. It proposes to change the method of defense upon our sea-coast, in a manner most effectual and the cheapest of any that has ever been presented to the country. And in the well-known character of the individual engaged in this enterprise, we have a guarantee that this contract will not only be carried out faithfully to the letter, but the country will be put into a state of defense by the best means that can be obtained from any source.

With these remarks I close, by merely asking the attention of the House to this subject, and that they will give it that consideration which its importance demands at their hands.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like, if the time would allow me to do so, to reply especially to that part of the remarks of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] delivered yesterday, relating to navy-yards and marine hospitals. I think that the injustice which he did to the Committee of Ways and Means—unintentionally I have no doubt—was in regard to some facts connected with their action in relation to those yards and hospitals. The Committee of Ways and Means, in every solitary case where they made a reduction upon the estimates, reduced the items, and took off a corresponding amount from the aggregate estimate of the Department in regard to the hospitals.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The gentleman will do me the justice to admit that I conceded that fact in reference to the navy-yards; and if I was mistaken in regard to the hospitals, it was an oversight upon my part.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to say that in some instances we reduced the amount, but it was where we thought it could fairly and properly be done. The gentleman speaks of the item of \$1,333,333 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  for increase and repair in the Navy. I addressed a communication to the Secretary of the Navy on that subject, requesting to know whether under it he in truth proposed to increase the Navy. His reply is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION, ETC., March 3, 1852.
Sir: Your letter of the 27th ultimo, requesting information in relation to the estimates from this Bureau for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, has been received. The estimate was directed to be made the same in amount as that prepared and granted for the year 1852. When it was contemplated that to keep the squadron afloat there would be required for repairs, including equipment and stores, an amount of..... $770,000
The contracts for the year for supplies amounted to..... 250,000
For coal..... 220,000
For hemp..... 125,000

$1,365,000
Being $388,000 less than for the year previous. There was no estimate for the increase; and the amount for repairs is variable, depending upon the particular ships it became necessary to repair. "Armament" is not included in the estimate for this Bureau.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. B. SHUBRICK, Chief of Bureau.
Hon. G. S. HOUSTON,
Chairman of Committee of Ways and Means.

He shows that the whole item was intended for other things than the building of vessels.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have been instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move after the following:

"For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations, $90,000—

The addition of the following amendment :

"And the Navy agent at Memphis, for the time during which he has performed or may perform the duties of purser, in addition to his own, shall be allowed and paid the annual salary of a purser on duty at navy-yards of the second class, which shall not be in addition to his commission, but in lieu thereof."

Mr. CHAIRMAN, the reason for offering that amendment, is, that for several years past, for want of pursers in the navy, it has been necessary to impose the duties of that office upon the Navy agent at Memphis, and a regular appropriation has been made for the pay of the purser at that yard. It is well known to the committee that the commission of the Navy agent upon his disbursements is one per cent. The appropriations for the navy-yard at Memphis have been small, and the commissions, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, have amounted to a very small sum. I have a statement from the Department in reference to that fact. The Navy agent at Memphis gives a bond to the amount of $50,000, and he not only performs the duties of Navy agent, but those of a purser. We ask for him not the salaries of both of the offices, but the salary of the best office for discharging the duties of both. I think that is reasonable. I have in my possession a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, distinctly recommending this amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not exactly understand the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee. The amendment proposes, as I understand, to give the Navy agent at Memphis the two salaries.

Mr. STANTON. No, sir, it is to give him one salary for performing the duties of the two offices. That is all. Even of the small amounts appropriated for this yard, large sums within a few years past have been paid out at Boston. I believe not less than $140,000 have been thus expended, taking from the Navy agent commissions which ought to have accrued to him to the amount of $1,400. But at the same time his duties have not been lessened. He has still had all the contracts to make, and all the business to perform, with the single exception of paying out the money. There is not another Navy agent in the United States who does not receive his $2,000, with various other advantages not enjoyed by the officer at Memphis.

Mr. HOUSTON. That amendment is, at least, objectionable in its present form. The pay of purser is $2,000.

Mr. PRICE. The pay of a purser is graduated by the class of vessel on board of which he serves, and the pay of a Navy agent according to the class of navy-yards of which he is agent.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. What is the pay of agent?

Mr. HOUSTON. One per cent. upon his disbursements. I have no showing of the amount he receives. This amendment proposes to make the compensation of the Navy agent equal to that of a purser. By the same process of reasoning, it may be made necessary for us to change the compensation of Navy agents at all our navy-yards.

Mr. STANTON. There is not another Navy agent in the United States that does not get the full amount allowed him by law—$2,000—except the Navy agent at Memphis. He gives a bond of $50,000. I have the statement of the Department in my possession. The amount he receives is now about $1,000 per annum. He is performing the duties of both officers—Navy agent and purser—but we do not ask that he shall have the salaries of both officers, but only the salary of one.

Mr. HOUSTON. This proposition is to give this Navy agent the salary of a purser. Upon what ground is it based? That his receipts under one office, which are always regulated by his duties, do not give him the ultimatum of compensation allowed to Navy agents. I understand Navy agents get one per cent., until their compensation reaches $2,000. They get no more than that upon their disbursements. If the disbursements are small here, as a matter of course, it shows that the office is unimportant, and not very responsible. The compensation of Navy agents, above all other officers of this Government, is regulated by the duties discharged. They are compensated according to the amount of disbursements. Then, I am told, there is the additional duties of purser. Why is it that there is no purser at the navy-yard at Memphis?

Mr. STANTON. Because there are not enough in the Navy.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not enough to put one at that yard? If the law authorized a purser there, I take it for granted that one would be placed there.

Mr. STANTON. The number is limited by law.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then the number is limited by law. The lawful number are in commission, and if none has been placed at Memphis, it shows that that navy-yard is the least important of all. My friend says that it is of importance, and cannot be dispensed with. Then you have the duties of two unimportant offices discharged by one man, and we are asked to give additional compensation to the officer for the performance of a little over his ordinary duty.

Mr. GENTRY. I move to put the Navy agent at Memphis on the same footing as the purser at the Brooklyn navy-yard. I offer the amendment for the purpose of stating the facts of this case, and the merits of the proposition submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The duties of a purser must, to some extent, be performed at the Memphis navy-yard. The duties of a Navy agent must be performed there; and though the disbursements in either of these official characters may not be very large, yet they are sufficiently large to make it indispensable to have some responsible officer of business qualifications there, to attend when such duties have to be performed. The officer must be there, and occasionally his services cannot be dispensed with. Owing to the deficiency in the number of pursers, there is none at the Memphis navy-yard. Consequently the duties of purser have devolved, by order of the Department, upon the Navy agent. The sums disbursed by him are not sufficient in magnitude to make the one per cent. commission constitute even a fair compensation for the performance of the duties of either one of these officials. It is proposed he shall permanently perform the duties of both, and receive the compensation which the purser at the navy-yard at Pensacola receives, which is $2,000 annually. That is the compensation, I believe, contemplated for the pursers at all of our navy-yards. He is to receive the salary of a purser so long as he performs the duties appertaining to the office. If there be an increase in the number of pursers, he falls back upon the character of Navy agent. The amendment of my colleague is reasonable, and I trust the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will not object to it. I withdraw the amendment I have submitted.

The question was put upon the amendment of Mr. STANTON; and, on a division, there were—ayes 37—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HOWARD and TAYLOR were appointed.

The question was again taken, and the amendment was agreed to; the tellers having reported—ayes 77, noes not counted.

Mr. PRICE. I submit the following amendment, to come in at the end of the twenty-fifth line:

And that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to have completed, without unnecessary delay, the war-steamer contracted for with Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed April 14th, 1842.

I offer this amendment with great confidence that it will meet with almost unanimous approval.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I submit to the Chair, whether a proposition in this appropriation bill to build war vessels is in order. The 81st rule will exclude it.

Mr. PRICE. This is already authorized by law; and I believe that there can be no question of order raised on that point.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is a bill reported from the Senate for this same thing, which shows that they do not propose to put it in the appropriation bill; and my recollection is, that we never have in any case, certainly in very few, if any, authorized the building of any vessels by provision in a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. PRICE. This is authorized by a joint resolution of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. That joint resolution has expired, or been rescinded.

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; I beg your pardon. The joint resolution is now in force. The only question at issue between Mr. Stevens and the Secretary of the Navy is, who has stopped the progress of the work? This amendment is only to direct the Secretary of the Navy to prosecute the work to its fulfillment. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remark to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. PRICE,] that the question of order having been raised, the decision of the Chair will depend somewhat on the law referred to.

Mr. PRICE. The resolution to which I referred passed in 1842.

Mr. HOUSTON. The joint resolution of 1842 authorized a contract here. As I understand the facts—and some of them are derived from the proposition itself—the Secretary of the Navy Department determined that the contract had not been complied with, and was by him rescinded or refused to be carried out, because of the failure of Mr. Stevens to comply with it. It has remained so for some ten years, without being brought up, or seriously pressed upon either branch of Congress. It has expired. It was decided to have been a failure on the part of the contractor, and as such the work has been stopped.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will suggest another point.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I was about to say, that the facts stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] are disputed, and differ from what has been stated.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman will not dispute that the facts which I have stated are true—that the Secretary of the Navy so reported them, as I have stated?

Mr. STANTON. I admit that. I rise for the purpose of suggesting to my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. PRICE,] that he will withdraw his amendment for the present, and I will submit the amendment which I proposed yesterday. I intended to present it at this place. It will present the question of order in a more favorable shape, if he will postpone it until the question is decided upon the amendment which I hold in my hands. It is possible, that it may be brought up under more favorable circumstances.

Mr. PRICE. At the suggestion of my friend, I will withdraw it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I send to the Clerk's desk, the amendment I proposed upon yesterday. I think that, upon the question of order, there can be no doubt:

Provided, That hereafter, whenever a vessel in ordinary shall be so much decayed that the expenditures required to repair and equip her, shall be estimated to exceed two thirds of her original cost, it shall not be lawful to repair such vessel; but she shall be sold, and the proceeds applied to the construction of a new vessel in her stead. And the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be built a vessel-of-war whose frame shall be of white-oak, and of the best and most approved model for sailing, to be fitted with auxiliary steam power, and to be armed exclusively with the heaviest and most destructive ordnance, which, according to recent improvements, it is possible to carry with safety and serve with efficiency at sea. And to this object shall be applied, in addition to such sum as may be conveniently spared from the foregoing appropriation, any unexpended balance remaining in the Treasury to the credit of similar appropriations for former years.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The amendment is not in order, as I think, because it proposes to change the general law by a provision in an appropriation bill, by providing that no ship in ordinary shall hereafter be repaired.

Mr. STANTON. When the expenditures cost more than two thirds of the original construction.

Mr. JONES. Under those conditions they are not to be repaired. I think the amendment changes the whole general law. It is out of order upon that ground. Again, it provides for the building of new ships not authorized by any existing law, and therefore it is out of order upon that ground; and because it proposes permanent legislation in an item of an appropriation bill. Either one of these points will rule it out of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to remind the gentleman over the way, that we have never had a single session of Congress that we have not made important changes of law in the appropriation bills. I am sure his recollection will bear me out. I refer him to the bounty land law, and various other laws that we have passed in similar appropriation bills. Then, in relation to the other point, I take it that we are not to introduce a bill, and pass a law for the building of every ship. I take it, that the common appropriation bill—the Navy appropriation bill—is the proper bill in which to incorporate provisions for the increase of the Navy, either for repairing or building ships.

Mr. STANTON. This appropriation is for repairs, and this is a proviso which directs in what manner the sum of money provided in this clause of the bill shall be appropriated, and in what manner it shall be expended. If anything is to be obtained in this Congress, or any other Congress, this is the only way in which it can be done.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call the gentleman to order. This question is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is not debatable, but the Chair was anxious to hear suggestions as well from those in favor as those opposed to the point of order. The Chair has no hesitation in deciding the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. STANTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Is the appeal debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. STANTON. I would like to make a single remark, and it is this, that I am sorry gentlemen have taken upon themselves the responsibility—

Several MEMBERS. "I object!" "I object!"

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Gentlemen must rise when they object.

Mr. EDGERTON, (rising in his seat.) I object. The CHAIRMAN. The rule bearing upon the question will be read.

The 81st rule was then read, as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government."

Mr. CLINGMAN. Have we any law for maintaining a Navy?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would refer the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to the books upon the subject. This amendment is decided to be out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANTON. I propose to modify that amendment so as to make reference to the act approved June 30th, 1834, for building a frigate to be called Paul Jones. That frigate has never been built. I will add to this amendment the proposition to carry out the provisions of the act of June 30th, 1834, for building that frigate.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. There is an appeal pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] has proposed an amendment to the bill under consideration, which amendment is decided by the Chair not to be in order, from which an appeal has been taken. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. SACKETT. I ask to have the amendment again read, so that we may understand it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask that the provision of the bill with which it is connected may be read.

Several MEMBERS. "I object!" "I object!"

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and ASHE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and there were—ayes 49, noes 73; so the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to say a single word in reference to that amendment, and that is, to inform the House that it is the proposition of which I spoke yesterday. I consider it a proposition of much more importance than the building of a single vessel.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee as offering another amendment?

Mr. STANTON. No, sir, I am speaking in favor of the amendment I offered just now, and upon which a question of order was raised.

Several MEMBERS. "We'll pass it!"

Mr. STANTON. Gentlemen around me tell me that the committee will sustain the amendment, and if that be so, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. SWEETSER. Is the amendment divisible?

The CHAIRMAN. In what way does the gentleman propose to divide it?

Mr. SWEETSER. Is it not divisible? The first branch of it provides for the selling of old vessels, and the second branch provides for the construction of new ones.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio state what division he proposes?

Mr. SWEETSER. I propose to split it about the middle, leaving two distinct propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not divisible in that way.

The question was then put upon Mr. STANTON's amendment; and, on a division of the committee, the chairman announced—ayes 68, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask for tellers.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Call the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers were called for before the demand was made to call the roll.

Mr. JONES. There is no quorum present. The Chair has so announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that tellers were called for before his demand to call the roll.

Mr. JONES. Can less than a quorum order tellers?

Mr. FITCH. There is evidently a quorum present.

Tellers were then ordered; and Messrs. SKELTON and DEAN were appointed.

The question was again put; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 48.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. In order to complete the amendment just adopted, and to carry out the recommendation of the Department, I now move to insert after the word "million," in the twenty-fifth line, the words "three hundred," so as to make the clause read—

For repair of vessels in ordinary, and for wear and tear of vessels in commission, including fuel and purchase of hemp, $1,365,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to occupy more than a moment or two. I made the best opposition I could to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, but the committee have seen fit to put it in the bill, and of course they have a right to put in anything else they please. This proposition, it does seem to me, comes with a very singular grace from my friends upon all sides of this House, who urged upon Congress and the country that the Collins line of steamers would supersede the Navy. Gentlemen urged that if we would grant that large appropriation to the Collins line, it would, to a great extent, supersede and ultimately change the whole character of the Navy, furnishing it with war steamers that could render service in time of peace, by carrying the mails. And now we find that the very men who aided in giving that exorbitant appropriation to that line, are proposing to increase the Navy, when their argument has been effectual with the House that that line ought to be sustained, because it would be adding so many vessels to the Navy, and therefore would, to a large extent, ultimately supersede the Navy. Now, if the House is disposed to go on in this way, let it be done. I only want the record to show who is responsible for it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Have not I a right to speak in favor of my amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's right to do so has passed from him.

Mr. CHANDLER moved to amend the amendment by increasing the amount $100,000.

Mr. C. said: I am not apprised of the fact, if it be a fact, that the ground was taken here by those who advocated the passage of the Collins line appropriation, that it would dispense with any appropriations for the Navy. It is a long time since there has been any addition of sailing vessels to our Navy. I believe that, with the exception of one frigate, there has been none of that class for nearly thirty years. We cannot suppose that we can defend a coast like ours with our present naval force. I am certain that it was never contemplated by those who advocated the measure which the chairman of the Ways and Means has referred to, that we should dispense with appropriations for the Navy entirely. With the whole continent of Europe providing additional naval forces, offensive and defensive, we must provide ourselves with similar means. We need it, and we shall require such steamers as the Collins line to convey our sailors and provide for the defense of our harbors. We shall need, and do need, to carry on our defense in every part of the world, sailing vessels and propellers added to our existing Navy in considerable numbers. We must not suppose that we are always to enjoy those halcyon days of peace, when we can pocket our dollars, and not provide for our defense against the encroachments of foreign nations. Though I may not desire so large an addition to the appropriation as I have been compelled to move, I certainly think that the addition provided for by the chairman of the Naval Committee will be necessary to carry out the objects which we have voted as necessary. While our commerce is exposed on the neighboring seas, and while difficulties are arising on the Pacific and on the Atlantic sufficient to excite our apprehensions, if not our fears, it becomes us to be careful of all these things, to see that we are provided, not against what is happening now, but against what may happen. It is the business of Government to look out for time to come, as well as for existing emergencies.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because the amount which I propose to increase this appropriation to, is that which was estimated for by the Navy Department, without any reference to the proposition which has already been adopted by the committee. You will see that the proposition to build that new ship is one that is not to cost anything to the Government beyond the original estimates of the Navy Department; and I here beg leave to say, that I believe in no single instance has the Committee on Naval Affairs instructed me to introduce an appropriation higher than that estimated for by the Secretary of the Navy, and in many instances, they have reported less than that amount. We do not even go up to the amounts estimated for by the Secretary of the Navy, especially for the various navy-yards. Now, with reference to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] has said, as to the Collins line of steamers, suppose those four steamers belonged to the Government of the United States at the present time, as a part of our Navy, what would our whole Navy amount to in comparison with the six hundred vessels of Great Britain; with the three hundred and twenty-eight, or thereabouts, owned by the Government of France; with that fleet of nearly two hundred owned by Russia, or with the more than one hundred owned even by the Dutch Government? If those four steamers of the Collins line were purchased to-day, and added to our Navy, I maintain that we would not then be prepared to go into a war. I think the gentleman from Alabama is altogether mistaken when he supposes that anybody said, at anytime, that the adoption of the proposition in aid of the Collins line would dispense with the use of the Navy.

Mr. HOUSTON. I struggled to get the floor just now, in order to state more specifically the fact I alluded to. Any gentleman who heard the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] in favor of the appropriation to the Collins line, and who paid attention to it, must remember that he spoke of the Navy in most disparaging terms, and spoke of the Collins line as a means of getting clear of it. He based his whole argument upon that, and repeated it once or twice in the course of his speech.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether the amount of the naval appropriations has been reduced just exactly the sum appropriated for the Collins line?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know. I have before me the amount of the reduction, if the gentleman wants to get at that. But the gentleman is certainly a long way behind the music, because the naval bill was reported months before the Collins amendment was acted upon. We have made no reduction in the Navy bill with reference to what was said or done in regard to the Collins line.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the gentleman if it has been reduced just that sum? Perhaps the Committee of Ways and Means, knowing the popularity of the Collins line, anticipated its success, and reduced the appropriations accordingly. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. I know I am out of order. I am always out of order when I am speaking common sense. [Laughter.] It must be recollected that there is some revenue, in the shape of postage, derived from the Collins line—

Mr. CHANDLER. So satisfied am I of the correctness of the remarks of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I object.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SWEETSER. I move to strike out "$300,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

Mr. S. said: Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the original amendment now pending, for reasons which I will briefly state. It is well known to this House that I opposed the appropriation which recently passed this Congress for the Collins line of steam-ships. I then understood the argument in favor of this appropriation to be that the said steamers could be converted into war steamers of the first class in a short time, and with little expense, and if Congress adopted the system of encouraging that class of steamers, it would obviate the necessity of building new war steamers. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] in relation to the argument used on that occasion. I cannot be mistaken in my understanding of the main reason given the House and the country for that appropriation to the Collins steamers. The House listened, and the appropriation prevailed. But now we find, in the same Congress which passed that appropriation, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. STANTON] coming forward with a proposition to build a new steamer, and to increase the Navy. Sir, I desire to state that the Navy has already become one of the most expensive branches of our Government. While we are expending upon the legislative, and executive, and judicial branches of the Government, a little rising of $4,000,000, we are expending upon our Navy, and have been ever since I have been in Congress, nearly $10,000,000 per annum, and about the same amount upon the Army. We now find that, while we are attempting to change entirely our naval system, and adopt a new one that shall entirely do away with this large naval armament, the very advocates of the change come forward and propose to increase it.

Now, sir, I come from a section of the country that desires to see the abuses and extravagance of the Navy reformed, and demand at the hands of their Representatives prompt action in relation to the Navy and Army, instead of an increase of the expenses of these branches of the service. The comparison, by way of argument, of our Navy with the English, French, or Dutch navies, has no force to my mind. The navies of England and France are needed for the protection of their distant colonial possessions. We have no distant colonies, and need no increase of our Navy for any purpose. The Navy needs reform, and must be curtailed in its expenditures.

If the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee of the House, who proposed the original proposition, which I propose to amend, in order to state my views upon the general question, will digest a system, predicated upon the view which the House approved in relation to the ocean steamers; if that plan meets the approbation of the Naval Committee, and is intended to be urged for the adoption of the country, as a change of the old system, I will most cheerfully acquiesce in any well-digested system that shall, in the main, curtail the expenses of that branch of the service, and secure efficiency, as was claimed to be the case when the House listened favorably to the proposed change. If, however, the House misapprehended the views of the Naval Committee, and are now to understand the honorable chairman and the advocates of appropriations to mail steamers, as admitting the non-adaptation of mail steamers for war purposes, let us retrace our steps as best we may, and adopt some other method that will produce favorable results. At all events, it is unwise in us to continue to make extravagant appropriations without introducing radical changes in the whole system, which I have no time to point out.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, it is not my desire to delay the action of the committee by occupying even five minutes' time upon it; but I rise in opposition to the amendment of my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. SWEETSER,] who proposes to reduce the amount of the appropriation from $300,000 to $500, because these estimates have been submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, and have undergone the revision of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the House. These estimates and revision, in my judgment, are the best proofs of the propriety of this appropriation.

But my principal object in obtaining the floor at this time is, to say a word in opposition to the intimation of the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. HOUSTON,] in reference to the Navy itself. He intimated that gentlemen who voted for the appropriation which passed this House, in aid of the Collins line of steamers, were actuated by a desire that those ships should supersede the Navy. Sir, I was actuated by no such motive. I voted for the additional appropriations for the Collins line upon high national grounds. As a friend of the American Navy, now, I am one of those who would like to see great reforms in our naval establishment. I think they are loudly called for. This bill, as I understand it, appropriates about $6,000,000 for the Navy of the United States. I understand the estimates of the Department call for about $7,000,000; but they were cut down. Now, sir, if we could have had the business of the House conducted as it ought to be conducted—if we could have had our committees called four months ago—if our intelligent Naval Committee, and Military Committee, and Commerce Committee, and other committees of the House, could have reported, these reforms might have been perfected and adopted by the House, and that would have saved the Government millions of expenditure in one year. But the delays incident to the proceedings in this House, in acting upon the pressing business before us, under our rules, are such as to prevent legislation; to prevent reform; to prevent members from doing what they desire for their constituents; to prevent the chairmen of committees—of the most intelligent and important committees in the House—from reporting at all. Then, how are we to legislate? I should like to see reforms introduced. During the last Congress, it was my privilege to make a speech upon the river and harbor bill, in which I took occasion to refer to the enormous expenditure of the Government upon this branch of the public service. I was then charged by some of my personal friends as being hostile to the Navy. But I desire now to say, that I am not hostile to that branch of the public service. I wish to proclaim it that I am in favor of reform, that our naval establishment may be improved. I would adopt a retired list, and place the superannuated and incompetent officers of the Navy upon that list, at half pay, instead of giving them whole pay, as we do now. There are many captains of the Navy receiving full pay who are incapable of performing their duty; and they receive full pay to the prejudice of the younger, more efficient, and enterprising officers of the Navy. These I would promote. I would modify and increase their rank.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not suppose the Committee of Ways and Means are to correct these abuses. That belongs to the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] and the Committee on Naval Affairs, into whose hands these matters are committed. It is not a duty of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly not. It was far from my intention to cast censure upon the conduct of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. I think that gentleman deserves commendation for his efforts to reduce the expenditures of the Government in its various Departments; but I do say that the members of this House owe it to the country to speak as little as possible, except to the point, and to improve the Navy, and reform abuses whenever they can. Let the various committees of the House report methods to reform these abuses, every one of them. Let the House adopt the suggestions of our intelligent Naval Committee and Military Committee, and, so far as we can, correct the abuses now existing in the various branches of the public service, which exist to such an extent as to call down the denunciations of the people of the country, all over the country. They call loudly, Mr. Chairman, upon you and all of us for reform. Look at this branch of the public service! Heed, sir, the intelligent recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and your committee. I speak with no hostility to the Navy. I am proud of the American Navy. I am proud of its services during the last war with Great Britain, and whenever the country has demanded them; but the inequalities of rank and pay, the injustice to meritorious officers, the unnecessary expenditures, and the great abuses in that Department, require reform at our hands, and we ought to attempt it, at least. In the great State which I have the honor in part to represent, out of sixty captains in the American Navy, we have not one. We have not even a purser. We should equalize the appointments, increase the rank of those who deserve it, as recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and, by wise legislation, strengthen our Navy, and encourage those who perform their duty—

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. SWEETSER's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SACKETT. I propose now to amend the amendment by increasing the amount $1,000. I do it for the purpose of saying that I regard the proposition making this appropriation as a proposition for reform, as one for an essential improvement in the Navy. What is its object? It is to build a vessel calculated and intended to defend important points, important harbors, and the important commercial points in the country. We have been in the habit, until the last year, of expending $1,000,000 annually for fortifications and for some other like purposes. Now, if this great reform is carried forward, I doubt not it will result not only in a reform, but will result in a diminution of the combined expenses of our fortifications and Navy, because this reform in our naval system will obviate the necessity for so large an annual appropriation for fortifications, except at the great commercial points of the country. It will produce a reform which I regard as essential, as important, and as producing beneficial results upon the country generally. The particular amount recommended by the Department to commence this operation is comparatively unimportant. I suppose that amount is recommended, and I hope it will be adopted by the committee.

Mr. DEAN. I am opposed to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. SACKETT.]

Mr. SACKETT. With the consent of the committee, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DEAN. I object. I embrace this opportunity of saying that I am opposed to this whole proposition, if for no other reason, because we are now within less than a fortnight of the close of the session and have no time to consider such propositions. I suppose the Committee of Ways and Means have reported enough to keep the Navy afloat till the 1st of December, when we are to have another session of Congress, and shall have new estimates, and will be prepared to make these appropriations more understandingly than at this time. It seems to me it would be better to adopt the appropriations recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means for the present, and make these new appropriations, if necessary, when we have new estimates.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will suggest to the gentleman from New York, that these estimates were made by the Navy Department, and the estimates at another session of Congress must be made by the same Department. We will get no more information about the wants of the Navy then than now.

Mr. DEAN. I am sorry to see my friend from Pennsylvania always coming up to the help of those men who are making these recommendations for extravagant appropriations. He seems willing to back the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War in all their profligate expenditures. I am not. I believe our Navy under its present management, or under the management of the late Secretary, has been one of the greatest sources of abuse in the Government. They have expended annually $10,000,000 for a service which ought to have been performed for $6,000,000. If gentlemen will look at the data upon which these calculations have been founded, and these recommendations made, they will find that nearly $5,000,000 is appropriated for the salary of officers waiting orders, and many of them staying at the city of Washington doing nothing. We cannot reach these cases and reform this abuse in this bill, but we may do it hereafter; and I hope this committee will not spend time upon these various amendments, the object of which is to increase these appropriations.

We have adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON.] I have no objection to that, but I submit that it is not wise to go on making appropriations for the Navy when we are within three months of another session of Congress; when there is a new Secretary of the Navy just installed, and a new Administration before us, which will make their own recommendations upon the subject.

Mr. POLK. I will ask the gentleman whether the present amendment proposes to increase the appropriation to the Navy?

Mr. DEAN. The amendment proposes to increase the appropriation $301,000.

Mr. STANTON. It is only to make it equal to what was appropriated last year, for the same item, and also the year before.

Mr. POLK. I would ask the gentleman whether he, as a Representative upon this floor, is ready to cut down that arm of our defense?

Mr. DEAN. Not at all. I am not in favor of cutting down this arm of our defense, but I am for economy; and when we find as we do now, that under the administration of the late Secretary of the Navy, the expenditures increased three millions in a single year, that is from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000, it is time for Congress to come forward and show that they are in favor of retrenchment.

The question was then taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOODENOW. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] by adding $25,000. I do this that I may have the opportunity of saying to the committee and to the country, that our Navy is not, at the present moment, as efficient as it ought to be, in view of the questions agitated recently in regard to our relations with Great Britain upon the subject of the fisheries. It is a fact, which should be known to the country, that although we have been called to send to the Bay of Fundy a naval armament sufficient to protect our citizens in their rights there, there was but one vessel which could be found in a situation to be sent there—the Mississippi—a vessel which had been prepared for another destination.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have recently heard much said, upon the one side and the other, about our rights of fishing, and the infringement of those rights by Great Britain. The President of the United States has been called upon to send a naval force sufficient to protect our rights, and the fact that we have not a sufficient number of vessels prepared for that service, these gentlemen who appear to be so ready to maintain them by arms ought to consider. If we would maintain a navy at all, we should maintain an efficient navy, and we should have our naval establishment in such a condition that we could meet any emergency which may happen, where the interests or honor of our country are at all jeopardized. But such is not the fact now. We are not prepared for a war with Great Britain, upon this or any other question. I wish gentlemen to understand that if we were to come into collision with England upon any question, we are not in a situation to meet her as we might, if we only had our Navy as efficient as it might be; but I hope there is no gentleman who is disposed to encourage a feeling of hostility towards Great Britain, unless he is willing to come up and vote for an appropriation of money which will enable us to meet her, or any other nation upon earth, as we will be able to do, if we will only use the means in our hands.

I am in favor of having an efficient Navy, and I am not in favor of extravagant appropriations; but every amendment which has been, or which may be offered by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee,] has received the sanction of that committee, after a full and careful investigation, and no appropriations have been recommended by that committee greater than were recommended by the Navy Department.

Reforms in the Navy undoubtedly are needed, but I hope this committee will not withhold the necessary appropriations for giving efficiency to that arm of our national defense. Several bills intended to remedy existing defects in our naval establishment, and to render it more efficient, have been matured and prepared by the Committee on Naval Affairs, but no opportunity has yet been had of reporting them to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. GOODENOW,] as well as to the original amendment.

I was much gratified to hear the remarks which I have, and from the quarter from which they came,—from the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR.] In the course of his remarks, he talked something about retrenchment and reform, and stated at the same time, that there were abuses, enormous in their character. I would have been much more gratified had the gentleman, while speaking of these abuses, pointed them out, and directed the attention of the House and of the country to them. If the abuses to which he refers exist in the Navy Department, I was in hopes that he would have called the attention of the country, especially to those of a glaring and gross character, which the country is convinced do exist in many of the Departments of the Government. We talk about retrenchment, Mr. Chairman; but somehow or other, we never hit the precise item upon which retrenchment should begin. We never get at the precise time when it should begin. Some how or other, we never find the House or the country in a position or in a condition to commence this great work of retrenchment and reform, by which to lessen the burden of taxes upon the people. If we talk about retrenchment in time of war, then that is not the time. If we talk about it in time of peace, then the particular object is not the one upon which to begin. If in time of war or of peace, it be not the proper time to commence, when in the name of high Heaven, and of common sense, is the proper time to arrive when this work of retrenchment is to be begun?

I want the gentleman who alluded to these abuses, and who spoke in such strong and forcible terms of the necessity of retrenchment and reform, to point out the items, and we will try to begin the work.

I was much gratified, as I said, with the remarks coming from the quarter that they did; and when we come to look at the expenditures of the Government from its origin, and trace them down to the present time, we find that there has been an enormous increase. Look to the Army, look to the Navy, where it is conceded upon all hands that the grossest abuses exist, and there you find the greatest amount of expenditure.

Look at the expenditure of this Government from its origin to the present time, exclusive of its public debt, and we find that we have expended nearly $1,000,000,000. And where has it gone? More than $600,000,000 have been expended upon the Army and Navy Departments of the Government, where it is conceded that those great abuses exist, and where retrenchment should begin. These are facts. Over $600,000,000 have been expended upon the Army and the Navy of this Union; and yet we cannot find a place, or fix upon the time when this work of retrenchment shall be begun.

The Army and the Navy of this Government, as has been the case in the Governments of the Old World, are the great arteries, out of which the Government is bled to exhaustion, and through which the Government oppress the people, even to resistance in many instances. It is time to stop. Let us commence the work of retrenchment, and tie up the bleeding arteries that will ultimately exhaust the whole system.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. GOODENOW, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. POLK. I move to strike out the whole appropriation.

I understand, sir, that the Committee on Naval Affairs have had under consideration the questions pertaining to that branch of the public service, and that by a rule of this House, all estimates of that committee have to be submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

I remember that a motion was made at an early day of this session, that the report of each committee should be final as to the propriety or impropriety of a matter falling within the jurisdiction of such committee. The vote was taken in this House; and why was that done?

The peculiar organization of the Committee of Ways and Means, as made by the Speaker of this House, should influence the common sense of this Congress to withhold from that committee any decision upon matters connected with the nationality of this Republic. There is no national feeling there. I do not desire to be personal to anybody, but it is highly injurious to the country to find the Committee of Ways and Means—having the control over everything connected with the prosperity of the country—refusing to strengthen that arm upon which we must rely for our national defense. We can whip any army that may venture upon our shores. We can encounter with success any military force upon our coast. We cannot fight them successfully, however, upon the high seas unless you give us sails and armaments with which to do it. We require it as a nation. We require it as a Republic. But when we see men whose eyes shine like moon-eyed horses at every dollar [laughter] that is appropriated to build up the national defenses, I think the nation is in mighty poor keeping. [Laughter.] This, sir, I consider it due to say, and say it because the whole history of that committee will sustain it. Their very conduct and acts show it. The rules of this House should be altered, for why should the Committee of Ways and Means know, how could they know, what is essential to that arm of our service, the Navy, better than a committee appointed by this House to take it into consideration. They cannot do it. They give to it a few hours' consideration, and then report here that it ought not to be approved of.

Our country requires the condemnation of any action that involves a neglect of great national interests; and so far as my voice goes, I condemn it here.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee.

Mr. WALSH demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and JOHNSON, of Arkansas, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to; the tellers having reported—ayes 70, noes 50.

Mr. COBB. I move the following amendment as an addition to the one just adopted:

Provided, That the building of more than one vessel shall not be commenced in each year.

Mr. FLORENCE. No matter what the necessity may be?

Mr. HOUSTON. Is that proviso in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is clearly in order if the original proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee was.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order as a distinct amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is in order as a distinct amendment, because it directs the mode of appropriation.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I submit the following amendment, to come in immediately after what has just been adopted:

And the Secretary of the Navy is also authorized and directed to cause to be applied, as soon as practicable, to all steam vessels belonging to the United States, the best form of condenser for supplying fresh water to marine boilers at sea; and to pay to the owner or owners thereof, such price for the right to use such condenser, as a board to consist of the Engineer-in-Chief and two or more chief engineers of the Navy, may designate to be the value thereof: Provided, however, That no condenser shall be so applied, unless the same shall have been practically tested at sea, and found capable of being used as a surface, as well as jet condenser.

With reference to this amendment, I desire to say a single word. It will be remembered that two years ago I offered an amendment of the same kind, for the purpose of applying this fresh-water apparatus to marine boilers of our sea steamers. It is an object, sir, of very great importance, and one which will, I believe, contribute in a very great degree to the economy of the service. It is not possible for me to enter into an argument, at this time, to show these facts; but every gentleman who knows anything of the subject, must have come to this conclusion long since. Instead of adopting the amendment I proposed two years ago, this House appropriated $5,000, and directed the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of commissioners. He appointed two or three learned gentlemen of Philadelphia, who made a long report, which was referred to the Naval Committee, but which I have never had an opportunity to report back to the House. It enters learnedly into the theory of the question—the effect of salt water upon steam boilers, but ending in nothing practical. This proposition simply refers the question to the Secretary of the Navy, and directs him to adopt the best possible invention for the purpose of accomplishing this object—the furnishing of boilers at sea with fresh water, and preventing the accumulation of scale and the destruction of boilers, which is consequent upon their being scaled by the use of salt water. There will be a saving of an immense amount of fuel by restoring hot fresh water to the boilers, instead of salt water at the temperature of the sea. I think there can be no objection to the proposition, and I hope it will be adopted:

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the one just adopted:

And that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to have completed without unnecessary delay, the war steamer contracted for with Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed April 14th, 1842.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raised a point of order upon that amendment when it was proposed before, and was sustained by the Chair.

Mr. PRICE. It was under different circumstances. Under the ruling of the Chair it is now in order as a part of the amendment declared by the committee to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the Chair in regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee was not sustained, but he does not understand this as having any connection with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, and adopted by the committee. The Chair adheres to his former decision, and decides this amendment to be out of order.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I will suggest that the building of the vessel to which the gentleman refers, was commenced some years ago. It is a work actually in progress.

Mr. PRICE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, upon the ground that this is only a declaratory resolution for carrying out an existing law of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey out of order. From that decision an appeal is taken, and the question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. POLK. Will the Chair please explain the grounds upon which he objects to the amendment, so that the committee may be enabled to vote understandingly?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order, under the 81st rule. [Published in a preceding column.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Is this work not in progress?

Mr. PRICE. It is.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. There exists a law in regard to this, and the work is in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. No contract has been adduced showing that this work is in progress. It is an old work commenced in 1842, and nothing has been shown of its continuance since.

Mr. STANTON. I will state a simple fact to the committee. This work was authorized by law, I believe, in 1842, and money was appropriated and paid out upon it until it was stopped by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In 1842 there was a joint resolution passed, authorizing the construction of this vessel, and an appropriation of $250,000 was made for that purpose. That was ten years ago. Under the general law that amount has been, if this law has not been executed, carried to the surplus fund, and there is now really no appropriation for that object. Unless there is passed a new law, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into this contract, the law of 1842 never will be executed—it is obsolete.

Mr. POLK. I acknowledge the premises of my colleague, provided he will allow the amendment to be read, and see what connection it has with the law by which the Chair decides it to be out of order.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. STUART. Do I understand that the Chair rules the amendment out of order, because it provides for an appropriation in an appropriation bill contrary to law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is equivalent to a new proposition.

Mr. STUART. I say that it is in order.

Mr. POLK. Does the Chair decide that this House has not the power to make an appropriation to carry out the law passed in 1842?

The CHAIRMAN. The House has the power to do it.

Mr. POLK. If the House has not, it has not the power to carry out its own purposes. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BROWN, of New Jersey. I think that the Chair is mistaken in point of fact. Not only is this joint resolution, that has been referred to, the existing law, but there is an existing contract under it. That contract has not been rescinded. It is obligatory upon the Government; but the Secretary of the Navy refuses to make payments under that contract as the work proceeds.

Mr. JENKINS. Why?

Mr. BROWN. Upon reasons in which the Secretary of the Navy is mistaken in point of fact.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Chair decides that it is equivalent to a new proposition, nothing more or less. If there was any appropriation made in 1842, it has been carried into the Treasury, and is lost sight of, so far as this measure is concerned.

Mr. PRICE. It has never been carried to any other fund. It is now standing to the credit of this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. POLK demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE and CHASTAIN were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 59.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The following section was then read, viz:

"For continuing the publication of the Wind and Current Charts, and for defraying all the expenses connected therewith, $10,000."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Before the committee proceed to consider another clause, I offer the following amendment to this section:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, if he shall deem it expedient, to send a steamer of light draft up the Rio de la Plata and its tributaries, to examine and report as to their navigability, and as to the commercial resources and capacities of the country drained by them: Provided, Such steamer can be spared from the naval service without inconvenience or additional cost.

This proposition is not to add anything to the expense of the Navy, but simply to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to send a vessel, if one can be spared, and if it will not add anything to the cost of the service.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order, that the amendment is not in order. There is no law in existence which it is intended to execute.

Mr. STANTON. It is only directing the service in which the Navy shall be employed.

Mr. ORR. It is a kind of a new exploring expedition without the authority of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not in order.

The next section was then read, as follows:

"For the repairs and erection of buildings at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, $28,000."

Mr. WILDRICK. I offer the following amendment:

To complete quarters for the students and professors at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the sum of $75,000.

I ask that the following letters from the Department be read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 30, 1852.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography of this Department, asking that the sum of $75,000 may be added to the appropriation already reported by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, which sum was stricken out of the deficiency bill.

This sum of $75,000 is the balance of the estimate made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, and is required to complete the quarters for the students and professors at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, which have been commenced but must remain in an incomplete condition, hazarding the health and comfort of the inmates of that institution, unless the means are provided to complete them. I therefore urgently request that there may be added to the appropriation act for the naval service, for the year ending June 30, 1853, the sum of $75,000 "for the repair and erection of buildings at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis," thereby substituting $103,000, instead of $28,000, for that purpose.

I have the honor to be, with high respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN P. KENNEDY.

Hon. F. P. STANTON,

Chairman Committee Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE AND HYDROGRAPHY,
July 30, 1852.

SIR: The estimates which were presented to Congress "for the repair and erection of buildings at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, amounted to the sum of $127,500; to which a note was appended, that of that sum, $75,000 would, in all probability, be expended in the fiscal year. Congress only appropriated $52,500 of the sum asked.

When the estimates of 1852-'53 were prepared, the sum of $75,000, which was required to complete the original estimate, was, by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, presented as a "deficiency." The Committee of Ways and Means did not so consider it, and it was not included in the bill.

An appropriation to that amount, in addition to the sums embraced in the estimates for the present year, will be indispensable to erect the buildings necessary for the proper accommodation and instruction of the number of midshipmen which, by the existing arrangements, will be soon collected, and afterwards be generally attached to the Academy to receive instruction.

I therefore respectfully suggest the expediency of calling the attention of the Naval Committees to the propriety of asking for it, at the proper time, as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, as it has been reported.

With much respect, I am, sir, your obedient servant,
C. MORRIS, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BOWIE. I move to increase the appropriation $1,000. In the estimates for the year ending the 30th of June, 1852, the cost of improvements at Annapolis for the necessary accommodations of the midshipmen, professors, and instructors, was estimated at $127,500. Accompanying which was a note, stating that $75,000 would be probably expended that year. Congress appropriated only $52,000, leaving a balance of $75,000 yet to be appropriated for the completion of works then contemplated. When the estimates for the fiscal year ending June, 1853, were prepared, this sum of $75,000 was presented to the Committee of Ways and Means, as a deficit; but that committee not regarding it as such, excluded it from the bill now under consideration. The Committee of Ways and Means have made no appropriation for this deficit. We are informed by the proper Department, that this sum is absolutely essential to complete the structures already commenced, and to protect the health of those who are engaged in the naval school. It may not be generally known that there will be one hundred and forty midshipmen constantly instructed at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and there are now one hundred and seventy-five persons in the employment of the United States, engaged in the Naval Academy. The whole routine of study has been changed. It requires four years to complete the naval education of the midshipmen. They are engaged annually in experimental cruising for three months. The Government are determined to make this branch of the service equal in science and efficiency to the other great arm of national defense. I make these explanations that the House may know the object for which the appropriation is made, and that it is recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. This sum of $75,000 was estimated for as a deficiency, as stated by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. Bowie,] and submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means. The committee very properly decided that it was no deficiency, for the Department had recommended the $75,000 merely because Congress struck it out at the last session. It was recommended at the second session of the last Congress, and the committee saw fit to strike it out. They reduced the estimates $75,000 then. Simply because it was stricken out by Congress, and not because there was not money enough to go on with the work the last fiscal year, the head of that bureau recommended it as a deficiency. The Committee of Ways and Means very properly decided that it was no deficiency, and that it ought to go in the regular bill of estimates. The head of the bureau saw fit not to present it any further to that committee. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BOWIE. With the consent of the committee I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, as well as the clause proposed to be amended, which makes an appropriation for the Naval Academy at Annapolis. I am satisfied that this institution is used as an engine of favoritism, where the sons of a favored few are educated at the public expense, and therefore it ought to be abolished. The law provides that midshipmen in the Navy shall be apportioned among the several States according to the representation in Congress, and that no midshipman shall be appointed from, or for any Congressional district, who is not an actual resident of the district for which he is appointed at the time of his appointment.

There is no doubt but it was the intention of Congress that the appointments should be made upon the recommendation of the member representing the district, in the same manner that appointments are made for the Military Academy at West Point. But this is not done.

Appointments are made without consulting the member from the district, upon the recommendation of persons who are in no way responsible for the appointment. Some time in March, 1851, as near as I can recollect, I addressed a note to the Secretary of the Navy, asking when there would be a vacancy from my district; and was informed, in reply, that it was uncertain, but probably an appointment would be made in June of last year.

Some time in the course of the summer, I repeated the inquiry, and was told, in reply, that there was no vacancy.

Some time during the past winter, I repeated the inquiry. I was told, in reply, that, "owing to circumstances over which the Department had no control," it could not be known when there would be a vacancy.

Being still pressed with applications for the appointment, I returned to the charge again; and in July last, I inquired what the circumstances were which prevented the Department from knowing when there would be a vacancy. I was told, in reply, that it was uncertain when the midshipman from the district would graduate.

I had now become satisfied that I was trifled with, and that there was a disposition to conceal the true state of the matter from me. I thereupon immediately inquired who the present incumbent was, and when he was appointed, and whether the Department considered the member from the district entitled to any control over the appointment.

I was told, in reply, that there were three midshipmen in the service from my district, one of whom was appointed September 9, 1847, and the other two on the 1st of October, 1851; that the Department did not consider the member from the district entitled to any control over the appointment, but that my recommendation would be treated with great respect. When I considered that two midshipmen had been appointed from the district since my term commenced, and whilst I was seeking information as to the time when a vacancy would happen, and an appointment be made, I did not feel much flattered by the intelligence that "my recommendation would be treated with great respect."

I do not wish to be understood as finding any fault with the appointments. I should probably have recommended one of them myself, if the applicant had not been so fortunate as to procure recommendations from more influential sources. I should not have recommended both, for the reason that they both reside in the same town, as there are five counties in my district. But what I do complain of is, that the law evidently contemplates that the appointment shall be made upon the recommendation of the member from the district; and the propriety of it is so manifest, that to make an appointment without consulting the member, cannot but be regarded as a personal indignity that I do not choose tamely to submit to it. And I feel myself bound scrupulously and jealously to guard all the rights, privileges, and prerogatives of my office from invasion, and to hand them over unimpaired to my successor. Believing, therefore, that this institution is used as an instrument of favoritism, and is a source of corruption, I shall vote against all appropriations for its support.

Mr. DEAN. Does the gentleman accuse the Whig candidate for the Vice Presidency of violating the law?

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I did not say anything in regard to the Whig candidate for the Vice Presidency.

Mr. WALSH. It is not a charge peculiar to the Secretary of the Navy, who has just retired from office, and is the candidate for the Vice Presidency of this nation, on the Whig ticket. This system of favoritism has been prevailing in this country half a century, in spite of all your precaution.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to debate about presidential candidates. I desire to get through this bill.

Mr. WALSH. I said that it was not a charge peculiar to the Secretary of the Navy. I am speaking of the system. Despite of all ordinary legislation you may attempt, the system of favoritism will prevail, unless you establish something like a criminal code, and visit men with penalties for violation of the law. The law ought to be explicit, that these appointments shall be made under the application of members of Congress, or rather by their designation, so that all sections of the country shall come in for a share of the benefits of this national institution. If favoritism goes on in this way, I do not hesitate to say that the Navy, instead of properly representing the people, and receiving its strength from that portion of them who can best sustain the national interests and national defenses, will be only a type of a particular class. I mean no personal assault upon any gentleman who may be appointed. I do not know any of them. I only speak of the gross violation of right frequently practiced, and the system of favoritism which has long prevailed. Now that the attention of the House has been called to the subject of naval reform, I hope that this matter will receive special attention. There is no Department of your Government in which the American people take more pride than in your Navy, and it is associated with all the glorious memories which cluster around the homes of American freemen; but if its management is to be nothing but a system of bounties, you at once sap the foundations of its usefulness. Let a law be passed similar to that which governs the appointments to the Military Academy. Let each Representative in Congress have a right to name a midshipman for his district. What he does will be done in the face of day, and subject always to a just responsibility.

The question now being upon the amendment to the amendment—

Mr. BOWIE, by unanimous consent, withdrew it.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. WILDRICK.]

Mr. GOODENOW demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. PRICE, and HOW of New York, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 34.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. STUART. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted, viz:

And hereafter no appointment of midshipmen in the Navy shall be made unless recommended by the member of Congress representing the district in which the applicant resides.

Mr. ORR. I raise a question of order upon that amendment. It does not appertain to any portion of this bill. It is not an appropriation, nor has it reference to any existing law. It proposes to change the existing law.

Mr. STUART. The clause under consideration is an appropriation to pay the expenses of this school, and the amendment is to provide how these midshipmen shall hereafter be appointed. It is as clearly germane to this bill as anything can be. The idea that nothing can be introduced into an appropriation bill, except appropriations estimated for by the Department, is an idea which never found anybody to advocate it until within the last ten days.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan to be out of order.

Mr. STUART. From that decision I appeal.

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the negative.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled, and the amendment held to be in order.

Mr. STUART. The amendment being in order, I suppose I have the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Michigan if his amendment will not virtually vest the appointments in members of Congress?

Mr. STUART. That is precisely what it will do.

Mr. JONES. The Constitution gives them to the President.

Mr. STUART. I have had some little experience in this matter. I was here in the Thirtieth Congress, and I applied for the appointment of a midshipman from the State of Michigan. I was told that there was no vacancy in that State; that there was a fraction in Michigan and a fraction in Missouri, and that perhaps, by an agreement between the members from those States, there might be an appointment got out of the two. Well, the first thing that I knew after that was, that an officer of the Army had procured a midshipman an appointment, and charged to my district; and that midshipman, if he resides anywhere, resides in Virginia. Now, the object of my amendment is to confine the nominations to the members of Congress, just as is done in the case of the Military Academy. Let each member of Congress take the responsibility of the appointment from his district, and see that the applicant really resides in his district, and is not imported there from some other part of the country.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel it my duty to state a fact in connection with this amendment. A friend of mine applied through me for the appointment of his son to that school, but at the time he made the application there was no opportunity of getting his son in. Since that time he has removed out of my district. Learning that there was a vacancy, I renewed the application. The question was put to me whether he was a resident in my district, and I stated that at that time he was not. They excluded him on that ground, afterwards appointing another on my recommendation, who lived in my district. So far, therefore, as my experience goes, the law has been very rigidly enforced.

Mr. STUART. I desire to modify my amendment, by adding to the words:

"In the same manner that cadets at West Point are now appointed."

Mr. VENABLE. I desire to make a remark or two upon this subject; and if the gentleman from Michigan will allow me, I will offer that modification as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STUART. Certainly, sir.

Mr. VENABLE. Then I move to amend the amount by adding thereto the words indicated by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, I have but a remark or two to make upon this subject. I have been in Congress six years, and I never yet have had a vacancy in my district. The whole business has been conducted on a principle of favoritism. Whenever I have claimed appointments from my district, I have been told that there were difficulties in the way. I was told so during General Taylor's administration. I suggested an appointment to the Secretary of the Navy, and was told in reply that I had assumed the right to appoint, which belonged to him.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If my colleague will permit me, I should like to say something on that point. Whilst I was a member of the last Congress I sent in recommendations for a young man in my district which came to me from the most respectable sources. I was informed, however, that there was no vacancy. After I went home, and during the period of my last canvass, I ascertained that the Secretary of the Navy (Mr. Graham) had written a letter to the gentleman who was my opponent for Congress, and had requested him to nominate two midshipmen from the district, upon the ground that there were two vacancies. I mention this to show that whatever may be the law, the practice has been arbitrary, and conducted on mere principles of favoritism. Even if it be true, as stated all around, that, by law, the Secretary ought to take the same course that is followed with reference to the appointment of cadets at West Point, yet it is necessary that we should reiterate that provision of the law to cause Secretaries to respect it. I therefore favor the amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Let me say that I have been treated just as badly as that.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina let me say one word?

Mr. VENABLE. I cannot. I have not time. I presume that the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the gentleman from Tennessee, were treated in the same way that I was.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to interrupt the gentleman for the purpose of calling his attention to the law now in existence that regulates this whole matter.

Mr. VENABLE. I care nothing at all about the law.

Mr. TAYLOR. I merely wish to have it read.

Mr. VENABLE. The gentleman can oppose my amendment, and have the law read in his own five minutes. Sir, the whole Navy Department has been employed for the purpose of sustaining the favorites of the Secretary. Gentlemen here have had their recommendations treated with contempt, and the individuals recommended by them have not been appointed. They have been told there were no vacancies in their districts, and then individuals from those districts have been put into the Naval School without regard to their recommendations. Sir, this power ought to be taken from the Secretary of the Navy. If we have the power to nominate cadets for the Academy at West Point, we ought to have precisely the same power to control these appointments.

Mr. FLORENCE. I hope the gentleman will let me tell my experiences. I have had eleven applications from my district.

Mr. VENABLE. The injustice of this system is obvious.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I am obliged to oppose this amendment, and say a word in justification of the Secretary of the Navy. I believe it is an amendment which is in direct conflict with the resolutions of 1798. I believe that the Secretary of the Navy and all the other Secretaries, are bound by the resolutions of 1798-'99, together with Madison's commentaries, to appoint nearly all the officers of this Government from Virginia, [laughter.] and, if this amendment passes, it takes away that privilege which has heretofore been so faithfully exercised, [renewed laughter.] Being a violation of those sacred resolutions, I hold it to be even worse than violating both the Baltimore platforms put together, because it is violating fundamental principles superior to the Constitution itself, [laughter.] How does any gentleman who holds to those resolutions, dare to rise here and censure the officers of this Government for following them out? Why, I know that the Secretary of the Interior has taken so many Whigs from certain Whig districts—for instance, from the Wheeling district—and put them into offices here, that he left none at home to vote for the Whig candidates, and they were defeated. [Great laughter.]

Now, sir, for these reasons, I trust that this amendment or this resolution will be voted down, and that those resolutions, old and venerable, will prevail.

Mr. FLORENCE. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STEVENS. I have done.

Mr. FLORENCE. I want to know whether the Baltimore platform contained this principle?

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I think it is clearly in order to ask my colleague from Pennsylvania a question of that kind.

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was adopted.

Mr. FLORENCE. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, in addition to the number of midshipmen now directed to be appointed, to select ten additional midshipmen who shall be appointed at large, without being confined to Congressional districts.

Mr. F. said: I will state, that a similar provision is embodied in the law appointing cadets to the West Point Academy, and it is no more than right and proper, that the same privilege should be extended to the Naval School at Annapolis.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I trust the committee will not adopt this provision, because it is well known that we have now a great many more midshipmen than the wants of the country require; and a great many more passed midshipmen and lieutenants than the wants of the service require; and what is the use of creating officers for which we have no duty?

Mr. FLORENCE. We want them for the future marine service of the country.

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I had not got through with my five minutes—I only yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had finished.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will merely state that these midshipmen are just the men we want to enter into the civil marine service. I apprehend there is not a man in this House—for I heard it in the discussion upon the bill to provide for punishment in the Navy—who will not agree that there is great need for reform in the great commercial marine of the country.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I merely wish to say that—

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] spoke in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. STANTON. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania had no right to reply.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If anybody is entitled to the floor to speak in opposition to the amendment, I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] first took the floor, made his speech, and, as the Chair thought, yielded altogether. The floor was then taken by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], in opposition to the amendment. Afterwards, the gentleman from Pennsylvania claimed the floor, upon the ground that he had only yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky and had not consumed his five minutes.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to a point of order. While I was addressing the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky rose and was recognized by the Chair, and occupied a portion of my time. I intended to say further as a reason why my amendment should be adopted, that there are eleven already appointed in my district, and I want these ten added to be selected from the country at large, so that I may get the President to appoint another.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a point of order. I understand the Chair decides that the gentleman from Pennsylvania first took the floor, and addressed the committee. The gentleman from Kentucky then took the floor, and spoke in opposition to the amendment, and had the five minutes considerably extended to him, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania was again allowed to speak in reply. Now I say, the Chair had no right to allow him to both open and close debate upon an amendment under the five minutes rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman's point is well taken. The proceeding was irregular.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Chair decides that the gentleman was in order, then I appeal from that decision, for the Chair cannot control the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I demand to be heard in opposition to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has already spoken in opposition to it, and no further debate is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then how did it happen that the gentleman from Pennsylvania spoke in the affirmative afterwards?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already said that it was irregular.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, the Chair allowed it, and I appeal from the decision of the Chair in allowing it. [Laughter.]

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

Mr. JOHNSON. I want this fact shown in relation to this whole matter—and this is but another instance of the same kind—that when anything was to be done in relation to this Annapolis school, this Government has acted upon principles of the grossest favoritism and injustice. I have never had an appointment to that school from my district at all. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"] I have been in Congress for six years, and I say six years is a long enough time for a vacancy to have occurred in that district. ["Order!" "Order!"] I want to call the attention of the House to the fact of the injustice and inequality which has been shown in the management of this school.

Mr. KING, of New York. I rise to a point of order. I want to know whether the gentleman from Arkansas has the right to speak upon this amendment, after two speeches have already been made?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is not in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I object utterly to the amendment; it is but ten more who will be subject to the same favoritism.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Is it now in order to speak against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. BAYLY. Then I move to strike out from the amendment the word "recommend." I do it for the purpose of saying that, in my opinion, that provision is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and not in conflict with the resolutions of 1798, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] seemed to suppose that a similar amendment was. [Great laughter.] But what I desire to say is in reply to the things which have been made at Virginia and Maryland, in respect to the number of officers which those two States have in the Navy. Now, sir, the history of that matter is this: In the late war with Great Britain, the States of Virginia and Maryland, and other Atlantic States, so far from coming before this Government to ask an undue patronage, the President appealed to the patriotism of the young men of the country to enter into the naval service, which was then in its infancy. That call was promptly responded to by Maryland, by Virginia, and by New Jersey, and the other Atlantic States; and it is in consequence, or mainly in consequence of that, that there are so many officers of the higher grade in the Navy from those States, and subsequently it was natural that those living on the sea-coast should have been most anxious to enter that service. Well, sir, a number of years ago, upon the motion of a gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Parmenter,) at that time the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, a provision was inserted in the naval bill, that no new appointments should be made into the Navy from those States which had received more than their share, according to the ratio of representation, until equality between the States should be established. And what has been the result? I beg leave to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to that point: What has been the result? There has not been a midshipman appointed from Virginia from the time of the passage of that law to this day, and there probably cannot be another for the next eight or ten years. In other words, so far as this patronage or appointment to office is concerned, by the action of the Congress of the United States, the States of Maryland, Virginia, and New Jersey, and those other States to which this proscription applies, have actually been punished for their patriotism.

Mr. STUART. It may be true that there have not been appointments made which have been charged to Virginia since that time, but there have been appointments made of individuals who resided in that State. I know of one instance where a boy was sent from the State of Virginia to Ohio to reside just long enough to gain a residence in that State, in order to get an appointment in the Navy from the State of Ohio.

Now, sir, the evil I mean to strike at is clearly indicated in my amendment. I mean the thing shall be called by its right name. If an appointment is made and charged to my district, I want the appointee shall reside there, and not be a resident of Virginia or any other portion of the country. It now perpetrates great injustice upon most of the districts of this country, and as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] says, upon the public service also.

Mr. ORR. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken on the motion, and it was not agreed to.

The question was next taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. BAYLY, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HENN. I move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I offer the following amendment to the amendment, and I shall make a remark or two in regard to it:

And hereafter in the appointment of midshipmen, the nomination of members of Congress as to applications from their respective districts shall be respected and observed in the same manner, and to the same extent, as is now the practice in reference to cadets at West Point.

Now, sir, I wish to state that I have been here for nearly six years, and I will say to the Chair, in the presence of this House, that I have never been able to get the first solitary appointment from my district, which is large enough to have had two Representatives upon this floor—I have never been able to get a solitary appointment to the Annapolis Academy.

To those who are friends to that Academy, I will say this: that when they exclude one half of the nation, they must expect to have to fight it, on the very existence of the institution.

All parts of the Union should be permitted to share alike, and to be educated alike, to sustain the flag of this country upon the ocean. They ought to look for children from every section of the Union, and then they may look for something that is grand in its effect, in a national point of view, in concentrating the affections and patriotism of the whole people upon the whole country.

But when they act upon that poor, pitiful, wretched, I might say shameful, principle of favoritism which has marked the conduct of this Department, they can expect, and will receive, nothing but war and condemnation upon the institution itself, and the Annapolis Academy will go where it shall be heard of no more.

The amendment I have proposed would put that institution upon the same footing with West Point, and upon no other footing, and would allow every section the high privilege of defending the flag of our country upon the ocean; and that in order to do so one cadet shall be appointed from each district. Then every section and every district feeling itself interested will feel bound to uphold the institution; and favoritism, instead of throwing that interest all to the North or to the South, will distribute it among us all equally, North, South, East, and West. That is what will put it upon the ground upon which the West Point Academy stands, so that the same principle which satisfies us now, and enables us to sustain the institution of West Point, in spite of strong opposition against it for years together, will enable us to sustain the Annapolis institution.

Put that institution upon that footing in regard to appointments, and you will do a good to the country, and satisfy the wishes of all; but if you draw a distinction between them, and in favor of the Annapolis institution, so help me God, I shall, and every man in the world ought to take pride in endeavoring to tear down this, or any other institution of like character, which does or would deny to the whole Union the right to share equally its privileges.

That is the position in which it now stands, and I ask that my amendment may be adopted; for I say there is nothing now but favoritism, and this debate has elicited already evidence of it sufficient, when it becomes plain that a district can be cut off from the public school, not for four or six, but for ten years at a time.

Mr. CARTTER. I am opposed to the amendment, but agree with its sentiment. We have just adopted an amendment which covers the whole ground.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. My amendment was designed as a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If it was offered as a substitute for the amendment, is not the substitute amendable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is amendable.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Then I move to amend the substitute, as follows:

Provided, That members of Congress making a nomination, shall not nominate his own son, or the son of any other member.

I am in hopes this House will adopt all these amendments, and I concur most fully in the sentiments expressed by the member from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I am satisfied that a system of favoritism has been practiced in these two Departments, both so far as West Point and Annapolis are concerned; but while we are striking at one branch of favoritism, I think we ought to strike at the other. I have been informed that members sometimes make their way into the Congress of the United States decidedly opposed to this Naval School, and West Point Academy, but some how or other, after being members of Congress, their sons find their way into the Naval School, or into West Point, and by the time the bills come up making appropriations for the support of these institutions, these members of Congress, with almost the suddenness of a flash of lightning, as quick and as sudden as that which poured upon Saul of Tarsus, all at once conceive these institutions to be indispensable to promote the interests of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The gentleman does not mean to insinuate that I have a son there? I have no son.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman has no son, I suppose that is his misfortune, and not his fault. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought to be adopted with the other, and I am glad to see the proposition to correct this matter come from the quarter that it does. But the argument made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] seems to me to have but little in it. He makes a constitutional question. I know there are some gentlemen who take the Constitution under their peculiar guardianship, and always stand ready to defend it whenever there is a real or seeming encroachment upon it. I think there is no violation of the Constitution, or of the resolutions of '98 and '99.

I remember that the gentleman voted for a bill we had before Congress for raising ten regiments of troops; and in that bill we provided that the Executive should make his appointments from the captains, so far as the highest officers were concerned; and we have now, by law, required the members of Congress to make certain nominations, and the President makes the appointments. Why cannot the same principle be applied in nominating applicants for places in the Naval School, which has been applied in all those other cases? We have precedents over and over again upon this subject, and there is no infraction or violation of the Constitution in that particular. It only directs the President to make his appointments from the Congressional districts, and this principle has been practiced over and over again. But so far as the Old Dominion is concerned, I will speak of her with the greatest respect; for I know she is entitled to credit, and is sometimes called the mother of statesmen; but I think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] has little to apprehend from that quarter; for there is no danger hereafter of appointments being made from Virginia, for it is said there is no room left there, everybody having received appointments.

But in this connection, I may say, I am decidedly opposed to this School, and to the West Point Academy. This Government ought to cut these institutions up by their roots. Not that I am opposed to science in military affairs—not that I am opposed to science being introduced into the Navy—but let the States establish military and naval schools. Let the States qualify young men and bring them forward, and in a very short time this Government will have a supply far more substantial, and better qualified to meet all demands, than it now has from these schools. I think those two schools ought to be abolished, and that the different States should train up their own young men for the Navy and the Army, and thereby diminish the centralizing influence which is growing up, and becoming so strong that it cannot be resisted by the States.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am opposed to this amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

That gentleman seems to have a disposition always to bring himself into collision with me in argument. I have not sought it, nor have I avoided it; but I beg leave to say that his amendment is perfectly unnecessary, because the abuse he complains of, in respect to West Point, not only has not occurred, but it is impossible for it to occur, without a violation of existing regulations.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman, I will ask him if there are not members of Congress here now who have sons there?

Mr. BAYLY. If there is a member of Congress who has his son there appointed from any other district than the district in which he resides, it is in violation of law.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not the point. We are talking about members of Congress having sons appointed.

Mr. BAYLY. I take the gentleman upon the point he made. He complains that members of Congress have had appointments of their sons made for other districts than those in which they reside. I say if they have, it is in violation of law, and being in violation of existing law, no new law is necessary to remedy the mischief.

The regulations require that the appointee shall be appointed from the district in which he actually resides. That is the law, and if such an appointment, as the gentleman speaks of, has been made it was in violation of the law, and his amendment will not correct the mischief, because it will add nothing to an existing law.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will say that the declaration of the gentleman from Virginia is satisfactory upon the point to which he has addressed his remarks, that where an appointment is made for a district outside of it, it is in violation of law. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he knows of any member upon this floor whose son was appointed under unlawful circumstances, that he will name him, and let the matter be brought home. Those who have children of ten or twelve years of age should be charged with their education.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Virginia, has made a wholly false issue. That amendment does not provide with regard to the appointment of sons of members of Congress out of the district. He has missed the issue entirely. It provides that a member of Congress shall not nominate his own son, or the son of another member of Congress.

Mr. BAYLY. When the gentleman brings forward an amendment of that sort, and in support of it complains of a practice in violation of existing law, he ought to specify to whom his remarks apply. They do not apply to me, as it is well known I have no son. When he makes such a charge as he has made before the American Congress, he ought to point to the individual who has been accessory to this violation of the law. The law, I say, is, that the appointee shall come from the district in which he lives. The domicile of the child is the domicile of the father, and I say, such being the law, it is impossible that one member of Congress upon this floor has appointed the son of another member of Congress. The fact is that every member of this Congress resides in his own district, and his domicile is the domicile of his son, and the son of no member of Congress could possibly be appointed to West Point from another district without a violation of law. I am free to say I do not believe such a thing has occurred either of a member appointing his own son, or of having him appointed from the district of another member.

Mr. BUEL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to, there being, upon a division—ayes 73, noes 15.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 240, making appropriations for the Navy for the year ending June 30, 1853, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PRICE asked that the Clerk be directed to furnish him with a copy of the petition and papers of James R. Howison; which was so ordered.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Amos Proctor; which was read a first and second time, laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, moved that the House adjourn; which motion was agreed to.

And the House then adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 19, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to an extension of the reconnaissance of the coast of California by the Coast Survey, south to Cape St. Lucas; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a report of the Postmaster General, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the clerks in that Department; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of David K. Arey, praying that a register may be granted to the bark Queen; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWARD presented a memorial of claimants against Brazil, to whom awards were made by the commission appointed to adjudicate those claims, praying that an appropriation may be made to pay the balance of the amounts awarded them; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the "bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1853, and for other purposes," during the morning hour. I believe that it is the only chance we shall obtain to get up and consider that bill.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw the motion for a moment, so as to enable me to report a bill on which I am desirous that action should be taken by the Senate. I refer to the bill reducing the postage on newspapers. I am satisfied it will not occupy more than five or ten minutes.

Mr. HUNTER. I would cheerfully give way to the Senator if he were the only one who would occupy the time, but I know that others would follow. I therefore feel it to be my duty to persist in the motion. I do not know that the Senate will agree to take up the bill; still I must persist in pressing the motion.

Mr. HALE. I hope the motion will not be agreed to, and for this reason: I want one day, before the Senate adjourns, to have a vote, which may be considered a fair vote, on the question whether the Senate is disposed to take up the homestead bill. I want to try that question this morning, and if it is voted down, I will be silent on the subject during the rest of the session. I want one fair vote, so that we may see how the feeling is; and if the bill is voted down, I assure the Senate that I will not say another word about it, but let it go.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the proposition to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; and not on taking up the homestead bill.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have one word to say to the Senator from New Hampshire. If he will agree to keep silent for the residue of the session, I will do all I can to forward his proposition for taking up the homestead bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. I cannot agree to that; because I think it would be unjust to the Senate and the country. It would be unjust to the country were I to keep still, because the general interest might thereby suffer; and it would be unjust to the Senator from Missouri; because, were I to keep still, he would, in consequence, be kept far too busy. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to know from the Senator from Virginia, whether it is his purpose to displace the river and harbor bill by this motion?

Mr. HUNTER. My proposition is to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill during the morning hour. I did not suppose that I could do more than that.

Mr. DAVIS. But will the Senator say that he will be ready to lay the bill down at one o'clock, to take up the special order?

Mr. HUNTER. If a majority of the Senate should say so, I will not be obstinate. I will not attempt to resist the proposition, although I think we ought to be making some progress with this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Then the Senator will continue to occupy the whole day with this bill if the Senate will permit him. I cannot vote to take up the bill under such circumstances.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I did not expect to displace the regular order of business after the expiration of the morning hour. I did not suppose that the Senate, having taken up the river and harbor bill, would lay it down to continue the consideration of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. Whatever may be the decision of a majority of the Senate I will acquiesce in it. I shall not be pertinacious in regard to the question.

Mr. DAVIS. That the gentleman from Virginia cannot avoid doing, I suppose. He must of necessity conform to the decision of the Senate on the subject. I cannot, therefore, consent to take up this bill under such circumstances. If it is not to supersede the regular order of business, I am willing that the bill should come up.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have said to the Senator from Virginia that I would go with him to take up the civil and diplomatic bill, provided it is understood that we shall proceed to the consideration of the special order when the hour of one arrives. But if this bill is to displace the river and harbor bill, I cannot consent to take it up.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall not resist any proposition to proceed to the consideration of the special order when the hour arrives.

Mr. BRIGHT. With that understanding I will go with the Senator from Virginia to take up the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. MANGUM. I hope the Senator from Virginia will allow reports to be made. I have not been able to be in my seat for two or three weeks, and I wish to make a report. I hope that by unanimous consent the Senate will indulge me.

Mr. HUNTER. As the Senator from North Carolina has been sick and unable to be present for some time, I hope he may have the unanimous consent of the Senate to present his report. I shall consent, but I must, after that, persist in my motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall consent to allow the Senator from North Carolina to present his report; but before I give that consent I wish to say that I have struggled for five months to obtain one day for the consideration of the territorial bill, and have not yet been able to get it up. I cannot therefore consent to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill or any other bill which will deprive us of an opportunity of acting upon these local bills, and I hope we shall be permitted to make our reports during the morning hour. I now give my consent to the honorable Senator from North Carolina to make his report.

Mr. MANGUM. I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the petition of Mary Martin, administratrix of Robert Lindsay, deceased, praying compensation for the loss of a slave captured during the last war with Great Britain, to report a bill for her relief.

The bill was read a first time by its title, and ordered to a second reading.

The PRESIDENT. The motion now is to take up the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the current fiscal year.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope we shall be allowed to hand in the bills and reports which we have on our tables.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it is of more importance at this stage of the session, that we should take up the civil and diplomatic bill during the morning hour, rather than to devote it to reports and other new business. If we are only to have the morning hour, we shall have little enough time for the consideration of those amendments which the committee have prepared. If Senators are prepared to say that they will adopt these appropriation bills as they come from the House of Representatives, without any amendment, they will be justified in the course they propose to pursue; but if they wish to make any amendments to the bills, they ought to have sufficient time to devote to their consideration. It would be well for the Committee on Finance to know what course the Senate really mean to take; for it is useless for us to expend our time in examining the appropriation bills, and in preparing amendments to them, if the Senate proposes to take them just as they come up from the House of Representatives. These bills have been laid aside for any and every purpose. The Indian appropriation bill was here a fortnight after it was reported before it was disposed of; and it was laid aside for the purpose of taking up almost every other bill.

Now, the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, which is the greatest and most important appropriation bill of the session, has been laid aside for a mere local bill—the river and harbor bill. I have not opposed this with any pertinacity, and the Senate have determined to devote the greater part of the day to it. All that I now ask is, that the business in which the whole country is most deeply concerned may have devoted to it the morning hour. I wish that point to be tested. I desire to see whether the Senate will lay aside this bill for a merely local bill. If the Senate say that they will not devote the morning hour to this bill, I shall understand that decision and acquiesce in it; but I wish to know what is their determination in regard to this matter, so that the responsibility may not rest with me, or with the Committee on Finance, but with the Senate. When the general subject of these appropriation bills was under consideration some time ago in this Chamber, we were lavish in expression of complaints against the House of Representatives for the manner in which they transacted their business in relation to the appropriation bills. And how are we now proceeding? I wish the Senate to take the responsibility of passing over this appropriation bill, and that being done, I will acquiesce without a murmur.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am afraid that the honorable Senator will not do justice to his motion if he presses it in the midst of the morning business. There are several bills which ought to be presented for the purpose of being printed and laid on the tables of Senators; and, although some of us may be favorable to his motion, we will oppose it if it is presented in this way. I opposed the motion of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin the other day to take up the homestead bill, because he introduced it at an untimely period—in the midst of the morning business.

Mr. BORLAND asked for the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone all other business, for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bell, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, and Upham—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Borland, Bright, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Wade, and Walker—17.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance, with various amendments; the first of which was to increase the appropriation "for compensation and mileage of Senators" from $104,776 to $110,776.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out the following:

For the contingent expenses of the Senate, viz:
 For printing.....$35,000
 For binding.....15,000
 For lithographing.....13,500
 For books.....12,000
 For stationery.....5,000
 For newspapers.....2,500
 For Congressional Globe.....6,000
 For reporting proceedings, &c.....22,000
 For messengers, pages, laborers, police, horses and carriages.....20,000
 For miscellaneous items.....19,000

And insert in lieu thereof:

For printing, binding, lithographing, stationery, books, newspapers, Congressional Globe, reporting proceedings, messengers, pages, laborers, police, horses and carriages, and miscellaneous items, $150,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I prefer this clause of the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives, specifying each of the items. The committee propose to put $20,000 more for contingencies. That ought to be enough to be added, and let each item stand by itself. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no feeling in relation to that matter; but it was thought by the Committee on Finance that it would be more convenient to keep the accounts consolidated than to appropriate for each item specifically, as the bill, as it comes from the House, proposes. It may be found that there was not enough appropriated under one head and too much under another. In this way difficulties might arise from the specific appropriations, which would not arise if the appropriation were made in gross, as proposed by the committee. I, however, have no feeling about the matter. These are the reasons which induced the committee to report the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. If I understand this matter, it is this: For the expenses of the Senate, the House of Representatives have appropriated specifically for each object. The Committee on Finance propose to put the whole together, and appropriate, as heretofore, an aggregate amount. I am in favor of the proposition of the committee. We know that occasions do arise when we are obliged to have funds under the immediate control of the Senate for contingent purposes. If the specific items are put down in this way, and one item should turn out to be too small—no matter how much too large the others might be—you could not control the fund at all. It will have the effect, in my opinion, if the clause passes as it came from the House, of greatly embarrassing the Senate. It is going contrary to any precedent, and I cannot see the use of it. I believe the Committee on Finance is right, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, under the heading "Library of Congress," to strike out—

"For contingent expenses of said Library, $800;
"For purchase of books for said Library, $75,000,"

—and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following:

To defray freight and other expenses incurred under the act to regulate the exchange of certain documents and other publications, approved June 26th, 1846, the sum of $1,000; and that the said act is hereby repealed.

For purchase of books for said Library, and contingent expenses thereof, and for the purchase of furniture for the same, $40,000.

For continuing the preparation and publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition, including the expenses of the green house, and for the settlement of arrears due on the creation of said green-house, $25,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. I call for a division of the question.

Mr. HUNTER. These amendments are at the suggestion of the Committee on the Library. The chairman of that committee can explain them.

Mr. PEARCE. The Committee on Finance were under the impression that an appropriation of $40,000 would be sufficient for books for the Library. But that reduction was so strongly objected to by the members of the Library Committee on the part of the House, that we finally agreed to recommend to the Senate to reinstate the amount proposed by the House. I therefore move to amend the amendment, by increasing the appropriation for books for the Library from $40,000 to $75,000.

Mr. BORLAND. If I understood the amendment of the committee, it contains an appropriation for continuing the publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition. That has been in progress almost ever since I was born. I think the appropriations for its publication were about the first of which I ever read. I do not know where it is to end. I would like to have some explanation to know whether there is to be any limit to it.

Mr. PEARCE. I will endeavor to give the Senator an explanation. In the year 1842, when the Exploring Expedition returned from the South Seas, Congress passed an act directing the results of that expedition to be prepared for publication, and to be printed. They went so far as to specify the particular style in which the works should be got up, and that the example of the work should be the great French voyage of the Astrolabe and Zeelee. The Committee on the Library, thus authorized and required, proceeded to make contracts for the publication, not only of the Narrative of the Expedition—which has been done—but various scientific reports which were to be made by scientific men employed in the expedition, or by others competent to describe these collections.

These scientific reports relate to almost every branch of natural science—to all the branches of natural history—to hydrography and meteorology, and the physical characteristics of races. We have published one work upon corals and zoophytes—a work which is of the very highest authority with men of science in this country. It was a great desideratum in that line of knowledge; and it has been pronounced by the most celebrated geologists as being one of the most admirable books ever published in that department of science. Then we have published a work on ethnology, and philology, which has been supplied by Mr. Hale. Another work has been published on the physical races of men—a work somewhat similar in its character to the great work of Pritchard. It is estimated of so much value, that in England it has been republished in a cheap edition, by Bohn. The first edition has already been exhausted, and another has been called for, and is now in the course of execution. Then we have provided another work upon the ornithology and mammalogy of the expedition. We have another upon the geology of the cruise; and a volume on meteorology has been published.

We have made contracts for the publication of other scientific reports; for example, we have a contract pending with Dr. Gray, the first botanist of the United States. Mr. Breckinridge has been employed, and has nearly completed, a work on the Ferns. Professor Bailey, of West Point, has been employed on the mathematical department. Dr. Gould and Mr. Drayton have been employed upon a volume of conchology, which has been printed. So, sir, from time to time, we have been publishing these works, and preparing others for the press.

Several of them are nearly completed. Contracts are outstanding for the publication of most of them. I believe in two years they can be entirely completed, but certainly, as the committee were instructed by law to cause them to be prepared and to be printed, they had no discretion but to do so after the style of the French work, which the law made the standard. They have, in order to save expense, made contracts by which they think the burden upon the Treasury will be lessened. Instead of employing some scientific gentlemen at annual salaries, they thought it better to make contracts for specific sums. Those contracts have been made and must be fulfilled. The Government cannot creditably stop the payment for that which has been executed in whole or in part. If gentlemen think there is any abuse in this thing—that the work has continued a greater length of time than is proper, let them compare it with those published in other countries, and see whether this publication is not more extensive, more valuable than any similar one which has ever been executed under the auspices of any other Government. But if the result should be unfavorable—which I apprehend will not be the case—then let Congress, by law, repeal the act of 1842, and make a provision for the satisfaction of the contracts which are existing under the law.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to what had been done in this matter, or for the purpose of calling in question the legality and propriety of what the Joint Committee on the Library had done. Nor did I rise for the purpose of casting any imputation upon the character of the work, to deny that it was valuable, or anything of the sort. But I did rise for the purpose of getting such information as the Senator from Maryland has very kindly furnished. I have no doubt that the work is a valuable one. I have no doubt that the Committee on the Library have faithfully and judiciously performed the duties required of them by law in that regard. But this is the fact in regard to myself, and I do not know how many other Senators may be in the same situation. I have only just seen this work; and I do not know what use is to be made of it after it is published. The usual custom, I believe, has been, when a work has been published under order of Congress, that it shall, by some means or other, come into the possession of those by whom, and for whose use it was supposed to be published. I do not know where this work is. I do not know how much it costs a year. It is certainly a fair question to be submitted to either House of Congress, whether it is regarded as sufficiently valuable to be continued—whether it is worth the money which has already been paid for it. I take a great interest in all objects of science. I am as desirous to see them prosecuted judiciously, ably, and successfully as any one; but I cannot say I am prepared to go quite as far as this system seems to have gone already. I do not know that I am prepared, as a member of Congress, to engage the Government in the work of collecting materials and publishing books in every branch of science—geology, ornithology, ethnology, conchology, and a great many others, the names of which I do not recall just at this moment. I desired, however, when I rose, to get information as to what had been done with this matter, so that Congress and the country might know what was the character of the work that had been done in regard to it—and be able to form an opinion as to whether we should have any more of it. If there have been contracts made under the law, of course we are bound to meet them.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I have looked a little into this subject, and with a number of other gentlemen, I have come to the conclusion that this publication ought certainly shortly to come to an end. This Exploring Expedition was out four years collecting information, and it has been about nine years publishing the results. We are told that this is to be continued two years longer. That will be eleven years to publish what it took these gentlemen four years to collect. That looks somewhat unreasonable.

When we come to look at the amounts which have been heretofore appropriated for this purpose, we must also come to the conclusion that the sums which have been received are unreasonable, and that this is a book-making job. I do not design to cast any imputation whatever on the committee which has had it in charge. The law gave them their directions. I think the project was improperly originated, and that many of those connected with it have taken a great while to make the publication.

On the 3d of March, 1843, $20,000 were appropriated for this object. On the 3d of March, 1845, $10,000 were appropriated "for completing the publication of the work on the Exploring Expedition, including the printing of an extra number of charts." So that in 1845, in the appropriation bill, we made an appropriation of $10,000 for completing this publication. And now, in 1852, we have an item proposed to be inserted in the appropriation bill of $25,000 for doing the same thing. I am a little like the Senator from Arkansas. I want to know where this thing is to be ended? And in order to get some information upon this subject, and to draw the attention of the Senate and of the country to it, I ask them to look at the appropriations which have heretofore been made. In 1846, $30,000 were appropriated; in 1847, $15,000; in 1848, $30,753. In the appropriation bill of the 3d of March, 1849, I find two items of $15,000 each for this object, making $30,000 for that year. In 1850, $29,000 were appropriated. In 1851, $25,000 more were appropriated for continuing the preparation and publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition, including the pay of the scientific corps, &c., and for printing, paper, and other contracts under the law of 1842 authorizing the preparation and publication of the works. Why, sir, it seems to enlarge every year. These sums, in the whole, amount to $185,753 for the publication of this work.

The Exploring Expedition was out four years, and it has taken nine years, at a cost to the country of over $185,000, to publish the results of their explorations in those four years. Yet, now, $25,000 more are asked for the continuation of the publication. With the Senator from Arkansas, I want to know how long this is to be continued? I have given the Senate the total amount of appropriations for this object. That amount, I believe, does not include the expenses of sending out the expedition. I have thought it proper to bring these facts thus briefly to the notice of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am exceedingly glad to find that at least somebody else besides myself has given attention to this subject. Ever since I have had the honor of holding a seat on the floor of the Senate, I have steadily and uniformly voted against all these appropriations, and, in my feeble way, have endeavored to expose them. But I have been gratified, as we all have been this morning, by the very able, learned, and accomplished chairman of the Committee on the Library, [Mr. PEARCE,] who has given us a dissertation upon the usefulness and value of these scientific works. Now, I am going to hazard an opinion. It may be rash, and perhaps—I had almost said—I may hazard but little in making it. But I venture the assertion, that of all the humbugs that have ever been imposed upon the world in the shape of scientific matter, the Exploring Expedition of the United States of America will stand out a gigantic pyramid, so far as it has done anything pertinent to the purposes of an exploring expedition.

That the committee, under the law, or under their construction of it, have engaged on a great many of these scientific works men who never saw the country to which this expedition was sent, and never went near enough to the sea-shore to dig a clam, I do not doubt. Such men have been employed to write scientific works on ethnology and conchology, and all other kinds of ologies in the world; and they may have got up beautiful books, illustrated with splendid prints. I do not doubt it. But it might just as well have come in under any other department as under the Exploring Expedition. They may have brought home specimens of mineralogy, and conchology, and botany, and ethnology, and so on, to the end of the chapter; and they may have enlisted a corps of scientific men in this country to write essays and illustrations upon them. But I do not understand that to be the pertinent and proper work of an exploring expedition. Nor do I suppose it was such a work as the men who framed the original law had in view. I suppose they had some idea of exploring expeditions from what they had read of the voyages and travels of men in other times who made exploring expeditions—such men as Captain Cook and Christopher Columbus. How many ethnologists, conchologists, and mammalogists, and mineralogists did they take with them? Did they have such a corps employed for ten or twelve years after them at an expense of $20,000 or $30,000 a year—not to bring forth the results of the investigation, but to publish essays and treatises upon them?

The honorable Senator from Arkansas says, that so little was the work known, that it was only by accident that he came across it. Now, if so scientific and learned a man as the Senator from Arkansas had his attention directed to this subject by the merest accident, how do you suppose these publications have reached the eye of the great mass of the people who do not move in his sphere—men most likely to be benefited by things really practical?

I beg the honorable Senator from Maryland not to understand me as saying anything disrespectful or discourteous to him. I believe he did once consider that some remarks made by me, on a certain occasion, bore that character. I would rather never open my mouth, from now to the day I go to my grave, than be guilty of saying or doing anything which might be disrespectful or discourteous to him. But I believe this thing is entirely and totally wrong, and that the best way—I wish the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania would give his attention to it—will be to draw up some amendment which will stop the thing, and stop it now. There is no other way to do it. Let the honorable Senator from Maryland, who is at the head of the Committee on the Library, tell us how much is necessary to redeem the public faith, so far as any contracts have been made under the law, and pay that amount. I shall be glad to do it. I would pay to stop the publication rather than pay to have it continued; because I do not believe that it is in pursuance of the intention of the law that authorized this expedition.

Now, sir, I have a single word to say about the other part of the amendment as to the cutting down of the appropriation for books for the Library from $75,000 to $40,000. There are $35,000 proposed to be cut off from that source, and $25,000 of that amount are to go towards continuing the publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that there is a motion pending, made by the Senator from Maryland, to amend that section by striking out $40,000 and inserting $75,000, so as to leave the amount as it originally stood—$75,000.

Mr. HALE. I am glad of it; but as I am upon the subject I will ask a question. If you take the money you have expended upon the works of the Exploring Expedition, I think I am not at a loss to say that you can purchase the largest and most valuable library that there is upon this continent. There is not a library on the continent of North America that may not be bought—or one equal to it in the value of the works, and the number of the works—with the sums that have been squandered upon this Exploring Expedition. I ask, then, if it is politic or proper to limit the one to enlarge the other?

Having stated these objections, I leave the matter to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and hope he will make some proposition by which we can have an end put to the Exploring Expedition.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state again that the present proposition is to amend the amendment by striking out $40,000 and inserting $75,000 for the Library of Congress, which does not relate to the question which is being discussed with regard to the Exploring Expedition.

Mr. PEARCE. I am aware, sir, that the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire were not applicable particularly to the proposition before the Senate; but as he has indulged in them I may be allowed a few words of reply.

I beg leave to say that this Exploring Expedition was sent out for two objects; first, to make surveys of islands and coasts, some of which were altogether, and others almost unknown, for the benefit of our whale fisheries and the commerce on the Pacific ocean. Combined with this purpose was another, which was to advantage and benefit science. It was supposed that the United States Government, as well as all other nations, owed a debt to the advancement of science, and that it would redeem, or partly redeem, that obligation by connecting with this Exploring Expedition a scientific corps, whose duty it should be to make collections in all branches of natural history.

The Senator from New Hampshire seems to suppose that we collected in four years materials which, strangely enough, require some ten or twelve years to be reduced into proper form for publication. He seems to suppose, also, that those engaged in the preparation of these publications were not engaged in the collection of the materials. Therein he is entirely mistaken. Mr. Dana, for example, the geologist, who has written two of the most valuable works, which I have already named, was with the expedition all the time. Mr. Drayton, who was concerned in the preparation of the conchology of the expedition, was with it all the time. So was Mr. Hale, the philologist, who wrote a work on ethnography. So was Mr. Pickering, who has written a work on the races of men; and so were several others of the employees.

Mr. HALE. Messrs. Bailey and Gould were not with the expedition.

Mr. PEARCE. Messrs. Bailey and Gould were not; but then it must be recollected that there were many persons employed who were good field naturalists, who were competent to make collections in different branches of science, but who might not be competent to describe those collections. It requires a very high and rare degree of skill to describe new objects in these recherche sciences, for so they are. We are obliged, when we obtain the materials, to employ competent persons to prepare them for publication. The Senator, I presume, would not have had incompetent persons employed. We employed the only men in the country whom we could get, who were competent to make proper descriptions of those new objects of science, and to discriminate them from those which were known before. The purpose was not to write essays or treatises. There has been nothing in the shape of a treatise connected with the expedition, unless it may be the work of Mr. Pickering on the races of men. Everything else published, connected with the expedition, was but a description of new objects of natural history; and, in order to do that, the minutest knowledge of the different branches of those sciences was absolutely requisite.

Now, as to the time employed. I stated before, that similar expeditions in other countries have required greater time, even, than that consumed in spreading the results of this expedition before the public; and this expedition has accomplished more than any foreign expedition which has been sent out.

The amount of money expended has been large to be sure, but no such work can be executed without the expenditure of a large amount of money. The mere engraving of the plates necessary to illustrate these objects, is the largest part of the expense, and without them everything else is valueless. I presume Congress knew—if they did not they ought to have known—when they devised this law, that a very large sum of money would be required, because the experience of all countries was open to them, and they might have known, if they had chosen to examine, that the expense would be great; and if they did not examine, their own negligence—I will not say their own ignorance—is to blame.

Now, as to the value of these publications, I am very sure that no member of the Senate—and I make no odious discrimination—is entirely competent to venture an opinion as to their true value. Those only are competent to form an opinion of their value, who are acquainted with the sciences of which they treat. I believe that they are worth everything which they have cost us, if we value these matters according to the standard which the experience of other nations has set up.

The Committee on the Library had no desire to prolong the execution of the works. They had every desire to hasten their completion. They have taken a vast deal of trouble—for which I believe they have not had due credit—in order to have the work completed within a reasonable time, and reduce the expenses as much as possible.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, when the amendment of the Committee on Finance was read, I called for a division of the question, in order that we might have the sense of the Senate separately upon that portion of it which relates to the publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition. I hope that we may have a division of the question. But I understand that the motion now pending, is to amend the amendment of the Finance Committee, by striking out the proposed sum of $40,000 for the purchase of books for the Library, and to substitute $75,000.

The PRESIDENT. That is the proposition.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope that proposition will not be adopted. It appears that the Senate Committee on the Library were of opinion that $40,000 were all that would be required at the present time. I conversed some weeks since with a very well-informed gentleman on the subject, who told me that $30,000, in addition to the amount already appropriated, would be sufficient, in his judgment, to purchase a better library than that which we had before, and that that amount would be a liberal appropriation at the present time. Undoubtedly we shall have to make another appropriation next year, or the year after; and it appears to me that $30,000 is quite as much as we shall need for the present at least. We shall want something to fit up the Library. How many thousand dollars will be required for that purpose? I do not know, but I believe, if the amount of $40,000 is retained, it will be enough to fit up the Library, and to purchase all the books that will be needed to be purchased between this and the next session of Congress. If not, I am willing to increase the amount for fitting up the Library room. I hope the amount of $40,000, as proposed by the Committee on Finance, will remain.

A few words now as to the other portion of the amendment. I desire to say, that ever since I have been in the Senate, whenever the appropriation for continuing the works of the Exploring Expedition has been before us, we have been led to suppose that we were nearly through—that we were approaching the end. It is obvious that so long as we make these appropriations, we shall never reach the end, because it is perfectly competent to employ scientific authors who know nothing practically, except what they may have derived from books. I hope, therefore, that an end will be put to this matter, and that we will strike out the appropriation for continuing the preparation and publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition, and that we shall incorporate into this bill a provision declaring that all laws authorizing the preparation of the works of the Exploring Expedition be repealed. I shall propose such an amendment if we are able to strike out the appropriation now proposed to be inserted. I understand—and if I am wrong, the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Library can correct me—that Commodore Wilkes has a copyright of these works; that while we publish them, he has a copy-right for their sale.

Mr. PEARCE. Does the gentleman desire an answer now?

Mr. BRADBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEARCE. I would reply, that this work was first put under contract by the Committee on the Library when I was not a member of it. The agreement was then made by the Hon. Mr. Tappan, then chairman of the Committee on the Library, with Captain Wilkes, by which Captain Wilkes was to write a Narrative of the Expedition, without receiving any pay for it; and was to write it out of office hours. He was required to devote his time during office hours to the preparation of the charts of the expedition, of which some two hundred or three hundred have already been published, with great advantage to all the custom-houses of the country where they have been sold. Mr. Wilkes, I believe, did write the narrative out of office hours. In consideration of that he was allowed, after the Government had got the quantity and number of the work which they were to receive, to have a copyright for the Narrative. But there is not a copyright for any of the other works. No one has any copyright to them. They are as free to all the publishers in this country as anything else. It is the Narrative only which has been copyrighted, and that was done under an agreement made by Mr. Tappan with Captain Wilkes, under the circumstances which I have stated.

Mr. BRADBURY. It would seem that in regard to the publication of the Narrative, a copyright was secured, while Congress made the publication; and the other officers who accompanied the expedition were, I believe, required to turn over their journals to enable the commander to prepare the work for which he had the copy-right. It would seem, then, that there could be no particular claim for damages, and that we might as well terminate the publication of the work now as at any other time.

Mr. PEARCE. The Narrative has been completed.

Mr. BRADBURY. It is obvious that so long ago as 1845, Congress was led to believe that the whole subject had terminated; and I supposed that the legitimate objects of the law of 1842 were accomplished at that time, and that no further legislation was necessary. It is time that we should stop this abuse, for it really has the appearance, to use the language of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, of being a book-making job. I hope, therefore, that we will retain the amendment as it has been reported by the Committee on Finance, with the exception of the item as to the Exploring Expedition.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question on each proposition separately. The first question will be on the proposition of the committee to strike out these two items:

"For contingent expenses of said Library, $800.

"For purchase of books for said Library, $75,000."

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The next question will be on inserting the following item, reported by the committee:

"To defray freight, and other expenses incurred under the act to regulate the exchange of certain documents, and other publications, approved June 26, 1848, the sum of $1,000; and that the said act is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The next item reported by the committee is to insert the following:

"For purchase of books for said Library, and for contingent expenses thereof; and for the purchase of furniture for the same, $40,000."

The Senator from Maryland proposes to amend this amendment by striking out "40," and inserting "75."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question will now be on inserting the following:

"For continuing the preparation and publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition, including the expenses of the green-house, and for the settlement of arrears due on the erection of said green-house, $25,000."

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, as I understand the honorable Senator from Maryland, this appropriation is to execute a contract which was entered into in pursuance of law. I cannot, for my life, see in what way we can rid ourselves of that obligation. I mention this matter for the benefit of my honorable friends from Pennsylvania, Maine, and Arkansas. As I understand it, these contracts have been entered into in pursuance of law, and it requires this amount to execute them. If I am mistaken, I wish to be corrected.

Mr. PEARCE. I would say this: that a number of contracts have been entered into in pursuance of law; but there are one or two of the works which we are now publishing, for which the persons employed receive a salary. I do not know that these can properly be called contracts. The major part of the works, however, are under contract.

Mr. SHIELDS. It amounts pretty much to the same thing. The view I take of the matter is this—and it goes to some propositions which have been made here within a few days—that in entering into a great enterprise of this kind we ought to calculate in some measure the expense that will attend it. We had a proposition before us the other day for the survey and reconnaissance of the Northern ocean. We seem never to calculate the vast expense that must attend such an enterprise. I am unable and incapable of estimating the value to the country of this enterprise; but I can say this, that there has come to me from scientific journals in this country, and in other countries, an account of this expedition, which has rated it above any expedition of the kind that has ever gone forth from any country. I understand it has brought forward an amount of natural science, has elicited information on natural history such as no expedition of the kind has ever heretofore done. Such is my understanding of the matter—such is the manner in which the scientific men of other countries regard this expedition.

Why, it is a most extraordinary idea to suppose that nine or ten years is a long while to be employed in preparing works of this kind; because we know that it takes a long life for such men as Humboldt and Audubon to attain perfection in such sciences. It takes men a long lifetime in other countries to work out one branch of science of this character. Therefore, the time employed should not be deemed extraordinary.

I do not want to go into this matter further. I have been astonished when I have heard the accounts of the immense sums which are expended by other Governments in the pursuit of works of this kind, compared with what is expended by our own. I hold, now, that having gone into this work, the idea that we are to abandon it at this stage, is certainly a very singular one. I cannot understand it. When the books are almost prepared, and ready for publication, why should we abandon the matter?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, a great deal has been said about the value of the materials collected, and the information which has been collected and distributed, as the result of this expedition. But, after all, it is a mere expression of opinion. The Senator from Illinois admits that he is in the same situation, to some extent, at least, as myself in this respect; that he is not altogether competent to form an opinion of it, even if he were to take time to sit down and examine it. I confess that would be my condition; and, as the Senator from Maryland has suggested, there are very few, if any of us, who would be competent to give an opinion as to its merits. But that argument of his, it seems to me, is one addressed to our ignorance, to induce us to go by faith in this matter.

Here is an object of appropriation presented to us; one which requires us to go very largely into the Treasury, to expend a great deal of public money. For what? For what we can conscientiously say is a proper object?—one conferring vast benefits upon the country? No, sir. It is this: we are to expend large amounts of money for the publication of matter of which we know nothing, and of the value of which we have no information on which we can rely.

As to the results of this expedition, we know very well where the objects of natural history collected and brought home by it are to be found. We know that they are here in the Patent Office. I have been told, that when the whole collection was offered as a contribution to the Smithsonian Institution in this city, that institution positively refused to take it. They would not give the collection house-room. Now, if we are to rely upon the opinions of scientific gentlemen as to the value of these things, I certainly consider the Smithsonian Institution as competent to give an opinion, as other scientific bodies or persons. They must have considered it of little value, or they certainly would have been willing to take it. Here is the result; here is the product of the expedition collected, arranged, and spread out before us in the most attractive form, I suppose, by scientific men. It is the result of four years' exploration of objects in natural history, and a description of those objects, for which we have expended many thousands of dollars. This collection was offered to a literary and scientific institution in this city, established here for the purpose of taking charge of such matters for the Government; and they positively refused it house-room, when offered as a free gift. They thought it was not worth the money it would take to put up shelves, and fit up a room for its accommodation. I do not state this as conclusive evidence of the value of this collection. But I think I have a right to mention it, as a set-off to the statements made by the Senators from Maryland and Illinois, that scientific men were of the opinion that this collection was very valuable.

This item of $25,000 embraces not only the publication of the works of the Exploring Expedition, but it is for the expenses of a green-house. That green-house, I believe, is to accommodate a portion of the collection made by this Exploring Expedition. So we have here brought upon us, by this expedition, not only an almost interminable system of book-making, but we have gone into the green-house system. We have gone into the cultivation of all sorts of plants. We have a commissioner, I believe, to take charge of the green-house. We have grounds appropriated for it; glass houses erected for it; and every year we are called upon for an appropriation to pay its expenses.

Mr. President, this may all be very well; it may all be right; it may all be constitutional; it may all be useful, and our labors in carrying on such a system may be very patriotic; it may benefit the people of some portions of this country; but it does strike me as in very remarkable contrast with the course of Senators, when a proposition is made here for money to be appropriated to clear out our great western rivers, to make safe our navigation, to save the lives and property of our citizens engaged in pursuits which the Constitution and the laws recognize, and upon which the welfare of this country depends. The cold shoulder is turned to us. Money is refused year after year, while our rivers are filling up; our men, women, and children, engaged in their lawful business, are destroyed, and their property lost, to the amount of millions of dollars annually. Not a dollar can be given for that object. Not a dollar has been given since I have had the honor of occupying a seat on this floor—now more than four years—and yet we have thousands of dollars appropriated, without scruple and without hesitation for the employment of men to draw pictures of bugs and grasshoppers, and take care of pines, and matters of various vegetable growth that have been brought from foreign countries to gratify the taste of gentlemen of leisure.

I know these remarks may be considered as very coarse and very demagogical. I am willing to bear the imputation. They may not indicate, on my part, a very high order of science, or a very highly-cultivated taste. But they do indicate, on my part, what I sincerely feel in my heart, that we owe duties to the practical business interests of this country, certainly in a higher degree than we do to such ornamental branches as this appropriation is proposed to benefit. One hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars have been expended upon this single object; and $50,000 have been refused to clear out the raft in the great Red river; and only $260,000 are proposed to be appropriated for the great Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, the Arkansas, and all the great rivers of the West, where hundreds of millions of commerce float, and millions of citizens are yearly traveling. Such an appropriation as that is opposed here on this floor, and its passage rendered doubtful; and those who oppose it, very complacently come forward and propose to go on with this system of expending thousands upon thousands without hesitation, upon the mere ornamental branches of the business of life.

The Senator from Maryland tells us—what I have no doubt is true—that these works have a very high character among scientific men; and that in some cases several editions of them have been published and republished, and that there is a great demand for them. If that be the case, where is the necessity of our publishing them in order to spread them before the public? The Senator from Illinois has told us that the great works of Audubon and of Humboldt have required an expenditure of a great deal of money. I would like to know from him if any Government ever appropriated money for their publication?

Mr. SHIELDS. Other Governments have appropriated a great deal for such objects of science.

Mr. BORLAND. Our Government never appropriated money for Audubon's great work. If we are to follow the example of other Governments in our expenditures, we shall be in a rapid road to—I will not say what. Other Governments may, according to the principles of their systems, make such appropriations, but ours has not the power.

If these works are so valuable—if they can command admiration everywhere, and are so much in demand—why do we not let the commander of this expedition carry out the object for which he obtained a copyright, and on which, if this statement be true, he would realize money? Why should we give him preference over any other publisher who has a valuable work to publish? I am for pursuing the same course in regard to these works which we pursued in regard to the Indian book of Mr. Schoolcraft, which, I apprehend, is as valuable in every respect as this. In the last appropriation for that work we prescribed a limit to it—that it should be finished within a certain time, and should be limited to so many volumes. If that can be done in this case, I am willing to go for it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Perhaps I would agree with the honorable Senator, if it were a new question. My objection is that our economical fits always come on too late. Now, here we have been for fourteen years expending money on this enterprise; and I believe this is the last appropriation which will be demanded for it. Yet, at the expiration of fourteen years, when the result of the enterprise is to be given to the world, the Senate, in one of its economical fits, is to denounce the whole affair. I say that from this we ought to learn a lesson, and not go into these enterprises until we are prepared to carry them out to completion. We ought either not to go into them at all, or to carry them out when we do go into them. That is the view I take of it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As I always endeavor to make myself useful as a working man, rather than conspicuous in the way of speech making, I will offer a proviso to this item, which will, I think, test the sense of the Senate upon this subject. Unless we do adopt a proviso of the nature which I propose very shortly, this thing will go on for years. We know how these matters are worked up in the public newspapers. Whenever there is a project before Congress for the purpose of taking money out of the Treasury, Mr. A helps Mr. B. If A writes a scientific work on any subject, and B writes a work on another subject, they write puffing articles for each other. This Exploring Expedition came home. These men desired a job. They came before Congress, and got an act passed pretty much to suit themselves at the close of a session, I believe, about 1842. I propose to bring it to an end; and to accomplish that object, I move to amend the amendment of the Committee on Finance by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That the aforesaid sum of $25,000 shall complete the preparation and publication of said work.

Mr. PEARCE. I have only to say that that would be insufficient. I believe that with this appropriation, and another appropriation in another year, we can complete it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to know whether, if we do not prescribe some limits, we may not be met another year with the same argument which has now been presented by the honorable Senator from Illinois, who desires to keep the public faith? When the publishers of this work shall have gone on and made a contract with some other scientific gentleman to write another work, we may be told that under the existing law a contract has been made with a scientific gentleman in some portion of the Union, to make a new volume, and the public faith requires that we shall pay for that volume thus contracted for. I insist that this amendment, or some such provision, is absolutely essential, otherwise we shall never find any limit. I hope the amendment will be adopted, and if any case should arise in which any man may have any claim for a breach of contract, we can meet it when it comes up.

Mr. PEARCE. I do not wish to occupy a moment of the time of the Senate unnecessarily. I would merely say, that the plan of the publication was chalked out long ago. All the works are designated. There can be no such thing as getting up in succession works not originally designed. The whole plan of publication was indicated years and years ago, and we have been engaged upon all of them, more or less. Some of the works are very near completion; others are not so far advanced. I do not believe that the present appropriation will complete the work; but I believe another appropriation at another year will. I think, therefore, that we ought not to put in that proviso.

Mr. BRADBURY called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Illinois, that we should observe the public faith in regard to these contracts. If this appropriation now proposed to be made is not sufficient—as the Senator from Maryland says it is not—to complete the works according to the contracts, it seems to me that we ought not to adopt the amendment to the amendment. I think, however, that we ought to adopt some amendment which will provide that the contracts already made being fulfilled, there shall be no further expenditure of money, and that no new contract shall be entered into. I give notice that, if the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania be voted down, I shall offer a provision to this effect:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended except in pursuance of existing contracts, and no further contracts for such publication shall be made.

Mr. PEARCE. There are incidental expenses that will be cut off under the amendment, and they are as absolutely necessary as anything else. The Senator proposes that none of the money shall be applied to anything but existing contracts. There are a great many incidental expenses which will arise, and which will have to be provided for.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There is no necessity for any amendment such as that suggested by the Senator from Ohio. I take it, that now, money cannot be used for this object except in pursuance of law and contracts made. I take it, that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is adopted, it will do nothing, but leave the law as it now stands.

Mr. CHASE. The amendment which I have suggested, is not of course in order at this time. I read it merely at the suggestion of a friend before me, for the purpose of showing how far I was willing to go. I would say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that it is not the law now that no future contract shall be made. But if the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania prevails, the consequence will be, that we shall say to the contractors, who are relying upon the good faith of the Government—"We cannot comply with these contracts." Surely, that cannot be right.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment; and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BORLAND. I know that the object of the Senator from Pennsylvania is to do what is right. I would suggest to him, that probably the Senator from Maryland could propose a modification of this amendment which would meet his views. I presume it is not the particular amount of the appropriation to which the Senator from Pennsylvania objects. The Senator from Maryland says that $25,000 will not be sufficient to complete the work. Will he suggest the amount that will be sufficient? I presume the Senator from Pennsylvania will accept it, if it is not unreasonable.

Mr. PEARCE. I have supposed that $50,000 more would complete all the works of this expedition according to the plans originally adopted by the Committee on the Library. I may be mistaken in it, but such is my belief. So many engravings have already been executed; so many charts have been made, and so many of the works are now nearly prepared for publication, that I suppose all the other engravings and works may be completed, for $50,000. We do not ask for that appropriation in this bill, because it would be more than we can expend in the current year, and $25,000 is about as much as can be properly expended in one year.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would ask the Senator from Maryland whether he means that $50,000, in addition to the $25,000 here proposed to be appropriated, will be required to complete these works?

Mr. PEARCE. No, sir; $25,000 in addition to the amount here provided for.

Mr. CASS. I wish to ask one question of the honorable Senator from Maryland. Did I understand that this appropriation is for contracts actually and bona fide made? Do I understand him that $50,000 will be required for that purpose, or will that amount be required merely to carry out the plan that was devised, and for which contracts have not been executed? In other words, how far is the faith of the Government actually pledged? To that extent I am willing to go.

Mr. PEARCE. I cannot say at this time exactly how much will be required for the purpose of fulfilling existing contracts. We have, as I stated before, a contract with Dr. Gray, another with Mr. Cassin, another with Professor Bailey, and, I believe, the Rev. Mr. Curtis, of South Carolina, who is engaged upon a small branch, but still a very important branch, of botany. He is a very eminent man in that line. We have, also, a contract with Professor Agassiz, for the ichthyology of the expedition. There are some other persons employed in some subordinate branches of these classes, with whom we have made no specific contract, but who do the work for so much, with an agreement that their services shall be paid at the rate of $1,440 a year. I cannot, just at this moment, say how much of the amount of $50,000, which I suggested, will be strictly required for carrying out the contracts, or how much may be required for those engagements which are not in the nature of contracts. I believe that $50,000 will defray the whole expense of completing the work according to the original plan.

Mr. CASS. I am willing to vote whatever amount may be necessary to carry out the faith of the Government. I have no doubt that the Committee on the Library, and especially its honorable chairman, for whose character and services I have the greatest respect, have done all they could do, to guard the public interest in regard to this work. But I think it is a monstrous long time—ten years—to take for the publication of such a work. We do not know whether the surface of the earth may not have undergone an entire change within that time. What! ten or twelve years to make a publication of a work of this kind! I think it is too long a time. I wish to stop the work as soon as we can. I do not wish to have it go on interminably. I am willing to vote for whatever time may be necessary to redeem the faith of the Government; but I would stop there—I would not go further.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is one object I had in view. I want to serve a notice on the people connected with these publications, that they are to quit before long.

Mr. SHIELDS. The honorable Senator will permit me to make this suggestion. In the midst of a subject, would he stop and leave it unfinished? Are we to have three volumes of a particular series of scientific works, and the fourth volume never to appear? That is the effect of the proposition.

Mr. CASS. It is entirely too long a time to take ten or twelve years to write the history of a single voyage!

Mr. SHIELDS. If we stop in the middle, without completing it, we might as well burn the whole of it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The world would not lose much, if the whole work were burned

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that, perhaps, he might accomplish his object by having a limitation of time—by providing expressly that the whole work shall be completed within two years. He will perceive at once that we are unable to ascertain the precise amount that may be required; but if he would make the limitation apply to time instead of money, he would probably accomplish the object. Let us provide that the work shall be completed within two years.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It seems to me that the best way to stop this publication is to stop the supplies.

Mr. FISH. I would propose to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania to amend his amendment, so as to make it read:

Provided, That the work be completed as speedily as possible, and that no contracts be made, and that no new expenditures be incurred, except for the completion of the work in accordance with the plan heretofore adopted by the Library Committee.

I think that will bring it to a close in a proper manner.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is the law now.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania is an amendment to an amendment, and therefore a further amendment cannot be offered to it; besides, the yeas and nays have been ordered upon it, and it cannot be modified except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PEARCE. With regard to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, I wish to make a single remark. Some of the gentlemen now employed upon this work have been recently employed. I may as well state a fact which I desired not to state, if I could avoid it—that in one of these branches of natural history, a gentleman was employed whose work, when submitted to the Library Committee, was found by that committee to be such that it would not be creditable to the country to publish it. We were compelled, therefore, to employ another and more competent person, and a contract has been entered into recently for that object. The same remark is true of two or three subordinate branches. They have only recently been ordered to be prepared on that account; and we do not wish to crowd the matter too much at once.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon Mr. BRODHEAD's amendment to the amendment of the committee, resulted—yeas 16, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Hunter, Meriwether, Norris, Rusk, Sebastian, Soule, and Walker—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brooke, Butler, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Downs, Fish, Foot, Geyer, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Toucey, Upham, and Wade—31.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in the clause "For publishing the Laws in pamphlet form, and in the newspapers of the States and Territories, and in the city of Washington, $21,325," to strike out "21" and insert "22," so as to make the appropriation $22,325.

Mr. HUNTER. That is raising the appropriation to the estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in the following clause, to insert after the word "accounts" the words "carrying the Department mail," and strike out "$550" and insert "800," making the appropriation $10,800:

"In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury:
"For labor, blank books, sealing ships' registers, translating foreign languages, printing, advertising, printing the public accounts, and extra clerk-hire, for preparing and collecting information to be laid before Congress, said clerks to be employed only during the session of Congress, or when indispensably necessary to enable the Department to answer some call made by either House of Congress at one session, to be answered at another—and no such extra clerk shall receive more than $3 33 per day for the time actually and necessarily employed, $10,550."

Mr. HUNTER. The estimates from the Treasury Department contained an item giving $250 additional compensation, as a salary to the messenger for carrying the Department mails.

The House committee struck that out; but the Committee on Finance propose to restore it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out of the following clause in the appropriations for the southeast Executive Building, "$10,000" and insert "$14,500:"

"For labor, fuel, and lights, $14,500."

Mr. HUNTER. That is restoring the appropriation to the estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. The hour at which the special order—the river and harbor bill—comes up has arrived. I call for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to make a motion to postpone the bill under consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. As this was taken up in the morning hour, does not the special order come up regularly as a matter of course at one o'clock?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move to postpone the bill under consideration until to-morrow, for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Will this bill come up in the morning hour to-morrow without a motion?

The PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to make a motion to take it up.

Mr. MANGUM. I move to postpone the bill until to-morrow at half past eleven o'clock, and make it the special order for that hour. It is a very important bill, and should be acted upon speedily.

Mr. HUNTER. I am very willing to do that.

The PRESIDENT. To-morrow is private bill day, and the order requiring private bills to be considered, to the exclusion of all other business, will have to be suspended to allow this bill to be taken up.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the bill will not be made the special order for half past eleven o'clock. I have several important reports which should be made. We might have passed three or four bills this morning while we were discussing whether to take up this bill or not.

The motion to postpone the bill until to-morrow at half past eleven o'clock, and make it the special order, was agreed to.

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill to create an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota was read a third time and passed.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House "making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers;" the pending question being on the first amendment of the Committee on Commerce, which was to modify the following clause:

"For opening a ship channel of sufficient capacity to accommodate the wants of commerce, through the most convenient pass leading from the Mississippi river into the Gulf of Mexico, $75,000. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply said moneys to the opening of said ship channel by contract; and at an early day in the next session of Congress to report said contract, the progress of said work, and an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open," by striking out the words "to report said contract, and an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open;" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

To report the progress of the work, the amount necessary to complete it, and an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open; and any contract made shall be limited to the amount hereby appropriated.

The question was taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 37, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Borland, Bright, Cass, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Geyer, James, Jones of Iowa, Pratt, Sebastian, and Walker—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASS moved to strike out all the appropriations for specific surveys, and to insert an appropriation of $30,000 for surveys to be made under the direction of the Topographical Bureau.

This led to a debate that lasted till near five p. m., (and which will be found in the Appendix,) when the question was taken and decided in the negative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, James, Jones of Iowa, Pratt, Sebastian, Shields, Sumner, and Walker—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Clarke, Davis, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Foot, Hale, Hunter, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—28.

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 19, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. L. F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 297, "declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes," upon which the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OLDS resumed, and concluded his argument in favor of the bill. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. MASON. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] in the course of his speech, has alluded to the draft in the chimneys of the steamboats, and I desire merely to state that two improvements have been introduced, which render high chimneys unnecessary. One improvement is now in practical operation in England, by which the chimney discharges its smoke in front of the paddle-wheel, thus superseding the necessity for any chimney above the boat, and by this process a much greater draft is given than by the tallest chimney. Another invention has been discovered in this city, by Mr. Mills, who is at present engaged in manufacturing the equestrian statue of General Jackson, by which the necessity for any draft has been done away with altogether. By this method Mr. Mills can melt fifteen tons of iron or bronze with one cord of wood.

Mr. ALLISON. Objection was made yesterday to my colleague [Mr. STEVENS] occupying a part of the time of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] the chairman of the committee, and I object to the gentleman from Kentucky proceeding now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has a right to allow any member to take the floor for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. ALLISON. He was not permitted to yield the floor to my colleague yesterday.

The SPEAKER. That was his fault, and not the fault of the Chair.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman need not oppose me; for I have no doubt that these improvements will be of greater benefit to his city, in the iron-making country, than the removal of any obstruction across the Ohio river.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wish to say that I raise the question of order not because I have any objection to what the gentleman was likely to say, but because I thought it was not fair that the gentleman from Kentucky should be treated differently from the manner in which my colleague was treated yesterday.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a question of order. The chairman of the committee expressed his willingness yesterday to give me a third of the hour to which he was entitled, to afford me an opportunity to sustain the minority report. It was objected to, and the House acquiesced in the objection. Now, I have no objection to what the gentleman from Kentucky wishes to say, but I think that equality and reciprocity should be observed; and if I cannot have an opportunity afforded me to address the House, I must object to his doing so.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 142.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided on several occasions before, that it is the uniform practice of the House for a gentleman occupying the floor to yield it to another gentleman for the purpose of explanation. It is a question with the gentleman from Ohio whether he will yield it alike to the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Massachusetts; but there can be no bargain or contract by which two gentlemen shall speak half each without the unanimous consent of the House. The Chair therefore overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FOWLER. In that case I am only surprised that the minority of the committee cannot be heard under the same circumstances.

The SPEAKER. That is an argument addressed to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and does not affect the rules or practice of the House.

Mr. OLDS. My time will be exhausted in three or four minutes, and in order to get rid of this difficulty I decline further to yield the floor, and am anxious to close this debate.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. And upon that proposition I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35; nays 119; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bibbhaus, Busby, Carter, Chapman, Dean, Dimmick, Duncan, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Gilmore, Goodrich, Haven, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, James Johnson, George G. King, Kurtz, McLannahan, Henry D. Moore, Andrew Parker, Penn, Reed, Robbins, Ross, David L. Seymour, Origin S. Seymour, Skelton, Thaddeus Stevens, Tuck, Ward, Washburn, and Addison White—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Barre, Beale, Bissell, Bocoock, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Buell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Doty, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Hunter, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kubus, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McQueen, Miller, Millson, Miner, Molony, John Moore, Murray, Newton, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Price, Robie, Scudder, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Venable, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Woodward—119.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Pending the call of the roll, the following gentlemen stated that they had paired off:

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, with Mr. RICHARDSON;
Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. LETCHER;
And Mr. SCURRY, against the bill, with Mr. MEADE, in favor of it.

The question recurred upon committing the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being put, the motion was disagreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time.

The question recurring, "Shall the bill pass?" Mr. OLDS called for the previous question; which received a second; and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. CARTTER. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allen, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bissell, Bocoock, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Buell, E. Carrington Cable, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kubus, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McMullin, McQueen, Miller, Millson, Miner, Molony, John Moore, Murray, Newton, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Price, Robie, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Venable, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Woodward—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Bibbhaus, Busby, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Curtis, Dean, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodrich, Haven, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, James Johnson, Geo. G. King, Kurtz, McLannahan, Andrew Parker, Reed, Robbins, Ross, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origin S. Seymour, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Sutherland, Townsend, Ward, Washburn, A. White, and Wildrick—42.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. OLDS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF THOMAS RITCHIE.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to take up the report of the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That is the first business in order without any motion. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] by courtesy at least, is entitled to the floor on that bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to the floor, and I appeal to him to let the House say whether they will go on with the appropriation bill, or take up the report from the Committee on Printing. It is very important to get the appropriation bill through this week. I hope, therefore, the House will indulge me in it.

Mr. STANLY. I am ready, individually, to finish what I have to say upon this printing business; but I do not wish to go against the sense of the House, or oppose the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, upon whom is the responsibility of the public business. I will therefore submit to whatever be the wish of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then, in order to put it in the power of the House to test what business it will take up, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

FRENCH SPOILIATION BILL.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order connected with the priority of business.

Some time since a bill from the Senate, known as the "French Spoliation Bill," was before this House. After it was read a second time, a motion was made to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and a motion was made by myself to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This is a subject in which the country feel a vast amount of interest.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is not in order. He is debating the question.

Mr. BAYLY. I am not going to debate it. I desire to know precisely where that bill is. When the motion was made to commit, my impression was, under what I understand to be the practice of this House, that that motion kept the bill before the House. I think that has been the practice of the House. I desire to know of the Speaker where, among the business of the House, that bill is?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I merely wish to inquire what is before the House? And if it is a question of priority of business, whether it is debatable or not?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BAYLY. I am aware that it is not debatable, but I cannot make my point without stating the facts of the case.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not see that the gentleman from Virginia has raised any point of order. He has simply made an inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, to suspend the rules to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have a point of order to make. I rose and was recognized by the Speaker, but before I submitted the motion I designed to make, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] rose and reminded the House that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] was entitled to the floor. I do not know how he could be, entitled to the floor to make that statement when I was upon the floor; but it afforded the gentleman from Alabama an opportunity to make his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the report from the Committee on Printing was the first business in order before the House, and that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky was not necessary.

Mr. STANTON. Well, but I still occupied the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to have resumed his seat, and the Chair remarked that, by courtesy at least, the gentleman from North Carolina was entitled to the floor upon the report from the Committee on Printing. The Chair insists that he is entitled to it for another reason, if he claims, and that is, that the gentleman from Kentucky has already been heard upon the bill, and cannot speak twice until others who may desire to be heard have spoken. So that, at any rate, the gentleman from North Carolina was regularly upon the floor upon the report from the Committee on Printing. The gentleman from North Carolina yields the floor to the gentleman from Alabama, to submit the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON. I did not resign my right to the floor at all, because I occupied the position I am now occupying.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not occupy the floor, because he was not entitled to speak.

Mr. STANTON. I might have called the previous question if I had had an opportunity of doing so.

The SPEAKER. That is true; and if the gentleman insists that he was occupying the floor, and had such purpose to accomplish, he is entitled to it.

Mr. STANTON. I merely desire to say, that I hope the House will not agree to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to go into committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to consume any more time on this point of order; but I wish to state what the gentleman from North Carolina will certainly bear me out in—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Kentucky simply wishes that the House will not go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL. Under the impression that I shall take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, I wish to know distinctly the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia, and overruled by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia rose and inquired of the Chair the precise condition of the French spoliation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. He made no point of order at all.

The SPEAKER. He inquired the position of the French spoliation bill, and the Chair stated in response that the business now in order before the House was the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair is very willing to respond to the gentleman from Virginia, by stating that the French spoliation bill, in the opinion of the Chair, is in the fourth class; and the first business in order in the fourth class upon the Speaker's table—that is, when you reach that description of business.

Mr. BAYLY. If the Speaker will indulge me a single moment—

Mr. HOUSTON. I must insist upon going on with the business of the House.

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] said I made no point of order. I want to show that I did make a point of order. The Speaker decided that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama was the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. That was the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BAYLY. That is, the Chair decided that the French spoliation bill had not been kept alive by the motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair made no such decision. It is kept before the House thus far, that it is the first business in order in its class of business, and is not in order until you reach that class of business.

Mr. BAYLY. Will the Chair be good enough to state what that fourth class of business is?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is not before the House, unless a motion is made to take that bill up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will further state, that even though his decision might be wrong in regard to the particular position of that bill, it nevertheless follows it could not be in order until you go to the business upon the Speaker's table. At any rate, there can be no question about the decision of the Chair, so far as it has a bearing upon this particular question.

Mr. WALSH. If a motion be made now and carried, to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, will not the French spoliation bill be the first business in order?

The SPEAKER. It will not. It will be the first business in order in its class.

Mr. WALSH. For the purpose of testing the correctness of the decision of the Chair, I move to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays. It has been universally understood all over this House, that the French spoliation bill would be the first business in order when we should get to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table, and the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, are both privileged motions, and that the motion made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] must be first put to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let me ask the Chair a question. Must not the motion first made be first put?

The SPEAKER. The Chair had in his mind the following rule:

"After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees and resolutions, it shall be in order, pending the consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table, and to the orders of the day—which, being decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall dispose of the business on his table in the following order, viz:—"

Another rule is: "That it shall be in order at any time to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union." The rule first read, in the opinion of the Chair, refers only to a case where a gentleman is occupying the floor, that it may be taken from him by a motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having been first made, must be first put.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOWLER. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FOWLER, and FULLER of Maine, were appointed.

The House was divided, and the tellers reported 36 in the affirmative; which, being a sufficient number, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALL. I believe the vote about to be taken involves the question whether we shall reach the French spoliation bill or not. I desire, therefore, to say, that upon that question I have paired off with Mr. McDONALD.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HOUSTON's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Beale, Bibb, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dockery, Dunham, Eastman, Faulkner, Fitch, Floyd, Gaylord, Gentry, Hamilton, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McLanahan, McQueen, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Penningman, Phelps, Price, Robie, Ross, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Thurston, Watkins, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Wildrick—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bennett, Bissell, Bocoock, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Conger, Curtis, Dean, Disney, Doty, Edgerton, Edmundson, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, Henn, Holladay, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, James Johnson, John Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, McMullin, Miller, Millson, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Newton, Oids, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Polk, Porter, Powell, Reed, Riddle, Robbins, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Strother, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—91.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Pending the call of the roll—

Mr. DUNCAN stated, that as the decision of the question now before the House had some bearing upon the French spoliation bill, he had paired off with an honorable gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] is now entitled to the floor, upon the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. STANLY. I move that it be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. STANTON. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLLADAY. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER, and JOHNSON of Arkansas, were appointed.

The House was then divided; and tellers reported only 20 in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STANLY's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 52.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH moved to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order if the House refuse to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

The question was then put upon Mr. WALSH's motion to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, and on a division there were—yeas 78, nays 66.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand tellers.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMILTON. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

[Loud shouts of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HIBBARD. I renew it.

The yeas and nays were again ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 91, nays 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, Win. Appleton, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bennett, Bibb, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, J. H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, G. H. Brown, Burrows, Caldwell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cutman, Disney, Doty, Edgerton, Faulkner, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hammond, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, John Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Mace, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Newton, Oids, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Porter, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abr'm P. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Alexander White—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Averett, Beale, Bocoock, Bragg, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dunham, Edmundson, Fitch, Floyd, Gaylord, Gentry, Hamilton, Sampson, W. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Ives, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Lockhart, Mason, McLanahan, McQueen, Millson, Molony, John Moore, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Penn, Penningman, Phelps, Polk, Ross, Scurry, Skelton, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Stratton, Sweetser, Venable, Watkins, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—69.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOCOOCK. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. POLK. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays; and I do it because I understand that the object of refusing to go into committee is, to take up the French spoliation bill.

[Loud cries of "Withdraw the call!"]

Mr. POLK. Well, sir, I withdraw it for the present.

The question was then put upon Mr. BOCOOCK's motion, and, on a division of the House, there were—yeas 76, nays 69.

Mr. CHANDLER called for tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was put, and the tellers reported—yeas 80, nays 72.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

[A message was received from the Senate of the United States, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary.]

The question was then again put upon Mr. BOCOOCK's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 83, nays 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Beale, Bocoock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Buell, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Colcock, Conger, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edmundson, Fitch, Floyd, Gamble, Gaylord, Green, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ives, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mason, McCorkle, Millson, Molony, John Moore, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Penningman, Phelps, Polk, Powell, Robie, Ross, Scurry, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, Watkins, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—83.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bennett, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Disney, Doty, Edgerton, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Jackson, John Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Mann, Martin, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Newton, S. W. Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Porter, Price, Reed, Riddle, Robbins, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Strother, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, and Yates—80.

So the motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FICKLIN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] had offered the following amendment:

And hereafter no appointment of midshipmen in the Navy shall be made, unless recommended by the member of Congress representing the district in which the applicant resides, in the same manner that cadets at West Point are now appointed.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] had offered the following as a substitute for that amendment, viz:

And hereafter in the appointment of midshipmen the recommendations of members of Congress as to applications from their respective districts shall be respected and observed, in the same manner and to the same extent as is now the practice in reference to cadets for West Point.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] offered the following as an amendment, to come in at the end of the substitute, viz:

Provided, That the member of Congress making the nomination, shall not nominate his own son or the son of any other member.

The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, and upon that question debate is exhausted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I think the gentleman from Michigan has probably changed his amendment a little, since I offered my substitute for it, for it does not strike me now in the same light that it did yesterday. I will therefore withdraw my substitute, and hope the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will be adopted.

Mr. STUART. At the suggestion of a gentleman near me, I will modify my amendment by inserting after the word "midshipman," the words "or pupils at any Naval School."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan, that he should accept the proviso which I offered to the substitute of the gentleman from Arkansas, as a modification of his amendment.

Mr. STUART. I cannot accept it, but the gentleman can move it as an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the proviso which I offered yesterday to the substitute of the gentleman from Arkansas, which has just been read.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in relation to that amendment, although I have no desire to consume the time of the House. I understand that this amendment is brought forward for the purpose of putting down favoritism, and it seems to me that favoritism should be put down as far as members of Congress are concerned, as well as in other quarters. I do not wish to be pressed upon this point, but it is a fact that there were members in the last Congress who had sons in this Naval School, and that there are members in this Congress who have sons there. Not long since, we saw in the newspapers a controversy about a member of Congress who had already a son at West Point getting another son into the school at Annapolis. Ought not this system of favoritism to be put down too? If I understand the original design of the law in relation to these appointments, it was that members of Congress should nominate young men residing in their districts who by nature were blessed with talents and with good physical development, but who had not the means of education; it was intended to confer education upon that description of persons, and at the same time promote the interests of the Army and Navy and of the Government generally. I think that members of Congress ought to be precluded from exercising this species of favoritism as well as other persons. We see that lads who are blessed by nature with talents and with every requisite that would make them competent and efficient in the service are excluded, and that the sons of members of Congress, many of them almost imbecile, are crowded into these institutions. When we get to the Departments, what is going on there? Why, you cannot appoint a head of a bureau without his instantly crowding his cousins, nephews, and all that description of persons, into his Department. The whole thing ought to be stopped. Let us begin with ourselves and carry the reform into every Department of the Government. Here is a perfect system of nepotism carried on in those Departments. Let us carry out the original design in good faith, if it is to be carried out at all. I am myself in favor, as I said yesterday, of cutting these institutions up by the roots, and confining them exclusively to the States. That is what I think ought to be done.

I know that some say we should not exclude members of Congress. Why, how does this thing work? Take, for instance, my neighbor there from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN;] we live upon the borders of our States; I can just send my son over to his district, and he has him appointed to West Point, as a resident in that district, and, in the same way, he can send his son over into my district. This thing may be done, and the probability is it will be done hereafter. I say it ought to be put a stop to, and now is the time to do it.

Mr. CARTTER. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, for the reason that I do not think there is any occasion for it. I think that my friend from Tennessee, although he strikes as low and as close as any man that I ever was acquainted with, has made a blow a little below what should be the standard of self-respect, which gentlemen upon this floor should maintain for themselves. I do not believe, in the first place, that the abuse which the honorable gentleman alludes to, exists to any extent. I do not believe it is possible for any gentleman, having credit enough in a respectable constituency, to obtain a place upon this floor, to be capable of transferring his offspring into a district in a neighboring State, for the purpose of getting him into a public institution; and if there was one such gentleman to be found, I do not believe a second could be found to receive that offspring.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I desire to know what the gentleman means by striking low?

Mr. CARTTER. Striking below that standard of self-respect which should prohibit any member of Congress from being guilty of such an act, without the interference of law.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman wishes to know where that standard is below self-respect, let him look to his own State. He will find that a member of Congress from that State has put his son into the school at Annapolis.

Mr. SWEETSER. Name him.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Sawyer, of Ohio, put his son into that school.

Mr. SWEETSER. He is not in this Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. He was a member of Congress when he got his son into the school, and that is what I said.

Mr. CARTTER. Well, he has got paid for it.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman desires it, I can give him the names of others.

Mr. CARTTER. The honorable member from Tennessee urges a general impeachment upon the integrity and character of the members of this House, by supposing that they need a higher law for their restraint, than the law of self-respect. If that law will not operate to restrain members of Congress within the limits of decorum, in the discharge of their discretionary powers, there is no law that will do it. I am opposed to the amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. With a view to carry out what I believe to be the almost unanimous intention of the committee, I offer the amendment to the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

And that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby required to report to this House at its second session, the number and names of appointments to the Naval School, which have up to this time been made, and the district, and from whence each one comes; and the number of vacancies now existing at said school, with the Congressional districts which may be entitled to supply them; and a statement of the order in which the remainder of the Congressional districts shall be entitled to supply all future and accruing vacancies, so far as it may be determined by existing law, or by circumstances.

Mr. J. said: Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to avoid a difficulty which now exists. The Secretary of the Navy states that there are a large number of districts which are entitled to appointments, but that there are no places for them to fill. At least this was the statement a short time ago. A large number of districts have not enjoyed the privileges of this Naval School for years. Now, sir, you may make what rules you please, for equalizing the enjoyment of the privileges of this Naval School among all the districts in the United States. You may pass what acts you please, but so long as the Secretary of the Navy can say there are a large number of districts which have not had any appointments for years, and is still left to select for himself, without responsibility—while we are left without reference to the law, and in ignorance of what is the judgment or construction put upon that law—how is it possible for us to prevent favoritism? Who is to make the Secretary declare, under the given circumstances, and under the existing law, exactly how that law will apply to these cases as they shall come up for his adjudication? Now, I propose by my amendment that the Secretary shall be called upon to report to the next session of Congress, whether there are any vacancies, and if so, what districts are entitled to fill them according to the existing laws, and under the circumstances which may exist. For instance, if one district has no appointee in the Naval School, but has one in the Navy, and another has no appointee in either, the latter would in equity be entitled to the appointment. The object is to have the production of a statement showing what district was first entitled to an appointment, the number of vacancies which may now exist, and also the order in which the several districts shall hereafter be entitled to appointments; so that hereafter there shall be no favoritism on the part of our Secretaries, by depriving any district, or any portion of the people, of the right to their own appointment.

Mr. STUART. I would suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas, that he change the words "now existing," to "then existing," in his amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think, if the gentleman from Arkansas will listen to me for a moment, it will change his opinion with regard to the propriety of the amendment to the amendment. The indications are, that we will adopt the proposition of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] which requires that the appointment shall be made from the districts. Then, if that becomes a law, it makes no difference where the vacancy is, as a matter of course the district where the vacancy occurs will be entitled to fill it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman whether or not it is a fact that when the school is full—when the number allowed by law is there—every district in the United States will not have a representative there? If so, each district will have to take its turn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not able to tell just at this moment how many are allowed to make the number full. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs could inform the gentleman.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. There are not quite enough allowed under the law to give two boys to each Congressional district.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend from Tennessee says there are not quite enough to give two to each Congressional district. If gentlemen will examine the law of 1845, they will find that it provides that the students or midshipmen shall be appointed from all the States. At the time of the passage of that law there had been a very great inequality between the States in regard to these appointments. There was not only confusion, but great complaints were made as to the regulation of these appointments. The result was, that in the passage of that law a provision was inserted which required the Secretary of the Navy to apportion the appointments among the States, so as to bring up the deficient States to something like an equality, before any other regulation should be adopted. That law yet exists; and while the Department may have adopted rules to apportion these appointments among particular districts, yet there is no law which requires it. So that if we pass the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] as I presume we shall, providing that the Representative from each district shall be entitled to make the appointment when a vacancy occurs in his district, then why should we ask the Secretary of the Navy to make a report of the vacancies, when the member is to make the appointment himself when a vacancy occurs in his district? The law of 1845 says it shall be made in the State; but the provision which we now propose to pass says the appointment shall only be made by the Representative himself, or upon his recommendation. I see no necessity, therefore, for requiring the Secretary of the Navy to report when the vacancies occur.

Mr. POLK. How are we to know when vacancies do occur?

Mr. HOUSTON. We may know by reference to the Department. But I have no objection to this portion of the amendment. Let them report that this or that or the other midshipman's place is vacant. I will change my reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. He asks how we are to know when these vacancies occur? Why, sir, as soon as this law is passed, it will become the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as a vacancy occurs, to consult the member from the district for which such vacancy occurs. That is made his duty by the very language of the section proposed by the gentleman from Michigan. He cannot make the appointment without consulting the member of Congress in whose district the vacancy occurs. I think the amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. JOHNSON demanded tellers upon the amendment; which were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 66.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR offered the following amendment:

After the word "resides," insert "at the time of the application," so that the amendment would read:

"And hereafter, no appointment of midshipman in the Navy, or pupil at any Naval School, shall be made unless recommended by the member of Congress representing the district in which the applicant resides at the time of the application, in the same manner that cadets at West Point are now appointed," &c.

Mr. T. said: My principal object in offering this amendment is to bring to the notice of the committee a very important provision in the law of 1850, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PEASLEE,] who I do not now see in his seat, and which I now send to the Clerk. I ask that it may be read, because it ought to be known to this committee and to the country, and I therefore take this method of calling their attention to it.

The provision of law referred to, was read, as follows:

"And that no midshipman in the Navy shall be appointed from any Congressional district, having at the time of appointment more than two officers of that grade in the Navy from such district; and whenever an appointment shall be made from any State, the person so appointed shall be an actual resident of the Congressional district from which the appointment purports to be made: And provided further, That such Congressional district of any State, as may not have any midshipman in the Navy at the time an appointment may be made from said State, shall be entitled to at least one appointment before any other shall be made from any district of the State having one or more officers of that grade in the Navy."

Mr. T. That is a very important provision in the law now existing. I desired to submit it yesterday, when my friend from North Carolina was speaking. He refused, however, to give way. I have no doubt he would have given way, had he known my object. It is a provision of law to which I think the country is greatly indebted to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PEASLEE,] Why? Because it equalizes in some degree this great patronage of the General Government. Sir, I regard it as a great privilege to have a young man sent to the West Point Academy, or to the Naval School at Annapolis, to be educated at the public expense; and placed in the Army or Navy for life in a most respectable position. But I say to you, and I say to the committee, it is highly desirable that this great boon of the Government shall be equally distributed, because we all pay equally to keep up these institutions.

Now, sir, what is the fact? Why, many of the States of this Union have had little or no share at all in these privileges of the Government. The great State of Ohio, which I in part represent, with a population of 2,000,000, a few years ago had not any midshipmen in the Navy, and now has very few officers in that branch of the public service. I will say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this committee, that at this very moment five or six districts represented by gentlemen upon this floor from that State, have no midshipmen at Annapolis. My friend from Arkansas, in his zeal and industry to represent the State which he does so admirably upon this floor, manifests a great anxiety that Arkansas should have her representative at Annapolis, though if I mistake not she has two midshipmen already, although that State forms but one Congressional district. But, as I said before, there are five of the Congressional districts in the State of Ohio, not one of which has a midshipman. My object, and the effect of this amendment, as I understand it, is to equalize this favor of the Government among all the Congressional districts in the United States.

When I had the honor to address the committee yesterday, I fear I was not understood in regard to some of the remarks which I submitted in relation to the Navy, and I now wish to make one or two observations in relation to that subject. These reforms which I desire to see introduced into the Navy are not with a view of breaking down that branch of the public service. I do not wish to be understood as desiring to break down the Navy; on the contrary, I wish to strengthen it by proper reforms, and every good improvement.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I understand the gentleman to say there are midshipmen from Arkansas in the Naval School.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not positive of the fact, but I have been so informed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform me who they are?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know who they are, nor do I know whether there are any there, but I will state to the gentleman how I got my information. With a view to serve my own district, which had not a midshipman for many years, I called on the Department this morning, and in the course of conversation with the Chief Clerk, I remarked that I believed Arkansas had no midshipman. I was responded to, that she had two midshipmen.

Mr. JOHNSON. They know she has none, though there were some one or two put in under her name, and that is the very complaint we make.

Mr. TAYLOR. The district represented by my colleague [Mr. OLDS] has no midshipman, and there are four others similarly situated in my State. But apart from this, I desire to say, in relation to the Navy, that I wish we had time at this session to hear the report from the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] whose familiarity with the naval affairs of the country, by his industry and attention to them, does him credit. I desire, also, if we had the time, to hear in relation to the Army and the other branches of the public service. I desire to see the recommendations of the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Graham, adopted; and I believe a just regard to the good of the service demands that we should at once authorize a retired list, modify the rank, by authorizing the title of admiral of the Navy, as in other countries, and provide for the gradual but certain improvements in service and discipline; which our most experienced and capable naval officers, can show to be necessary to promote the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will say that one of the reforms I desire to make in the Navy, is to reduce the number of midshipmen one half, so as to give to each member the appointment of a single midshipman; and I think that is just about as much as the service requires to fill out the vacancies occurring annually. As it is now, the lower ranks in the Navy are so crowded that a young man who enters that service at this time, cannot expect to be a captain in less than one hundred years.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] if it is in contemplation of the Committee on Naval Affairs to report a plan for a retired list, and establishing the rank of admirals in the Navy? I desire to see it done.

Mr. STANTON. We have a bill to report, to accomplish that object.

Mr. SWEETSER. My object in rising is to make an explanation for a friend who is absent. Allusion has been made by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] to Mr. Sawyer, who was a member of the Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Congresses; and I must say to my friend, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that he is entirely mistaken in charging that gentleman with being guilty of a violation of the law, and that he made the appointment of his own son to West Point.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I do not want the gentleman to make a position for me, and then put words into my mouth in connection with that position. I do not assume that Mr. Sawyer violated any law, nor did I assume that he directly procured the appointment of his son. I stated that there were members of Congress, whose sons were appointed to these institutions, and we all know how these things can be done.

Mr. SWEETSER. The gentleman made a charge to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that a gentleman from Ohio had been guilty of this indiscretion, to say the least of it. I asked him to name the gentleman. He named Mr. Sawyer. Now, his whole argument and his whole position was that there might be—and I inferred he intended to say there had been—a transfer from one district to another, of the appointment, by one member, of the son of another. Now, sir, Mr. Sawyer, if he appointed his own son—and whether it is so or not, I do not know—his son was a resident of the district, and he had a right by law to appoint him.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was not Mr. Sawyer a member of Congress?

Mr. SWEETSER. He was, certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. And while he was a member of Congress, was not his son appointed to the school at Annapolis?

Mr. SWEETSER. I do not know; I am told that it is so. That fact, however, does not bring the case within the purview of the gentleman's argument in relation to the transfer of sons of members of Congress, because his son was a resident of the district for which he was appointed.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. SWEETSER. I have been just informed that the appointment was made by General Cass, and without the knowledge of Mr. Sawyer.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] by striking out the words "midshipman or" before the word "pupil."

I know the House is desirous of getting along with this business, but there is a view of this original amendment to which I desire to call attention, and which I think forbids its adoption.

If a midshipman is an officer, then I submit that Congress has no constitutional right to control the appointment of such officer, except by vesting it "in the President, in the head of a Department, or in the courts of law." If he is not an officer, then I agree that this original amendment proposes proper and constitutional legislation, and such as I am much in favor of myself.

Section second of the second article of the Constitution provides—

"That the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law."

Now, sir, is the appointment of midshipmen, in the language I have read from the Constitution, "otherwise provided for" in that Constitution? I cannot find that it is. Again, is the office of midshipmen "established by law?" It was an office known in the British Navy whilst these States were colonies, and is recognized in various ways, and regulated by acts of Congress; and midshipmen are in various acts of Congress recognized as such, called officers, and in some instances are, by statute, now entitled to the pay, as such officers, of lieutenants and captains. I do not know whether they hold regular commissions, or only warrants; but I think it clear the office is recognized and "established by law."

There is a still further provision in this section of the Constitution, and which, with what I have before read, includes all the provisions of the Constitution on this subject. I read it:

"But Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

Now, sir, I submit, that if midshipmen are officers, their appointment belongs to the President and Senate, under the provisions of the Constitution I first read; and if not to them, then Congress has no power to vest it anywhere except in the "President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments." I suppose Congress has vested it in the head of the Navy Department, as it was within its competency to do; but it certainly is not within its competency to vest it in members of Congress. It can only vest it in one of the three places the Constitution names. And the original amendment, so far as it proposes to vest such a power of appointment in members of Congress, or to allow members to restrict the discretion of the proper appointing power, is, in my judgment, in derogation of the Constitution.

Mr. VENABLE. The very statement which the gentleman has just read from the Constitution relieves us at once from the difficulty which he seems to have discovered; for, if Congress can direct the appointment to be made by the President, or by courts of law, or by the heads of Departments, it can direct the manner in which that appointment shall be made, and in the very same way can designate the preliminaries which shall take place before those appointments are made.

Now, sir, the reason why I have desired all along that Congress should take some steps, so as to indicate how these appointments should be made, and prevent complaint and procure impartiality in their distribution, was, that we should have the power of preventing the heads of Departments from concentrating in any one portion of the Republic, or in any one State, all the patronage of the Government;—of giving to Philadelphia, for instance, some ten or fifteen midshipmen more than they were entitled to. But I have never believed that there was anything like corruption in it. I never believed that the last, or any former gentleman at the head of the Navy Department, would be guilty of any corruption. It is true, that I complained that I could not get a midshipman appointed for my district, either under Mr. Graham or his predecessors; still I believe those gentlemen utterly incapable of corruption. To correct this evil, I am for prescribing the manner in which the appointments should be made, by directing that they shall be made precisely as the appointments are made of cadets at West Point. They have heretofore been considered exclusively the patronage of the head of the Navy Department, and have been made in accordance with that opinion. The Secretary appointed his favorites because law and usage seemed to recognize his right to do so. My object is to change the law, and abrogate the usage, to remove the patronage from the Secretary, and give equality by conferring it on the Representatives of the people.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no desire other than to bring this question to the consideration of the House. Let me suggest, by way of illustration, to my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE,] whether he would contend that Congress has the right to declare that the President should not nominate, and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a foreign minister, unless he was taken from a given district, or recommended by a particular man in Congress? Would he hold that Congress has a right to control or restrict the appointing power in such a case?

Mr. VENABLE. Not at all. There is an express exception in the Constitution that Congress may vest the appointment of such inferior officers as it may think proper, in the President, or in courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Mr. HAVEN. That is very true. I have read that express provision from the Constitution to the House, and that provision gives Congress the right to vest the appointment in the President alone, or in the head of a Department, or in the courts; but Congress cannot vest it in either of the three, and still control it, nor can it vest it in its own members. Nor can it give to its own members either the whole or any portion of the discretion belonging to the exercise of the power. That discretion necessarily belongs to the officer in whom the power to appoint is vested.

Mr. VENABLE. I beg my friend's pardon. The appointment of these inferior officers may be, by Congress, conferred upon courts of law, or upon the heads of the Departments. That is the difference.

Mr. HAVEN. Yes; but not upon members of Congress. This original amendment proposes to confer it upon members of Congress, and the precise point I make is, that that cannot be done under the Constitution.

Mr. STUART. We can relieve this argument in a moment. This individual is not an officer of the Army of the United States. He is simply a pupil in that school, and until he receives and completes his education, he does not have a warrant which makes him an officer; and to show that this is so, these individuals are constantly rejected by a board of examiners; and that rejection could not take place if they were officers of the United States. They are treated and regarded as pupils.

Mr. HAVEN. Then my amendment had better be adopted; for if they are pupils merely, and not officers, they should be appointed upon the recommendation of members of Congress. But I think the gentleman is wrong in reference to the fact; they are appointed midshipmen before they are admitted to the school; and the examination he speaks of, is to see whether they shall be promoted to passed midshipmen or not. He will find, in the Official Register, long lists of midshipmen put down as attending the Naval Academy.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. HAVEN, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WOODWARD. I move the following proviso:

Provided, That in case the President shall decline to appoint the person nominated by a Representative, and the Representative shall renominate the same individual, or neglect to nominate another, the President shall proceed to appoint at his discretion.

I differ with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] I regard them as officers, and surely you cannot take this power of appointment from the President and confer it upon a member of the House, if they are officers. I think that is very clear. Requiring the President to restrict the appointment to a Congressional district and limiting him to a State, is a very different thing from interposing another officer between him and the object of his appointment.

Now, if the President is to appoint whom the member of Congress shall nominate or recommend, why not let the member appoint? What is the use of the intervention of the Chief Magistrate of the United States, subordinate to the influence or wishes of an individual member of Congress in so small a matter? Now, give the power of appointment to a member of Congress, or to the President, or enforce the law on the heads of Departments.

If they are pupils simply, and not officers, I concede it is perfectly competent to investigate it. If they are commissioned officers, then it is palpably evident that you cannot interpose any other officer between.

Mr. STUART. I have great confidence in the opinions of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD,] upon all questions, and especially so upon questions in reference to the construction of the Constitution of the United States; and, sir, I should not hesitate to concede that the construction contended for by that gentleman is correct, if the premises were as he supposes them. But, as I before remarked, these individuals are not officers of the United States. The difference between us is one of fact, and not of constitutional law.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order; not to consume the gentleman's time, but merely to suggest that he is debating a matter which has been voted down when offered to this particular amendment. An amendment was offered relating to the power of the President to reject the appointment of a member, and giving him power, if the member refuses to nominate again, to proceed himself to appoint, which amendment was rejected, and this discussion tends to restore all the original difficulty.

Mr. STUART. I am opposing the amendment upon its merits, and the Chair will decide if I am in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the remarks of the gentleman are in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. STUART. I was about to say that these persons were merely pupils of the school. Now, sir, it is a settled construction of the Constitution—settled by the Supreme Court—that an officer who is a permanent one, and for a given time, under that Constitution, is not removable at the pleasure of the President. If the appointment is for an indefinite time, he is. These individuals are not officers within the meaning of the Constitution. The amendment employs words in their common acceptance, and therefore we use the words midshipmen or pupils at the Naval School; and, as I said before, upon an examination, either the first, second, or any other, the examiners may reject the pupils, which they could not do were they officers under the Constitution. They do not get the warrant which makes them officers of the United States until they pass through their education there, and then they become for the first time officers of the United States.

The simple object of this amendment is to leave to the individual representing the district, the selection of the person who shall be appointed a pupil at that school; and I submit that it does not conflict with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States at all.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to say, in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD,] that, if these persons are officers—and I suppose, after they get their warrants, they are, and must be appointed by the Secretaries or by the President—it is just as unconstitutional to control the appointment of those from whom these officers are to be selected, as to control the selection of the officers themselves; and it will be as much a violation of the Constitution for members of Congress to appoint the pupils as the midshipmen themselves.

The question was then taken, and the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to strike from the amendment the words "or pupils."

Whilst we have commenced, we may as well legislate properly upon this subject. I am in favor of the object indicated by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] but that object will not be reached by the amendment he has proposed, from the manner in which it is worded. The intention, I presume, is to prevent the head of the Navy Department from appointing acting midshipmen without the concurrence of the members of Congress from whose districts the appointments are made. If the language employed by the gentleman be embodied into the law, that intention will not necessarily be carried out; it may by construction, but cannot properly carry out the object sought to be accomplished. After the young man has passed his examination, and been made acting midshipman, he is not at once appointed to the Naval School. He may be appointed to a national vessel, and go out upon a cruise of two or three years' time before he is appointed to the Naval School. During all that time, according to the amendment of the gentleman, the President may have power to appoint without the concurrence of the member of Congress. I propose, in place of the words "pupils at the Naval School," to substitute "acting midshipmen;" and, if adopted, the amendment of the gentleman will then read "midshipmen or acting midshipmen in the Navy." The midshipman may be dismissed before he has entered the Naval School at all.

Mr. STUART. I would suggest that additional words might be employed, so that it would read "acting midshipmen or pupils at the Naval School."

Mr. HAMMOND. Very well.

Mr. CARTTER. I desire only to make a word of reply. There has been a good deal of delicate learning introduced into the discussion here in regard to the appointment of these officers, and I confess that my learning does not comprehend the force of the reasoning or conclusion. What is the history of this school? Why the Annapolis Naval School was created by a law of Congress; it is filled by a law of Congress. We now propose to modify that law by determining in what manner it is to be filled. The school, whether it results in commissioned officers or not, is filled by legislative authority. A grave query is now raised whether we have the power to determine the manner in which officers shall be created upon which the Executive can lay his hands. Now, whether they are midshipmen, or passed midshipmen, or lieutenants, I hold that the law-making power has the supreme control of the subject until they become officers.

Mr. HAVEN. I am most decidedly of the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio; but the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan reaches beyond supplying the school for the purpose of supplying midshipmen to the Navy.

Mr. CARTTER. One word there. The President does not dispose of these officers until he has them provided for.

Mr. HAVEN. Most clearly; but the objection is that, under the Constitution, you cannot restrict him. He has the right to go among 23,000,000 of persons for selection; but the gentleman proposes to reduce that number to one individual from each district, recommended by its member of Congress.

Mr. CARTTER. You cannot restrict the President, eh? You cannot reach the Executive? This is a potent body if that be the case! Why, sir, you can degrade them in their official stations to-morrow!

Mr. HAVEN. I do not object to that position.

Mr. CARTTER. The whole theory is a reversal of the order of the Government. You give the President the law-making power of the Government, instead of placing him as an Executive to carry out the laws. I apprehend, however much difficulty we find in doing a little legislative act, that this school and its personnel is within the control of this body, and that it would be an outrageous invasion on the power of this body for the President to assume to say that he would create the material to fill it.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurring on the amendment of Mr. STUART, as amended, and being put, it was adopted.

Mr. STANLY. I move, pro forma, to insert after the amendment just adopted—

That no cadet shall be appointed under fifteen years of age.

Mr. Chairman, some remarks were made here on yesterday, which I desired to get the floor at the time to reply to, but was unable to do so. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] is reported in the Intelligencer as saying that there was no more corrupt officer in the Government than the late Secretary of the Navy. The gentleman specifies nothing, but the charge is general. I understand this morning that he made use of no such words as have been imputed to him. I do not now see him in his seat. They have gone out now to the country, and it is due to himself to say in what manner to correct such a gross charge.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] also indulged in remarks of censure of the Secretary of the Navy, on account of his appointments. If the gentleman has any correction to make, I should be happy to hear him.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. With the permission of the gentleman from North Carolina, I will explain.

My complaint was against the action of the Navy Department, in a matter which I suppose was managed by the subordinates of the Secretary. It was not that the appointments from my district were improper; but that they were made without my knowledge, at a time when I was seeking information as to whether there was a vacancy.

The correspondence, I have no doubt, was prepared and carried on by a clerk or head of a bureau. And I think it very probable the Secretary may not have known by whom the applicants were recommended. With the Secretary of the Navy I have no personal acquaintance, and have no complaint to make against him personally. I did, and do complain, that what I regarded as an invasion of my privileges as a member of this House, had been invaded by the Department; but that it was in a matter which I presume was managed by the subordinates of the Secretary.

Mr. STANLY. The appointments the gentleman refers to, were made before the Secretary of the Navy had the honor of seeing or knowing the gentleman. He is mistaken. They were made in the month of September, 1851, before he came here, and there is no cause or shadow of complaint against the Secretary of the Navy upon that ground.

Mr. STANTON. As I have said, I do not know the Secretary of the Navy personally. The files, however, of his Department bear evidence that I sought to know if there were vacancies existing in my district.

Mr. STANLY. And the first letter from the Department in reply was that there were two.

Mr. STANTON. In that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STANLY. I am in earnest; and I challenge the gentleman to call for the correspondence between the Secretary and himself upon that subject. If it is not as I state it, I shall never say turkey upon this floor again. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLY, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. SWEETSER. I move to insert the following, after line one hundred and eighty-six:

For the use of the Navy of the United States of Espy's "Conical Ventilator," and in bar of all claim for the same, $10,000, the same having been thoroughly tested by consent of the inventor, for the last ten years; to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is a private claim, and I raise the question that it is not in order.

Mr. SWEETSER. The gentleman is mistaken; this is not a private claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SWEETSER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this bill proposes to sustain the Navy, and to make the necessary appropriation for that purpose. The amendment I have offered is for the accomplishment of that very object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. SWEETSER. Inasmuch as I am seriously pressing this amendment, and desire to have the committee give it a fair hearing, I take an appeal from that decision.

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was agreed to.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move to insert, after the word "building," in the following:

"Portsmouth, New Hampshire. For building timber shed No. 29, foundation for shores at railway, drains, gutters, and paving, and repairs of all kinds, $35,041 23"—

—these words—

Cooper's shop and watchman's quarters, quay-wall south of basin—

—and to increase the appropriation to $58,093 95.

I have been instructed to move to restore the original appropriation for the various navy-yards; and I will state here now generally, as I do not wish to trouble the committee particularly upon these various amendments as they come up, except on the one for the navy-yard at Memphis, that the amount of reduction of the estimates of the Secretary of the Navy for hospitals and navy-yards is something about $500,000.

The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, inquiring whether some of these appropriations could not be postponed. The Secretary of the Navy replies that they are in his judgment absolutely necessary; but that about $175,000 of them could be postponed without injury to the public service. I myself do not see why these works, if they are absolutely necessary, should be thrown over for a succeeding year, with the overflowing treasury that we have. The Committee on Naval Affairs have instructed me to restore only such of these works as the Secretary of the Navy, and the officers under him, believe to be absolutely and indispensably necessary to be completed at the present time. This amendment is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the decision of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The proposition is to reduce the original estimates of the Secretary of the Navy by $175,000 for improvements, which he says can be postponed without injury to the public service. That restores all except the particular works which the Secretary of the Navy says can be postponed without injury to the public service until the next fiscal year. It is for the committee to determine whether the estimates of the Department shall be sustained in all their usefulness or not. In offering this amendment, I only discharge the duty which the Committee on Naval Affairs imposed upon me.

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] under the instructions of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Committee of Ways and Means, at the time these estimates were before them, had occasion to examine them with a great deal of particularity. It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON], that a letter was addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, inquiring what estimates might be dispensed with. Certain estimates were indicated by him which could be postponed until some subsequent time. The Committee of Ways and Means were not satisfied with the answer given by the bureau having charge of these matters, and a sub-committee of the Committee of Ways and Means called upon the officer having charge of these propositions, and interrogated him in relation to the items of appropriations for the support and maintenance of the navy-yard. The result of the inquiry made by this sub-committee is contained in the appropriations as specified in this bill. The Secretary of the Navy estimated $81,120 as being necessary for making the proper repairs at the navy-yard at Portsmouth; but upon a reinvestigation of his estimates, he was induced to reduce that sum $23,000. The sub-committee, in their inquiries, were of the opinion that the very items which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] now proposes to restore, might be dispensed with at the present time. The items he intends to insert in the bill are for erecting the cooper's shop and watchmen's quarters; and for the erection of a quay-wall south of the basin. Commodore Smith, upon whom we called in relation to these estimates, stated, that so far as the appropriation for the watchmen's quarters and cooper's shop was concerned, it might be deferred another year. There is an extensive cooper's shop at the navy-yard, only fifty-six miles from the one now under construction. There is an old one at the navy-yard at Portsmouth; and the committee were of the opinion, from all the information they received upon the subject, that it would answer the purpose very well for the time, and for two or three years to come.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to correct the gentleman. Here is the letter of the Secretary.

Mr. PHELPS. I did not obtain the information from the Secretary, because he knew nothing in relation to the matter; but I went to the commodore, who had charge of these matters, and there I obtained information, much better than from the Secretary—from the man who made up, in a great degree, the estimates.

Mr. STANTON. This is a statement from that same bureau.

Mr. PHELPS. Have you the estimates and answers given to the interrogatories propounded by the Committee of Ways and Means to that commodore, when these matters were under examination? I have that information, and I say that the appropriations which the Committee of Ways and Means have stricken out for the navy-yard at Portsmouth, are not needed at the present time. The other appropriation was for the construction of a quay-wall, connecting with the stone work contiguous with the dock, which would be necessary if the dock should prove fit to answer the purposes for which it was intended. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] is of the opinion that the new dock erected at Portsmouth will answer the purposes for which it is intended, and if it does, the appropriation for that quay-wall, at the present time, is not necessary. This was the result to which the Committee of Ways and Means arrived, and they, therefore, diminished those estimates by these amounts. Now, then, refer again to the unexpended balances which may be expended in improvements at the Portsmouth navy-yard, and you have some $8,814 of unexpended appropriations upon the first day of July last, as reported to us from the Treasury Department. I believe the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to increase this by something like $22,000. Then the only matter in dispute between the gentleman and myself is $14,000. As I remarked before, upon the examination of Commodore Smith, at the time that three members of the committee were present, and upon the explanations given to us of the manner in which he proposed to expend the money, the Committee of Ways and Means arrived at the conclusion that the appropriation was not needed and might be safely dispensed with. For these reasons, I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON.]

Mr. STANTON. I hope I may be allowed to say that the Secretary of the Navy called our attention particularly to those reductions.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STANTON's amendment, and it was rejected.

The following section was then read:

"Boston, Massachusetts: For rain-water cistern, pitch-house and oakum loft, muster-office, and repairs of all kinds, $28,100."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am instructed to offer an amendment to that section restoring the appropriations, except those which the Secretary of the Navy says can be postponed for another year. After the word "for," I move to insert "grading and paving timber shed No. 31; coal-house near rope-walk;" and to increase the appropriation to $48,743.

I beg leave to say, in reply to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] has stated in the last speech he made upon this subject, that the Secretary of the Navy considered these matters so important and indispensable that before he went out of office he addressed a letter to our committee requesting us to investigate them. I have his letter before me now, in which he states that he considered these works as indispensable. The head of the Bureau, to which the gentleman has referred, made the same statement to me no longer than three days ago, and I have the statement of that Bureau, to which the Committee on Naval Affairs have precisely conformed. Although I am not personally acquainted with all the different navy-yards, and the precise necessity for these different works, I believe that the estimates of the officers in this respect ought to be trusted, and that the appropriations for these purposes ought to be restored.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON.] I do not think that there is any occasion to raise this appropriation, because there will be enough in the appropriation as the bill is to carry this Administration through its term to the 4th of March next. With $24,000 unexpended balance there will be nobody embarrassed; and if we fail to pass the amendment, the incoming Democratic Administration can stand a great deal of embarrassment, and I think that the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. MILLSON. I propose to increase the amendment $100. I do so for the purpose of having an opportunity of stating that if the reductions made by the Committee of Ways and Means have been as injudicious and as injurious in this case as I know them to have been in the case of the navy-yard at Gosport, I may fairly infer that the original estimates were not too large. Now, in relation to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] says as to his conversation with the Secretary of the Navy, I can only say that both the Secretary of the Navy and Commodore Smith have expressed to me much dissatisfaction at the reductions made by the Committee of Ways and Means, and have told me that they had brought the estimates down to the lowest possible sum consistent with the public service. I know that the estimates made for the navy-yard at Gosport were cut down by the Department. They were cut down from $290,000, estimated for by one of the most judicious officers that ever commanded at that navy-yard, to about $170,000, and the Committee of Ways and Means struck down this estimate to about $80,000, being little more than one fourth of the amount estimated to be necessary by this commandant. I will not now go into an examination of the amendments proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] by the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in reference to the appropriation for the Gosport navy-yard. When I do come to consider that matter, I hold myself ready to demonstrate to the House, both from the testimony of valuable officers of the Government and from my own personal knowledge, that the appropriations asked for by the Department were not one dollar too large; and inferring that the estimates were made with as much discretion for the yard now under consideration, I trust that if the amendment which I have offered, and which I only propose for the purpose of enabling me to express my general views upon this subject, may not pass, that at least the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs may prevail.

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.] It proposes to increase the amount specified in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] and in opposing it, I shall take occasion to explain my views in regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. The estimates submitted to this House for the improvement of the navy-yard at Boston involve the expenditure of something like $74,000 during the present fiscal year. Commodore Smith, who has charge of this department, stated in a letter to the Committee of Ways and Means, written in answer to one addressed to him by that committee, that $17,500 for the rebuilding of a smithery, might be omitted from the appropriation. The gentleman from Tennessee proposes to increase the sum $3,900, in one instance; and for erecting a coal-house and rope-walk, $6,742—making an increase of something upwards of $10,000. Now, there is, as I remarked before, an unexpended balance of more than $24,000 for the purpose of completing the improvements in the navy-yard at Boston, which exceeds the amount which the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to increase this appropriation.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman if he is not aware of the fact that that unexpended balance will be required for the completion of other works that are in progress?

Mr. PHELPS. The Committee of Ways and Means were not informed that such will be the case, when they called for balances of appropriations standing on the books of the Treasury Department. It was the duty of the Secretary to inform us that this balance of appropriation would be needed for the purpose of completing improvements already in process of being constructed. In some instances that course was pursued by the Department, but such was not the case in this instance.

But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] seems to think that the Committee of Ways and Means are desirous of embarrassing the incoming Administration, from his remark, that the amounts specified in the bill will be sufficient to carry through this Administration, and let the incoming Democratic Administration take all its embarrassments upon it. The Committee of Ways and Means have pursued no such course, and when the gentleman from Virginia makes an imputation of that kind, he makes one that is not supported by the facts.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I believe no further amendment is in order.

Mr. MILLSON. With the consent of the committee, I will withdraw my amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation $200. The gentleman from Missouri is rather swift in undertaking to charge me with having assailed the Committee of Ways and Means in this respect. I have abstained from doing it, and nobody ought to know that better than the gentleman himself.

Mr. PHELPS. I understood the gentleman from Virginia, when he was addressing the committee, to say that the amount specified in the bill was sufficient to enable this Administration to get along, but that that amount, without any increase to it, would leave the incoming Administration, which he believed would be a Democratic Administration, embarrassed and incumbered for want of means.

Mr. BAYLY. That is precisely what I did say.

Mr. PHELPS. Very well; was not that an imputation on the committee?

Mr. POLK. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to propound an inquiry to the gentleman from Missouri? I will occupy but a moment.

Mr. BAYLY. My time is short, but I cannot refuse my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. POLK. The gentleman from Missouri has assumed the privilege of defending the Committee of Ways and Means for their reductions of the estimates of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and of the Department. I want to know of him, to what extent that committee has exercised this economy in the reduction of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. PHELPS. As to the recommendations of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am not advised of them.

Mr. POLK. I wish to know if the gentleman understands my question? He surely has mind enough to comprehend a plain question. If he has not, he must be a little inefficient as a member of that committee.

Mr. PHELPS. Perhaps as inefficient as some other members of this House.

Mr. POLK. I want to know to what extent the Committee of Ways and Means have gone in their reductions?

Mr. PHELPS. I understand the gentleman to inquire how much the Committee of Ways and Means have cut down the estimates reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs—

Mr. POLK. And the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PHELPS. I answer that inquiry by saying that I did not know what the recommendations of the Committee on Naval Affairs were.

Mr. POLK. Then I understand that the Committee of Ways and Means are ignorant of what they are doing.

Mr. PHELPS. The Committee on Naval Affairs do not submit estimates to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. POLK. What I want to know is, if the gentleman from Missouri, as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, understands what he is doing in recommending a reduction in the appropriations for this arm of the service. If he does not understand it, he has no right to talk about it.

Mr. BAYLY. I cannot yield the floor any longer. The only point that I have to make with the gentleman from Missouri is, that he seemed to imply that I had cast an imputation upon the Committee of Ways and Means. It will be for the House to judge whether it was an imputation upon their motives and purposes or their wisdom. If it was the latter, I cannot help myself; it certainly was not the former. But if I had desired to make a point upon that member of the committee—and certainly I shall never make one upon the committee itself—I could not have had a better point than the member himself has supplied me with.

Mr. SKELTON. I call the gentleman to order; he is making personal remarks instead of speaking to his amendment.

Mr. BAYLY. I want to show the gentleman from Missouri that his sources of information were irregular.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia because I am in favor of the original amount, and I rise for the purpose of reading a single sentence from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy. Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] would have this committee to understand that when the Secretary of the Navy makes his estimate, and declares this amount to be necessary for the service of the current year, he has not taken into consideration the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the former year. Sir, this is a grave imputation upon the Secretary of the Navy, upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, and upon everybody who has had anything to do with these estimates. The Secretary of the Navy, in his letter, says:

"I have only to superadd that the estimates were carefully prepared, and that only so much was asked under each head of appropriation as was deemed necessary for the service of the year."

Something has been said about embarrassing the incoming Administration. I should rather be disposed, if I could entertain the opinion of any gentleman in this House, that the charge would more properly be made against the gentlemen upon the other side of the House, because they do not seem to be very much disposed to sustain the estimates of the present Administration. Sir, I advocate these appropriations not because this Administration has recommended them; or because the next Administration will have to expend the money, but because they are necessary for the public service.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman does not mean to charge us with attempting to embarrass the incoming Administration. It would be very unkind of us to hurt our own friends. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYLY. I now withdraw that amendment, and move to amend the amendment so as to increase the amount $300.

Mr. Chairman, to preclude a point of order, I desire to state in the beginning that the remarks which I am going to make in favor of this amendment are to show that the source of information upon which the gentleman from Missouri relies for his reductions is a source of information to which he had no right to address himself, and one to which this House ought not to refer. I should not have gone into this matter if the gentleman had not gratuitously gone out of his way to say that I had cast imputations upon the Committee of Ways and Means. But as he has done that, I mean to show that in his conduct in this matter he has not acted according to the proper understanding of the relations between the legislative and executive departments of the Government, and of official etiquette. Now, sir, he has no right to know Commodore Smith—none at all. He has no right, in reference to this matter, to know anybody but the Secretary of the Navy or the President of the United States. At a former day, this practice was carried so far—I know the fact—that orders were issued to each of the executive departments requiring that before letters or inquiries from members of Congress, or elsewhere, should be answered, they should go through the hands of the head of the Department; and there is nobody who will reflect upon this matter—

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. BAYLY. I beg the gentleman to let me answer his colleague on the committee. I do not assail him. I shall not do it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is assailing the action of the Committee of Ways and Means. Mr. BAYLY. Yes, sir, it was irregular. No member of this House who understands the relations between the Executive and Congress, or who understands proper official etiquette, will ever go mousing about the bureaux and clerks' offices to get his information. It is his duty to go to headquarters. And, sir, if I was the Secretary of the Navy and the head of one of my bureaux was to undertake to answer inquiries in relation to the duties of my Department, I would rebuke him for it severely.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to state the fact, that the written statement of the head of the bureau asks for the appropriations as I have stated, and that the gentleman from Missouri relies upon verbal statements made in conversation.

Mr. BAYLY. I have no doubt of it, and that shows the impropriety of this House listening to a mere private conversation with the head of a bureau in place of responsible and official communications from the head of the Department. If you depart from responsible official statements for which public officers can be held responsible, and go to acting upon such information as the gentleman from Missouri, who undertakes to rebuke me, comes here upon, you are sure to be deceived and misled.

Mr. PHELPS. Now, sir, when that gentleman undertakes to say that a member of the National Legislature can go nowhere but to a Secretary to obtain information upon those matters on which he is to legislate, he has misrepresented the American people and the character of an American legislator.

Mr. FITCH. I call the gentleman to order. I think we have had enough of this.

Mr. PHELPS. The Committee will bear with me for one word further. I regret that anything of an unfriendly nature has occurred in this committee. But I am only defending myself and my own action, and if I have cast an arrow, it has been because an arrow has been first hurled at me.

Mr. BAYLY. You began it yourself.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call both the gentlemen to order. I think it is a fair set-off now.

Mr. PHELPS. I will now confine my remarks to the subject-matter before the committee, and I trust, without indulging in any personality. There has been enough of it. It is contrary to my nature. I desire nothing of the kind. The gentleman from Virginia took occasion to refer to the manner in which the Committee of Ways and Means had cut down these estimates. Now, I find that when he was chairman of the committee he struck out one of the very items of appropriation which the committee has now stricken out. Does the gentleman recollect that?

Mr. BAYLY. The rejection of that item by the Committee of Ways and Means was after a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in which the points were indicated where these reductions could be made.

Mr. PHELPS. Very well. I hold in my hands the estimates submitted at the last session of Congress. It was brought directly before the House, the same item being stricken out. Why did not the Committee of Ways and Means embrace it then, instead of throwing it over to this session? You could dispense with it then, and we can dispense with it now. That is one of the items which we have stricken out. The information in relation to the estimates submitted by the Secretaries, is collected from each bureau under their control. Under their authority, each bureau is required to submit all the estimates which it believes are necessary for all purposes in carrying on the affairs of the Government; and if it is thought necessary to strike down any of these estimates, the matter is submitted to the Secretary, and finally sent back to the chief of the bureau, under whose control it comes for reduction.

Mr. POLK. Has not the Committee of Ways and Means, in the estimates they have submitted to this House, reduced the estimates as furnished by the Secretary of the Navy, more than thirty per cent.?

Mr. PHELPS. They have not reduced them more than thirty per cent.; however, I cannot refer to the exact amount at this moment. I have it here on my desk, but it takes some time to refer to it, and as a matter of course, too much to be accomplished in a five minutes' speech. Why does the Committee on Naval Affairs come here, and ask to have them restored?

Mr. POLK. As one of the members of that committee, I will tell the gentleman the grounds on which their action has been founded.

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. BAYLY. With the consent of the committee, I will withdraw my amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to amend the amendment, by reducing the amount $300.

Mr. D. said: Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, as is well known to this House. I have yet to learn what is the duty of a committee of this House, if the estimates of the Secretary and the estimates of your bureaux are to be sent to this House, and we have nothing to do but to ratify the decrees that come to us from the Departments. If this is to be our duty, we had better go home to our constituents, than to be sitting here carrying out this useless expenditure. I believe I was not sent here for that purpose. My constituents sent me here to look after the affairs of Government, and in doing so, to exercise my judgment in my legislative capacity in looking after the estimates sent to this House, and the appropriations which we are asked to sanction, which my constituents help to pay into the Treasury. And I ask, Mr. Chairman, if this is not just what we are doing? What is the Committee of Ways and Means appointed for? Why do you send your bills to your committees, if you do not expect them to examine those bills, and to have recourse to all proper sources for information, and then upon that information to form their judgment, and report that judgment to the House. And I have yet to learn that it is improper, when we come here with all the means of information, to resort to any means which are not discourteous or illegal, in order to see what is right and what is wrong.

Mr. GOODENOW. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman is out of order. He is defending the Committee of Ways and Means, and not advocating the amendment he has offered. I for one am satisfied that the Committee of Ways and Means have discharged their duty, but I wish to interpose an objection to this kind of debate. We are called upon at this late period in the session to attend to important business, and I shall interpose objections to any unnecessary discussion.

Mr. DUNHAM. If members of this House would be as anxious to examine into these matters as are the Committee of Ways and Means, they would have the information necessary to act upon.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to say that I am not disposed to censure the Committee of Ways and Means, in exercising their judgment in reference to this appropriation.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know who is entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I believe I am entitled to the floor. I was proceeding to say, that I do not censure the Committee of Ways and Means for exercising their judgment in reference to appropriations, nor for varying the estimates of the Navy Department; but I hold them responsible for a correct exercise of that judgment. That is the only difficulty—that is the only question of difference between the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Naval Affairs. The judgment of the Committee of Ways and Means is one way, and the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs is another.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call the gentleman to order. He is not speaking to the amendment at all.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. With the consent of the committee I withdraw my amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

The question was then taken on Mr. STANTON's amendment, and it was not agreed to—ayes 36, noes not counted.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, under the instructions of the Committee on Naval Affairs, offered the following amendment:

In line ninety-eight, after word "saw-mill," insert: Commander's house; house for officers; lime, pitch, and coal-house; paving gutters, and flagging; filling in timber pond—and increase the amount to $162,000; so that the section would read:

New York, New York: To complete saw-mill, commander's house, house of officers, lime, pitch, and coal-house, paving gutters and flagging, filling in timber pond, quay wall, dredging channels, water tank, and lighter gas pipes and fixtures, lighting conductors, continuation of sewer, machinery, &c., for engine house, and repairs of all kinds, $162,000.

Mr. S. said: The same explanation applies to this as to the amendment just voted down.

Mr. PHELPS. The Committee of Ways and Means, upon examination of the estimates for this item, reduced them to the amount specified in the bill. I will only remark further, that in the deficiency bill the sum of $95,000 was appropriated to be expended at the Brooklyn navy-yard.

Mr. BOWNE. I wish to call the attention of the committee to one fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Further debate is not in order upon the amendment.

Mr. BOWNE. Then I move to increase the appropriation $300. I do it for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to this fact. I find in cutting down the estimates for the navy-yard at Memphis, here at Washington, and in the most important points in the country, they reduced about twenty-five or thirty per cent., but when we come to the navy-yard at Brooklyn, these estimates are cut down some fifty per cent. Now, it is well known that there is not a ship fitted out in the United States that does not have to come to Brooklyn to be completed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I did not know that officers' houses were very necessary in fitting out ships for sea. [Laughter.] But, as my colleague [Mr. PHELPS] has already stated, one reason why the appropriations or estimates were cut down more for Brooklyn than for the points to which the gentleman has alluded, was that there was a very large appropriation for that point even now.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE, under instructions of the Committee on Naval Affairs, offered the following amendment:

In line one hundred and six, after the word "kettles," insert:

Extension of pier wharf No. 4; filling up and grading—and increase appropriation to $59,248 20; so that the section would read as follows:

"Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: For shed to cover north railway, covering to south railway, steam-box and pitch-kettles, extension of pier wharf No. 4, filling up and grading, mooring anchors for dry-dock, dredging channel, continuing pavement to wharf, cross-paving to smithery, and from thence to the dock basin, paving round west end of ship-house, paving wharf No. 3 to ship-house, paving between ways of dock, paving between timber sheds, completing gutters and drains, completing shed No. 5, extending gas pipes, &c., extending water pipes one thousand feet, and repairs of all kinds, $59,248 20."

Mr. FLORENCE said: I have but little doubt it is almost unnecessary for me to occupy time, or to say much in favor of or upon the subject of the amendment which I have offered. Indeed, when I shall have briefly explained the necessity, the absolute necessity, sir, there is for the appropriation, I anticipate it will be sustained, rather than opposed, by the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire to say, because it is my duty to do so, that the Philadelphia navy-yard is in my district, and I have some knowledge of its situation and of the protection necessary to secure the public property deposited there. The appropriation for the building of pier wharf No. 4 was asked in the estimate submitted from the Navy Department. By the instruction of the Committee on Naval Affairs—whose attention was called to the fact that the appropriation was stricken out by the Committee of Ways and Means, as well as the amount for the paving and grading necessary to put the navy-yard in a condition to render it available for the purposes for which it is used—I have offered this amendment. The building of pier wharf No. 4 is required for protection to the dry-dock, which cost the Government nearly or quite $850,000 to construct, besides being necessary for the ordinary naval purposes of the yard in safely mooring vessels of war, and providing them a safe harbor during the prevalence of storms, and to secure them from injury by ice during the winter. But $11,000 is asked for the purpose of building the pier, which certainly is not much when the advantages to result from it are so great. At least $1,000,000 worth of Government property will be protected from injury if it is built.

The port warden's line having been extended some three or four hundred feet further east, by which the navy-yard property has been materially enlarged, has rendered a considerable amount of paving and grading absolutely necessary, and this may be urged as an additional reason for building the wharf pier. By extending the depth of the navy-yard, the Government of the United States have had their property largely added to in extent of territory, and increased in value perhaps $100,000.

During the time the dredging was going on, by which a sufficient depth of water was obtained to successfully test the sectional dry-dock, by docking the steamship City of Pittsburg, and the United States steamship Saranac, the soil at the bottom of the river was found to be an excellent kind of gravel, which was used for filling up and leveling the navy-yard. The use of this gravel saved an expenditure of a large sum of money. The improvements, however, are all in an unfinished state, and the amount I have asked for, and which I hope may be added to the appropriation, is necessary to finish them. It is, I assure the committee, economical to do so. There is much valuable property deposited in our navy-yard, consisting of ship timber and valuable materials for building vessels of war.

The buildings in which this material is deposited are valuable. The improvements projected will protect all the property of the Government, whether it is store-houses, ship-houses, shops, or the great structure which, I regret to say, has been so little used to test the skill and handicraft of our intelligent mechanics, since it has been made capable of use. I refer, of course, to the sectional dry-dock. Indeed, it seems to me we have to contend against fearful odds. Whenever anything is asked for Philadelphia, a sturdy opposition is manifested, which is, to me, most surprising. I indulge a hope it will soon be otherwise.

I submit this amendment, then, sir, with great confidence to this committee, not only because I have had an opportunity of judging by personal observation of the necessity of its passage, which the Committee of Ways and Means have not had, but because I apprehend I have given good reason why it should be adopted. I do not wish to impugn their motives in having refused to put it in their estimates. I would not do so for the world; not I. I do not wish to accuse them of ignorance; no, no. I have too much respect for them to do that. But they have not had the opportunity of observation at Philadelphia individually which I have had. Yet they have taken upon themselves to cut down this appropriation, and I am sure without knowing the disadvantage and loss which may result from it. Hence my remarks, which I am sure will exercise the influence I desire they should. And as I believe they are now convinced that $11,000 for the building of pier wharf No. 4 will protect property which cost the Government $850,000; and when the amount asked for that purpose, and for grading, paving, &c., will save three, four, or five times the amount of property, which may be washed away by high tides, the overflow of the wharves, or from the effect of heavy rains, I feel sure that the Committee of Ways and Means will not oppose this amendment, but will sustain it. I only ask, sir, that sheer justice may be done us. My constituents, I may here say, are not an exacting people; yet they ask that a share of the patronage of the Government may be distributed amongst them; and they feel an equal interest in the protection of the property of the Government immediately under their eye. I hope the amendment may be passed, and not share the fate of others which have preceded it.

Mr. CARTTER. I am opposed to the amendment and in favor of the economy which guided the Committee of Ways and Means in their retrenchment of these appropriations for the navy-yards. Having no war abroad, the efforts of local districts have been turned to the protection of the Navy at home, and the last that we heard of this Navy in this House was a proposition to clean up after them in the Straits of Gibraltar, [laughter,] where they had not skill and power enough to do it themselves.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call the gentleman to order; and I submit that the Straits of Gibraltar have nothing to do with the building of pier No. 4, in the city of Philadelphia, and the agreeing to the paving of the navy-yard at that place.

Mr. CARTTER. That is the last we heard of the Navy abroad. Now we find the Committee of Ways and Means, through the representatives of these various navy-yards at home, assailed for doing—what? For retrenching expenditures in protecting the Navy at home, which is unfit for sea; and this Representative of Philadelphia here, [Mr. FLORENCE,] for Buncombe, or other purpose, gets up here and talks about making land for the United States, and making new area for the navy-yard, and all this gammon and gas that has nothing to do with the expenses of the country. Everybody here understands that it is a little dung-hill effort to get a few votes in that district. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I cannot notice a remark of that kind. [Laughter.] My constituents sent me here for another purpose, but I desire—

Mr. CARTTER. I desire to occupy the floor.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to explain—

Mr. CARTTER. You cannot do it.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] to order for calling my colleague, [Mr. FLORENCE,] who has proved himself game, a dung-hill cock. [Great laughter.]

Mr. ORR. I move that the committee rise.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Let us take a recess!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for a division of the House upon that motion.

The House was then divided on the question, and there were upon a division—ayes 64, noes 61.

Before the result was announced—

Mr. VENABLE called for tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and VENABLE appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 63.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that the committee take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

The question was then taken upon the motion, and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the amendment of Mr. FLORENCE, it was put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The next clause that came up for consideration was as follows:

"Washington, District of Columbia: For completing ordnance building number eleven, fitting up timber dock, completing saw-mill, completing copper rolling mill, completing railway, completing side lathes in machine-shop, and repairs of all kinds, $123,778."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. By the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move to amend the clause by inserting after the word "railway," the words "commander's house, stone wharf, on south front of yard," and to strike out the words "$123,778," and insert "$153,433."

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The next clause was then read, as follows:

"Norfolk, Virginia: For store-house number fourteen, wharf north side of timber-dock, culvert, dredging machine, and repairs of all kinds, $80,732 20."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. By the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move to amend that clause by inserting after the word "Virginia," the words "for extending wharves, quay-wharves, completing timber-dock, paving from gate to ship-house, cart-shed," and to strike out "$80,732 20," and insert "$146,985 35."

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I propose to amend the clause last read by adding the following at the end of the clause:

And for extending quay-wharves, completing timber-dock, paving from gate to ship-house, buildings for officers, cart-shed, and grading and filling, $89,610 03.

Mr. M. said: I hope I may have the attention of the committee while I explain the object of this amendment. I say, sir, from my own knowledge of the condition of that yard, that the objects disallowed by the Committee of Ways and Means are even more important than those actually allowed by them. The amount proposed in my amendment is made up of $25,000 for extending the quay-wharves, $27,000 for building timber-dock, and the balance for the other items specified in the amendment. These two works to which I have alluded are in progress of construction, and the appropriations now asked are necessary for their completion. The quay-wharves are absolutely necessary to protect the earth, which is composed of what is called made-land, and which is daily washing into the river.

The timber-dock was commenced some years ago, and I need not remind the committee that the object of it is to protect the valuable timber there deposited against the depredation of the sea worm. It is absolutely necessary that a quantity of fresh water should be collected there, and secured by stone walls which surround the area. They have been built up to some extent, and the object of this appropriation is to complete the work.

I will state that the original estimate, made by the commandant of the yard, was $290,000, which was reduced by the Navy Department to $170,000, and that still further reduced by the Committee of Ways and Means to $80,000.

An inquiry was just now made of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] if the reductions made by the Committee of Ways and Means did not exceed thirty per cent.; and he answered no. I will state that the reduction at most of the navy-yards was more than fifty per cent. The original estimate for Boston was $74,525, and it was reduced to $28,100. That of New York was $240,550, and it was reduced $126,800; and that of Norfolk was $170,342 23, and it was reduced to $80,732 40.

Now, sir, I have myself inspected these works. They are not new works, but are now in progress, and must be, and are designed to be completed some time or other; and the simple inquiry is, ought they to be completed without delay? I tell the House that these works cannot remain in their present condition without injury to the public service.

Mr. CARTTER. I am opposed to this amendment. We have had the object of it fully stated by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] and still I am opposed to it, because I do not believe that it is best to erect monuments of reverence to the old and the useless. If I recollect right, we were called upon during the last Congress to give $72,000 to protect ship-timber against the sea-worm. Now, the sea-worm is the worst worm that we have had to contend with. It is a worm that eats out of the Treasury annually about nine million of dollars, and brings into it nothing.

The "Independence" was sent forth upon a three years' cruise as a product of this "sea-worm;" and out of twenty-six months she sailed three and a half, at a cost of $500 a day to the General Government; and this is the kind of offspring that the navy-yards of this description is sending forth for the defense of this Republic—a ship that sailed under the pretense of exercising her crew in cannon evolutions and of exercising her marine engine, out of twenty-five months that she was gone, was three months under sail, and two out of that three were spent in making her lazy return from the Mediterranean to the port of New York.

Now, sir, instead of barricading timber for the navy-yard at Norfolk from year to year and setting up protection against this navy-worm, I would burn it up, and with it burn up the miserable structures that they produce when put into ships.

Another appropriation in the amendment of my noble and honorable friend is to build officers' houses.

Mr. MILLSON. Not for building officers' houses; but for buildings for officers.

Mr. CARTTER. Buildings for officers. Well, what is the difference? They are accommodations for officers. Now, I look upon these houses precisely as I do upon the ship-houses which I have seen in these navy-yards. There is the old hulk, the skeleton of a ship, now resting upon its bearings in one of these offices in the city of New York, and which has cost this Government more than $300,000 to renew the rot of years; and the same proposition is now made to guard ship-timber against the rot of years. You had better eat out the heart of the whole system, and build your ships by contract; and when they are built, set them afloat upon the business of the nation, and let those who man them understand how to manage them.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. POLK. I move to strike out the whole clause. The most remarkable instance of folly, to my mind, is the remarks submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTTER.] They show a degree of folly—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I feel obliged to call my friend to order. His remarks are out of order.

Mr. POLK. I will be in order by saying that the gentleman from Ohio is a man of sense. Ours is a great nation. What is the amount of its tonnage? What is the necessary protection to be provided for it? Are we to protect it or not? Will the gentleman say that we shall not have a Navy efficient enough to protect the country? Will he vote as he did to-day for the passage of the Fench spoliation bill?

Mr. CARTTER. In that my friend is mistaken.

Mr. POLK. Did you not vote to go to its consideration?

Mr. CARTTER. No, sir.

Mr. DUNCAN. I feel bound to raise a question of order. I hope the Chair will confine gentlemen to the amendment before the committee. At this stage of the session, every gentleman ought to see the propriety of abstaining from this desultory discussion.

Mr. POLK. If I were to confine my remarks to those of the gentleman from Ohio, I would be in order in anything I might say whatever. [Laughter.] I hold that we, as a nation, ought to make the necessary and proper appropriations to protect our commerce. How can we do it, unless we make such armaments in the country as will defend it? Will the gentleman from Ohio, or any other gentleman of those who support the worthy members of the Committee of Ways and Means, tell me what sort of protection can be offered, unless the Government will give ships that sail upon the waves a proper armament?

Mr. McMULLIN. I move the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes 65, noes 55.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, the chairman [Mr. FICKLIN] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 244, making appropriations for the naval establishment for the year ending June 30, 1853, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are three or four appropriation bills which have not yet been touched. The Indian appropriation bill has been returned to us from the Senate with very many important amendments upon it. Important amendments will be made to the civil and diplomatic and the Army bill, and the naval bill, which is now before the committee; and all these bills and amendments are to be considered and acted upon in nine days. I move a resolution closing the five minutes debate upon the naval appropriation bill now before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POLK. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not in order for me, Mr. Speaker, to move a suspension of the rules to enable me to introduce the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not, in the opinion of the Chair. It has been the practice to count Sunday amongst the last ten days.

Mr. KING, of New York. The resolution, then, can be introduced to-morrow.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to move that the House adjourn till ten o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It is not competent for the House to change the hour of meeting without previous notice.

Mr. ORR. This is a special and not general change.

The SPEAKER. It is competent to change the day within three days, but not the hour of meeting, unless on notice in the proper manner.

Mr. STUART. I moved the House adjourn; which motion was agreed to.

And the House accordingly adjourned till eleven o'clock to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 20, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. HALE. I move to dispense with the execution of the order which devotes this day to private bills, for the purpose of taking up the homestead bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator's motion, at present, can only extend to suspending the rule. It will require a separate motion to take up the bill alluded to.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall vote to suspend the order, but when suspended, I shall propose to give until twelve o'clock to morning business; from twelve to one, to the civil and diplomatic bill; and the river and harbor bill for the remainder of the day.

Mr. FISH. The day before yesterday I gave notice that I should this morning ask the Senate, during the morning hour, to take up House bill No. 280, known as Bennett's land bill. In consequence, however, of the civil and diplomatic bill having been made the special order of the day, at half past eleven, I am not disposed to interfere with it. I shall, therefore, defer my motion till to-morrow, when I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow me to call up that bill.

The motion to suspend the order was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury; a report of the Secretary of War; a report of the Secretary of the Navy; and a report of the Attorney General, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the clerks in their Departments and their bureaus, and in the office of the Attorney General, which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, relative to the employment of agents to pay the interest on the public debt; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, communicating the annual report of the Board of Regents of that Institution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, that five thousand additional copies of the report be printed, it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

COAST SURVEY IN CALIFORNIA.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the extension of the operations of the Coast Survey on the coast of California to Cape St. Lucas, on the Pacific coast, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone all the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the bill commonly known as "the homestead bill;" and upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have been waiting several days to make reports. There are bills which ought to be printed and laid upon the tables of Senators. I am in favor of the homestead bill, but I have voted against taking it up twice, because of the untimely period at which the motion was made. The friends of the bill who are thus pressing it, are doing it more injury than its opponents; and why? Because they bring it in at such an untimely season, interfering with legitimate business. I will vote against any measure which is brought forward in that way. We want to have our bills from the committees handed in and printed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Like my colleague, I am in favor of the homestead bill, and will vote to take it up at the first proper time we can get, without interfering with our imperative duty as committee men; and in order to bring this thing to a point, I will specify what I conceive to be an appropriate time. We now devote a good portion of the morning hour, up to one o'clock, to the civil and diplomatic bill. From one, during the balance of the session, each day, we devote to the river and harbor bill. Now, I propose that at four o'clock we take a recess, and meet at six o'clock, and at six each evening proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill, and the other land bills, until we get through with them. I am prepared to stand by that until the end of the session, if necessary, to dispose of these land bills; and if the friends of the homestead bill, or the Bennett bill, wish to give these measures a fair chance, and a fair hearing this session, let us come here at six o'clock and sit each evening, and dispose of them.

Mr. GWIN. I am very anxious to have the opportunity of voting on the homestead bill, but I am not willing to allow any other bill to take precedence of the appropriation bills. I shall vote against placing any measure—I do not care how much I am in favor of it—in advance of the appropriation bills.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to make one observation in order that the country may understand the condition of affairs here. There are hundreds of private claimants to whom the Government is indebted, and they are suffering for the want of what is due to them; and we are now called upon to suspend the investigation of the rights due to those citizens, merely to take up a bill giving land to men who have done nothing in the service of the country more than the rest of the people.

Mr. HALE. Gentlemen have said a good deal about putting themselves right before the country. Certainly, sir, I have no disposition to put anybody wrong; but the plea of "a more convenient season"—and I have no doubt of its sincerity so far as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is concerned—will not do. I sympathize with his colleague who has special charge of the bill for the relief of the unfortunate insane. He cannot be more earnest for that bill than I am. Sir, I expect to be voted down upon this question. I expect to be beaten upon it. I expect it will not be taken up either now or at any time this session. The "convenient season" will not arrive until after the first Monday in November at least; but I simply want a vote, and I will take it at any time. With all deference to the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS], I do not think that an evening session is practicable; but if the Senate will just take it up, I will go with him for postponing it to any hour he names when it may be considered. I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate. I will vote for the consideration of the bill at any hour, if it is midnight, if the Senate will only take it up.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator has said precisely what I expected when he moved to take up this bill in this irregular manner, in opposition to measures that are pending, and have a precedence over it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. We all know his motives. Mr. HALE. I call the Senator to order. I appeal to the Chair if it is in order for a Senator to say that he knows my motives?

Mr. DOUGLAS. We all know that you are governed by patriotic motives.

The PRESIDENT. If a Senator assigns improper motives, it is out of order.

Mr. HALE. The remark implied that my motive was improper. I ask the judgment of the Chair if it is proper for a Senator to make such an assertion?

The PRESIDENT. It is certainly in order for a Senator to say what he supposes to be the motive.

Mr. HALE. I did not speak of the Senator who has the floor; but I ask if it is in order for a Senator to call out from his seat that he knows what are my motives?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair heard nothing of the kind.

Mr. HALE. I did; and it is against that I appeal.

Mr. DOUGLAS. On the statement of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, I will vote to take up the bill, and then postpone it to an hour I will indicate. I will indicate six o'clock this evening—taking a recess from four to six—so that we may keep at it each night until we get through it.

Mr. RUSK. I do not rise to protract this debate. A debate of a similar kind was protracted yesterday, to the defeat of the morning business. But I rise for the purpose of saying that business, in my opinion, is not advanced in this manner. I have had two bills to report, which are important to the whole country. I have been ready for some time to report them. One is in relation to postage on printed matter, and the other is the post route bill, in which every State is concerned. If we had not gone on yesterday morning and consumed the time with patriotic speeches, for about an hour, we could have passed them both. They would have raised no question in the Senate; and, in ten minutes, we could have passed them and sent them over to the House. It will be necessary to send them to the House, because some amendments must be made to them; therefore it is important to get them up as soon as possible. If this debate goes on in this way to-day, they will be crowded out again. I hope we shall not consume the morning hour by this debate, but that these reports may be made, and that we may be allowed to act upon necessary bills.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from New Hampshire seemed surprised, because it was said by a Senator on this side of the Chamber that we all knew his motives. I do not know what motive was intended to be attributed to him by the honorable Senator who made the observation; but I suspect that his own good sound sense will convince him, upon a mere statement of the facts, that the country will be convinced that his motive is to defeat the bill. Let me appeal to his own judgment. He says that he knows the bill will be defeated. Now, sir, we all know it will be defeated, if it is taken up at this period of the session. We all know that almost every Senator desires to discuss the bill. It is known, therefore, to every Senator, that it is utterly impossible that it can be discussed and passed at the present session. What is the result, if you do not take it up now? It has already passed the House of Representatives. It will come up as a part of the unfinished business of this session, at the commencement of the next session, without any action of the other branch of the National Legislature; and we shall then have time to act upon the subject, and the honorable Senator will have an opportunity of presenting the bill in its fairest aspects. And then, Mr. President, as the honorable Senator has referred to an event which he intimates will have some effect here, the November election will have passed, and then we can act upon the bill. Not only shall we have time to discuss it, but we can act upon it without its having the bearing to which the honorable Senator has alluded. Then, it is palpable that whatever may have been the motive—and I am sure that it could not be—everybody will be convinced that that is the necessary effect of what the Senator desires.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire, if he is sincerely desirous of advancing the interests of this bill, will accede to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois. I wish to say of that bill, that I am its friend in its length, breadth, and depth. I was prepared to report it back favorably, and to vote for and urge its passage the very day it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. But in consequence of the absence of some of the members of the Senate, who accompanied the remains of Mr. Clay to Kentucky, that committee was unable to do so. If I had dreamed that there was any the slightest particle of hope of obtaining the favorable action of the Senate upon it heretofore, without prejudice to, and almost without ruining the bill—sir, if everything around us had not foreshadowed inevitable defeat—defeat, not upon the merits of the bill, but for the want of time to consider it, I should have moved to take it up long ago. The State and people I represent are deeply interested in the passage of this bill, and ardently attached, as I am, to the principle upon which it is based, I trust we will be able to pass upon it before Congress adjourns; but I hope it will not be thrust upon the Senate in such a manner, and at such a time, as to cause it to be voted down, time after time, for the purpose of making political capital in the presidential election.

Mr. CHASE. I desire that the precise state of the question should be understood. Nothing is more common in this body than to take up bills for the purpose of making them the special order for a particular day or hour. It consumes no time, leads to no discussion. The Senator from New Hampshire moves simply to take up this bill, and the Senator from Illinois proposes that it shall be made the special order for some future hour. He has named six o'clock this evening. I am indifferent as to what hour is named, if it is understood that it will be taken up. The Senator from New Hampshire has already proposed to accede to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois. If taken up, it will lead to no debate at present. If, then, the Senate is disposed at any time during this session to take up this bill, now is the time, and there can be no other time so appropriate as the present. It is simply desired to put the bill within the control of the Senate, and enable them to fix some time at which it may be considered. I am certain my friend from Iowa did not understand that the Senator from New Hampshire had acceded to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois, for if he had he would have made no objection. No consumption of time is necessary for it. All we have to do is to vote to take it up, and then postpone it until some hour that may be agreed upon.

Mr. MASON. I am opposed to taking up this bill at all, because I am opposed to the policy of it; but that opposition will be very much strengthened when I consider the quarter from which the motion to take it up comes. Sir, it has become a part of the history of the day, that the Senator who makes this proposition has been nominated for the Presidency of the country by a party called the Abolition party, the Liberty party, the Free-Soil party, or in whatever other name they may happen to rejoice.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the necessity of requesting the Senator to confine himself to the proposition before the Senate, which is the motion to postpone the prior orders, with the view of taking up the homestead bill.

Mr. MASON. I do not question the motives of the Senator from New Hampshire. I have no doubt that they are patriotic according to that Senator's measure of patriotism; but if I am not mistaken, this bill for giving away the public lands is made a plank in the platform of the convention which recently nominated that gentleman. Now, "I fear the Greeks even when they bring presents;" and if I had no other reason for opposing this bill, I should not want to arm that party with the means of giving a largess to the people to invite their votes. Sir, the proposition comes from a suspicious quarter—a very suspicious quarter. If there were no other reason for passing it over until after the November election, that would be conclusive with me. I cannot consent to any measure which will contribute to the support of that party, a party which, if it ever attain its ends, can only attain them by destroying this Government. That party, it seems, has adopted this bill as a means of buying up popular votes at the presidential election. We have evidence of that fact, for the convention which recently assembled at Pittsburg, and nominated him as a candidate for the Presidency, made this bill one of its leading features to recommend the nomination to the American people.

Mr. HALE. I am very sorry, Mr. President—no I am not either; I thought I was sorry, but on reflection I am rather glad; but I must say that I am much astonished at the aspect in which the Senator from Virginia looks at this measure. That Senator says in plain terms what he thinks of this bill. Does he know who is the author of the bill? I suppose that we have a right to speak of the history of the country as we read it in the newspapers? Was it the offspring of somebody who does not measure patriotism by the same standard as the honorable Senator from Virginia? He says he does not measure his patriotism as I do. I can assure the Senator, that if there is one thing in my political position for which I thank God, it is that we have different standards. Yes, sir, I am thankful, heartily thankful, for that. Does the Senator know where this measure originated? Is it the offspring of some fanatical Abolitionist or Free-Soiler? Did it come from Pittsburg, or from Cleveland? Sir, if the public journals speak the truth, this bill has its origin in a section of country which measures patriotism by the same standard as the Senator from Virginia. I think it comes a little south of the State of Virginia; and let me tell the honorable Senator, that, as much as he is disposed to oppose measures because they come from certain quarters—and I am glad to hear the avowal—I have seen the fact ever since I have been a member of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire really must confine himself to the question before the Senate, which is to postpone the prior orders, with a view to take up the homestead bill.

Mr. HALE. I suppose, Mr. President, that the Senator from Virginia was as much out of order as I am?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair arrested the Senator from Virginia, and desired him to confine himself to the question.

Mr. HALE. I certainly was not aware of it; but if the Chair did arrest the Senator from Virginia, it delivered him from arrest very soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSK. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. RUSK. The Senator from New Hampshire has already spoken twice on the subject.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to postpone the prior orders to take up the bill indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PRATT. There is a question of order.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir; but a question of order was raised, which I wish to have settled.

The PRESIDENT. The question of order is, that the Senator from New Hampshire must confine himself to the consideration of the motion before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I will endeavor to do so.

Mr. PRATT. The point of order raised by the Senator from Texas does not appear to have been thoroughly comprehended by the Chair. The point raised by that Senator was, that, under the rules, no member of this body has a right to speak more than twice on the same question, except by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. There is no such rule.

Mr. RUSK. I ask for the reading of the 4th rule.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will read the rule. It is as follows:

"No member shall speak more than twice, in any one debate, on the same day, without leave of the Senate."

Mr. HALE. Well, sir, the rule does not apply to me. I have spoken but once, but have been repeatedly interrupted by other Senators. [Laughter.]

Mr. CASS. I should like to see the rule enforced.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. HALE. I was about to say that the Senator from Virginia has taken a position in reference to this bill which he will regret in his cooler moments. He is doing more for this fanatical Free-Soil party, by identifying them with the advocacy of the free-farm movement, than they could do for themselves by obtaining the best talents in the country and sending them abroad to make Free-Soil and Abolition lectures.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire must confine himself to the motion immediately before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Well, sir, I have alleged that as one reason why the bill should be disposed of now, so as not to allow the fanatics to make political capital out of it hereafter. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the motion to postpone; and there were—yeas 16, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Cass, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Hale, James, Jones of Iowa, Seward, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, and Upham—38.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRADBURY presented additional documents relating to the claims of Maine and Massachusetts against the United States under the fifth article of the treaty of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SOULE presented the memorial of John M. Forno; praying that his memorial and papers that were before the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico, may be referred to the Select Committee on the subject; which was referred to the Select Committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. COOPER presented a petition of citizens of York county, Pennsylvania, praying that the bill introduced into the House of Representatives requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit the fourth installment of the deposits of the public moneys directed to be made with the States by the act of 23d June, 1836, may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SOULE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of officers, clerks, and others in the civil and military departments of the United States Government in New Mexico, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. ATCHISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the petition of James Pool, reported a joint resolution authorizing the settlement of the accounts of James Pool; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Texas, praying that the officers of the Texas navy may be incorporated into the Navy of the United States, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution, relative to the officers of the late Texan navy; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which were referred various bills and memorials relative to the subject of the establishment of new mail lines of steamers, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith, reported a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Rebecca J. Birdsall, reported a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives "to establish certain post roads," reported it back with sundry amendments.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of David K. Arey, praying a new register for the barque Queen, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a new register for the barque Queen, of Dundee; which was read and passed to the second reading.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the above-named bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being offered, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the owners of the brig Marthaeette Morse, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a new register for the brig Marthaeette Morse, late the Belgian brig Enterprise; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Select Committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives making a grant of public lands to the several States and Territories of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, reported back the same without amendment.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of the heir of William Hazard Wigg, deceased, praying compensation for losses incurred by the said Wigg in the war of the Revolution, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred documents in relation to the claim of R. L. Blair, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw the same; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the agent of the State of Maine, praying that the accounting officers of the Treasury may be authorized to allow and pay all claims intended to be provided for by the act of the 13th of June, 1842, that have been allowed and paid by the said State, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

MODIFICATION OF POSTAGE RATES.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," passed 3d of March, 1851, have instructed me to report it, with two amendments. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time. The amendments are short, and I do not think there can be any objection to them. It will be necessary to send the bill back to the House of Representatives, on account of the amendments; and that will require some time. The state of my health is such that I can scarcely remain in my seat. I therefore ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time. I do not think that it will occupy ten minutes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out, in the first section of the bill, the following rates:

"Each newspaper, pamphlet, periodical, magazine, book, bound or unbound, circular, catalogue, and every other description of printed matter unconnected with any manuscript or writing, and of no greater weight than two ounces, shall be charged with one cent postage, and one cent for each additional ounce or fraction of an ounce, for any distance under three thousand miles; and for any distance over three thousand miles, double those rates. All newspapers and periodicals not weighing over one ounce, and published regularly as often as once in three months, and sent from the office of publication to actual subscribers, shall be chargeable with only one half the foregoing rates. Provided, That all newspapers and periodicals not weighing over two ounces, when sent to actual subscribers within the State where such papers and periodicals are published, shall be entitled to the reduction provided for in this section. The postage on all printed matter shall be prepaid at the office where it is mailed, or paid quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery; otherwise double the foregoing rates shall be charged thereon;"

—and to insert in lieu of them the following:

Newspapers, periodicals, and all other printed matter, not exceeding three ounces in weight, shall be sent to any part of the United States for one cent; and for every additional ounce or fraction of an ounce, one cent; and when the postage is paid quarterly or yearly, in advance, either at the office where the said newspaper or periodical is mailed or delivered, one half of said rates only shall be charged. Newspapers not weighing over one ounce and a half, when circulated in the State where published, shall be charged one half of the rates before named: Provided, That small newspapers published monthly or oftener, when sent in packages to one address, and prepaid by affixing stamps thereto, shall be chargeable at half of a cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce. Postage on transient matter shall be prepaid, or shall be charged double the foregoing rates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert after the word "matter," in the second section, the words "and shall be chargeable with 'postage at one cent an ounce for all distances 'under three thousand miles, and two cents an ounce for all distances over three thousand miles,' to which fifty per cent. shall be added in all cases 'where the same shall be sent without being prepaid,'" so that the section shall read:

"Books bound or unbound, not weighing over four pounds, shall be deemed mailable matter, and shall be chargeable with postage at one cent an ounce for all distances," &c.

The amendment was agreed to; the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CHASE. I move to amend the bill by adding to the second section the following proviso:

Provided further, That the Postmaster General may prescribe, by general regulation, what matter other than such as is specified in this act, shall be regarded as mailable matter, which shall be sent at the same rates of postage as books.

The object is to allow horticulturists and others to send small packages of seeds to distant parts of the country, which can be accomplished in no other way.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say that it was the intention of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to offer such an amendment; but the amendment of the Senator from Ohio meets the approbation of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I am disposed to relieve everything that may be proper to go through the mails of unnecessary burden; but really it seems to me that this proposition will open the mail as a common carrier to any one who may have articles of merchandise to send. How will it be possible to discriminate in the administration of such a provision as this? It allows horticulturists to send—what? It does not specifically define the articles which are to be sent through the mail. Any man, therefore, who has a garden may gather up its products and send them through the mails, as it seems to me, under this provision, unless I have greatly mistaken it. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. The bill now provides that publishers of books may send them, at a prescribed rate of postage, through the mails. This amendment provides that other matter, such as may be designated by the Postmaster General, shall be mailable matter, and shall be sent at the same rate of postage as books. Now, this matter will pay $200 a ton for transportation, and perhaps more than that. It will be a source of revenue to the Department. It will allow merchants in our large cities to transmit samples of goods without incurring the mails in any way that is objectionable. I know no reason why facilities should not be extended to our merchants, who really pay the great bulk of our postage, when these facilities will cost them $200 or $300 a ton on their merchandise, and when the revenues of the Department will be increased thereby. The object is to merely extend the provision to others than those who publish books.

Mr. BORLAND. Since I have heard the amendment read, I find that it is not quite as objectionable as I at first thought it was. But I can well understand how Senators from the region of country from which the Senator from Maine comes, may see an advantage to their portions of the country from this proposition. It may be very burdensome, however, to other sections of the country. If you open the mails to carry merchandise in this way, what is to become of the region of country in which I live, and other sparsely-settled portions of the Union, where the mails are carried on horse-back? Why, you will soon load down the mails. At this time, owing to the want of facilities in sparsely-settled regions, we have our mails left over from week to week, because the means of transportation are not sufficient to carry what is now sent. When we apply to the Post Office Department for an increase of the service, we are told that it cannot be allowed because the revenue is not sufficient to meet the additional expense.

If you will extend the operations of the post office system; and allow—in addition to letters, papers, and books—merchandise to be carried in the mails, they will become the common carriers of the country; and in those regions where we have only horse-back transportation, or small two-horse wagons to carry the mail, they will be loaded down so that we shall not get our mail matter at all. Mail matter will be laid over at the offices for months. Now, we experience great difficulties of this kind; but these difficulties will increase, and I fear will cut us off almost altogether from all mail facilities, provided we adopt this principle. Where the mails are carried on steamboats and railroad cars, there may be no difficulty in carrying out this plan; but I repeat, in sparsely-settled regions, where we have but limited means of transportation, we shall suffer inconveniences that will become intolerable.

Mr. CHASE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to modify my amendment by inserting after the word "act" the words "or the act amended hereby." So that it shall read:

Provided further, That the Postmaster General may prescribe by general regulation what matter, other than such as is specified in this act, or the act amended hereby, shall be regarded as mailable matter, which shall be sent at the same rates as books.

There being no objection, the modification was made.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think that the amendment is opening a very wide door. I am afraid of adopting such a provision. Matter which is of a character to enlighten the country may properly be sent through the mails, but I think that the power proposed to be conferred by the amendment is a very dangerous one. There would seem to be no limitation to it, and it may be abused. I shall therefore vote against the amendment.

Mr. CHASE. All that I desire to say is this: The bill already prescribes that newspapers weighing not more than three ounces, may be sent through the mails to any part of the country under three thousand miles for one cent. I agree to that, because I am in favor of the greatest possible diffusion of information; but I will venture to say that all the mailable matter, including all the samples sent by merchants, and all the seeds sent by horticulturists, will not be equal in bulk and in weight to the issues of one great newspaper establishment; and I have no doubt the matter brought into the mails, if my amendment be adopted, will produce ten times the revenue to the Government than newspapers will.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would suggest an amendment that might, perhaps, relieve the amendment of the Senator from Ohio from the objections of the Senator from Arkansas. It is to insert in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, after the words "mailable matter," the words, "not exceeding one pound in weight." That will cover all that will be necessary to enable horticulturists to send their seeds, and merchants their samples, through the mails.

Mr. CHASE. If there be no objection, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BORLAND. I would say that that does not mend the matter at all. I object to the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Then, the question must be taken on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOUCEY. I hope the Senate will vote down this amendment. It is a transfer of the legislative power from the Congress of the United States to the head of a Department; and to that I entirely object.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that the amendment of the Senator from Maine, which has been ingrafted on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, does not improve it. It limits these parcels to one pound in weight. The effect will be that, instead of putting up fifty pounds of matter in one package, they will be put up in fifty different bundles, of one pound each; so that I can see no sort of difference between the two. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the power of Congress over the subject.

Mr. HUNTER. It is obvious that this subject will give rise to debate, and, if the Senator will allow me, I will move to postpone the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. RUSK. I hope we shall come to a vote.

Mr. HUNTER. Very well. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BORLAND. The Constitution confers upon Congress power to establish post offices and post roads, and necessarily limits that power to the necessities of the country, and the purposes for which the power was established. It is the proper business of the Post Office Department to transmit letters, papers, and communications containing information of various kinds. Whenever we go beyond that, we depart from the purposes for which the power was conferred. We make the Government of the United States a common carrier, to enter into competition with every man engaged throughout the country in carrying goods for freight. This would defeat the very object for which the power conferred by the Constitution was granted. The object was to facilitate rapid and easy communication between the different parts of the country, for purposes of information.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment of Mr. CHASE as amended, resulted—yeas 22, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Brooke, Chase, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Clarke, Cooper, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Geyer, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Shields, Soule, Toucey, and Walker—32.

So the amendment was rejected.

No further amendment being proposed, the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a bill from the House, entitled "An act to provide for executing the public printing, and regulating the prices thereof, and for other purposes," have directed me to report—that, having met and conferred upon the matter, they have been unable to agree; and therefore report the bill back without any recommendation in relation to it.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that bill will be taken up and acted upon now. It is important to know whether we are to have a printer to Congress or not.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to say, that I shall not move to take up the civil and diplomatic bill this morning, for I find that if I do so, I shall only have half an hour for its consideration, and I shall have to contest for that time with the gentlemen who wish other business to be proceeded with.

Mr. GWIN. I move to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill which has just been reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DAVIS. I will inquire of the honorable Senator from California if he expects that bill to displace the orders of the day?

Mr. GWIN. I do not intend to interfere with the regular order; but I think we might take up the bill, and perhaps make some progress in it. It is important to know whether we are to have a public printer, or not. I ask for the yeas and nays upon my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall vote against taking up this bill; not that I am opposed to it, but because if it comes up for consideration now, it will necessarily consume the day, and we shall not have an opportunity to attend to the practical business that is so urgently pressing upon us. That is the only reason that I object to the motion to take up the bill now.

Mr. CASS. Every Senator knows the condition of the public printing. We have been here for over eight months, and the most important portion of that printing is yet to be done. It is now proposed, after this length of time, to remedy this crying evil. I take it that among the sixty-two members of the Senate there is not one who does not practically understand the question. Nor do I believe that if Solomon were here, he could make us understand it better than we do. I would, therefore, entreat gentlemen to allow the bill to be taken up and a vote to be taken on it.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what the bill is.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the vote is taken, I have this to say: that no one has, at any time, been more anxious to dispose practically of this question of the public printing than I have been. For more than three years I served as chairman of the Committee on Printing; and the Senate will bear me witness that, from the beginning of my service in that position down to the time when I left it, some three months ago, I lost no opportunity of urging upon the Senate not only the necessity, but the propriety of making some provision on this subject. What did Senators, who are now so anxious, at the close of the session, to take prompt action to provide for the public printing, do then? Did they join me in urging the matter upon the Senate at a time when something practical could be done? I could get no support then. The subject was put off from time to time. It was refused to be acted upon when the public interests were suffering for the want of it. When action in regard to the public printing was required at our hands for the transaction of our business here, there was no anxiety manifested in regard to it. But now, at the close of the session, when the necessity of having the public printing done promptly is not half so urgent as it has been during the session, it is proposed to displace all the business and bring that subject up and urge it for action upon the plea of necessity. Almost nine months have elapsed since the beginning of the session, and the subject has been lying before us; yet gentlemen seem; until now, not to have seen the necessity of urgent action. When we could not use the public documents; when we were deprived of the means of legislating understandingly for want of them, action was refused. But now, at the close of the session, when we do not need the printing so much for any practical purpose, we are told that this is indispensably necessary. I cannot see the consistency of this position; and for this reason, I cannot vote for taking up the bill. Not that I object to the bill itself, for I believe that I shall vote for it, or, at least, for something substantially the same.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the honorable Senator from California will let us go on with the river and harbor bill, and see if we cannot complete it to-day.

Mr. GWIN. I should be perfectly willing to make that disposition of the matter, if I had any hope or expectation that that bill would be got through with to-day. I did not intend that the bill which I have proposed to take up should interfere with the regular order of business.

I do not pretend to disguise the fact; but I say here that I think it is the duty of the political majority in this body to act on the bill which I have moved to take up, and to act promptly. I acknowledge that. If members of the Democratic party are disposed to destroy the bill, let them do it. I want the vote upon taking up the bill to be a test vote, in order to see if we are to make any provision for the printing of Congress at this session.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I shall make no apology to the Senate for taking up its time on any question that may come before it; because I see distinctly that those measures which ought to be passed, and ought to be discussed, and considered well, cannot be considered. But measures and questions of a purely political character, having a presidential complexion, are to be brought forward, and to supersede everything else. There is a report to be made from a committee, which I wish to have made, and in which I feel some interest. My friend who has it in charge has not had an opportunity, for the last three mornings, to present that report, because of this competition among politicians to get up their measures and to override everything else now at the end of the session. Why, sir, I have not read the bill proposed to be taken up.

I would say here that I do not care much whether any of the proceedings of this body—if they are such as I have seen this morning, and other mornings for some time past—are distributed and sent forth to the country. Sir, the Senate is not the Senate that it was when I was acquainted with it upon my first introduction to it. Everything seems to be discussed here that pertains to politics, and I think we are far from coming up to the standard of Senatorial dignity.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator's remarks are not strictly in order, for they do not relate to the question before the Senate. The question is upon postponing the orders, with a view of taking up the bill named by the Senator from California.

Mr. BUTLER. I am opposed to taking up that bill, unless I can have an opportunity of examining it. I have not examined it, and therefore object to considering it now. I object to this proposition further, because I think this bill is proposed to be taken up to the prejudice of other business which I believe is of more importance.

Mr. HUNTER. I have a word or two to say in relation to taking up this bill. The Senate overruled me on the civil and diplomatic bill, and laid that bill aside for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill. That having been the decision of the Senate, I have acquiesced, so far as that bill is concerned, to let it go on and be disposed of; but I will not, by my vote, give preference to any other bill over the civil and diplomatic bill, until it is finished. If the Senator from California will give us the assurance that he will lay this bill by in the event that it gives rise to debate, I shall interpose no objection to his motion; but I will not do anything in the way of taking up the civil and diplomatic bill to-morrow in the morning hour; for it is obvious that a majority of the Senate will not give consideration to any other bill than the river and harbor bill after one o'clock.

Mr. GWIN. I do not think the Senator from Virginia has shown more eagerness to press the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill than I have shown. He indicated that he would not call it up this morning, and hence it was that I urged the motion which I have made. I have already said that I did not intend to interfere with the regular orders. All I wanted was to get a vote that might indicate what the Senate would do with the subject of the printing.

Allow me to remark, that I hope I have as much appreciation of Senatorial dignity as other gentlemen, and I think that I understand the duties of a member of this body as well as any one. I want some indication of whether the Senate intend to act upon this question at all; for if they do not intend to act on the bill which has come from the House to provide for the execution of the public printing, I am perfectly willing to lay it aside, and let those who put it aside assume the responsibility of doing so.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not intend to direct my cannon against the honorable Senator from California at all. I merely stated that I did not care to have such debates and proceedings as I have seen for some time past in this body, printed and distributed among the people. In that connection I said that they were not good specimens of Senatorial dignity. I did not question the right of the Senator to move to take up this bill; but I said that bills of this character have precedence over everything else. All the wants of the country are postponed for political measures.

Mr. GWIN. I do not intend that the bill in regard to the public printing, which I propose to take up, shall interfere with the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill during the morning hour to-morrow. I want it brought up now for the purpose of seeing whether we are to act upon it or not.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, at an early day of the present session—I believe during the first month, perhaps during the first week—I had the honor to introduce a joint resolution to provide for the printing of the returns of the Seventh Census. I considered it was important that that work should be done. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing. It was reported back by that committee, and was discussed for some time, and it now lies upon the table, I believe. I have felt, throughout the session, that it was important that the question of the public printing should be disposed of. It is one in which we all feel more or less interest.

Disguise it as we may, the public printing is an important matter. It is important, so far as regards the dissemination of information among the people; and important to that class of persons who expect to perform the work. They have been kept in constant suspense here for months. The public business has been retarded on account of the condition in which our public documents are. I do not know that the question can be settled at this session. I admit that I have my doubts about it; but I think it is important that we should decide whether we are to pass any law upon that subject.

I apprehend that the motion made by my friend from California, will be weakened somewhat by the consideration suggested by the Senator from Virginia, if it is intended to consider this bill to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Indiana, that, with the assurance of the Senator from California that he will not interpose the bill to-morrow, in the morning hour, in the way of the civil and diplomatic bill, I have no objection to taking it up.

Mr. BRIGHT. I was going to suggest, if the Senator from Virginia had not changed his position, that we should move to make the printing bill the special order for some day next week; but I will not make that motion, if the honorable Senator from Virginia is disposed to give to it the residue of this day. I hope we may take up the bill; and that the vote upon taking it up may be regarded as a test vote.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not understand the Senator from California to propose to devote the whole day to this bill. I understood that he only wanted the residue of the morning hour appropriated to it. I shall not consent to devote the rest of the day to this bill; for that would give it precedence over the civil and diplomatic bill, and prevent the friends of the river and harbor bill going on with that bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I will ask the honorable Senator from California to change his motion so as to move to take up this bill and make it the special order for to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Say eleven o'clock.

Mr. BRIGHT. Very well. I believe that will bring up the question fairly, and will test really the sense of the Senate upon the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall vote to take up this bill, after the civil and diplomatic bill is disposed of; but I cannot consent to give this bill precedence over that. I think that I should not be discharging my duty to the country to do so. I will vote for taking up the bill, with the understanding that it shall consume only the residue of the morning hour.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw the proposition which I made; and then I suppose the question will be on taking up the bill now.

The PRESIDENT. That is the question.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, the position in which the Senator from California has placed this question, imposes it upon me as a duty to myself, to say a word or two. I am sorry that he has given the measure such a complexion before the Senate, and before the country. He has suggested that the vote upon taking up this bill, is to be considered as a test vote upon a political question; which, if it means anything, means that those who vote against the proposition are to be read out of the party to which the Senator and myself belong—that it is to draw a line, and mark the political character of all the Senators on this floor.

Mr. GWIN. I never intended anything of the sort. I said that those gentlemen of the Democratic party, whose sense of duty induced them to act early on this bill, would vote for taking it up; and that those who felt bound to oppose it, would do it on their own responsibility, as every Senator does here. I said no such thing as reading any one out of the party. It is a mere matter of conscience between those who discharge their duties here. I will say this, however, that if this bill is not acted upon now, it may be considered as lost; because, it not only has to be passed by this body, but it has to go to the President of the United States for his signature, and after that the House and Senate have to elect a public printer. We have only from now to the end of the session to accomplish all that. Is that time enough, if we are going to make this a practical measure? That is the only point. I bring no man's political consistency into question.

Mr. BORLAND. I am glad that such is the meaning of the Senator. But, I apprehend, his remarks, as made, would, before the country, have the bearing which I have attributed to them. He said that it was not an ordinary question, but an important political question, which he submitted to the Senate; and he said that he wished it decided by a test vote. What could that mean? If the Senator says that the meaning which I attributed to it, is not his meaning, I take his explanation. But, I ask, what would have been the meaning of that before the public, if unexplained? Why, it was to mark the political position of Senators on this floor.

Sir, in regard to the question of the public printing, this is not the first time that I have been attempted to be read out of the Democratic party on account of it. I do not mean to attribute to the Senator from California any such meaning. But I have been read out, or attempted to be read out, of the party several times in my life, because I could not square my actions exactly to the peculiar notions of other gentlemen, belonging to the same party with myself. But, having my politics in my own keeping, and being conscious of the sincerity and the rectitude of the motives which actuated me, I have never had any fear of being "read out" of the party. I have maintained my political consistency, I apprehend, as well as most men; certainly I have, to the satisfaction of my own conscience.

But, sir, I cannot conceive how this is to be considered a political question. I look upon it as a business question, as one affecting the practical business of this body. And I say, what I have said from the beginning, that if it ever was a question pressing urgently upon the attention of the Senate, the time for that urgency has passed months ago. The practical value of the measure, so far as the business of this body, or the business of the country is concerned, has passed long ago, and the little aid we should get from it within the next week, which is to close this session, is so small, that I must confess I am unable to appreciate it.

Mr. BADGER. So little has been said on this subject, and so much time is left before the hour for the special order arrives, that I would like to detain the Senate for a moment. I am very sorry to see this difficulty and warmth which has sprung up among the members of the Democratic party, as to the bill proposed to be taken up. I did not know, until the honorable Senator from California announced it this morning, that this was a Democratic measure. That really raises some little suspicion in my mind, that I have been influenced by some mistake in regard to the subject. I wish, nevertheless, to say that I shall vote with the Senator from Arkansas against taking up this bill. But perhaps it would be more proper, as this seems to be regarded as a question between my Democratic friends, for me to say nothing at all about it. Perhaps—because it is a family matter among the Democracy—I ought not to interfere, and should not vote on the question. But if I vote at all, I shall vote against taking up the bill now. I have heretofore gone upon the supposition that this was a matter which concerned the general interests of the country, and was not a Democratic measure. I am in favor of the principle of the bill which the Senator from California proposes to take up; and I do not know that I am at all dissatisfied with any of its details. I am against the "lowest bidder" system of contracting for the public printing. I am entirely in favor of restoring us to something like respectability in conducting that branch of the public service. I mention this, in order that my vote upon this question may not be misunderstood. I beg to say to the honorable gentleman from Arkansas, as he and I will vote on the same side, that he need not feel the least uneasiness about his Democracy being called in question by that vote. [Laughter.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the motion of Mr. GWIN to take up the bill, resulted—yeas 25, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Foucey, and Walker—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Borland, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Chase, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—25.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CHARLTON subsequently rose and said: Mr. President, I labored under a misapprehension entirely when I gave my vote upon the motion of the Senator from California. I voted against his proposition under a misapprehension of the question. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to take up the bill in regard to the public printing.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish only to say that I voted to take up the bill with the express understanding that it should be laid aside at one o'clock. One o'clock has now arrived, and I shall not therefore vote for the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDENT. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts is not aware that the original motion was to take up a bill; that was refused by a vote of the Senate; the Senator from Georgia, who voted with the majority, moves to reconsider that vote; that brings up the question whether the bill shall be taken up or not. If the motion is laid on the table, of course it defeats the object of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BADGER. That, I presume, is the object of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order; and it is this: that the vote upon a motion refusing to take up a bill is one which in its nature cannot be reconsidered, because the time at which it was proposed to be taken up has passed. A motion to take up a bill is like a motion to adjourn. A motion to adjourn is to adjourn at the time the motion is made. That motion cannot be reconsidered. But the rejection of that motion does not prevent its being renewed. Now, I take it that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill is of the same nature.

Mr. DAVIS. It seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire has made a good point. A simple motion to take up a bill, if rejected, cannot be reconsidered, because the motion may be renewed at any time. The Senator from Georgia can now, if he sees fit, move to take up the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to ask of the Chair whether it would not be in order for the Senator from Georgia now to move to take up the bill, or to move to take it up to-morrow morning, or at any other time, without a reconsideration of the vote?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I appeal to the honorable Senator from Georgia to withdraw his motion.

Mr. CHARLTON. As I can make the motion to take up the bill, without moving to reconsider, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

DUTIES ON RAILROAD IRON.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill for the relief of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad Company, reported it back without amendment, and asked for its immediate consideration.

No objection being made, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the time for the payment of the duties on iron rails, spikes, bolts, fastenings, and other iron necessary for the construction of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad, for the term of four years. It further provides that the Postmaster General shall contract with the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad Company for carrying the mails on the line of their road, at the usual rates charged by railroad companies; and that he shall reserve from the amount due to the Company for the carriage of the mail, a sum sufficient to reimburse the Government for the duties thus suspended, with interest at the rate of six per cent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Mr. MASON. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred a message from the President of the United States, communicating a report from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the fixing of the initial point in the boundary line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, have instructed me to offer to the Senate three resolutions upon the subject, and a report embodying the views of the committee. I ask that the report and the resolutions may be printed. As they relate to a subject of very great national interest and importance, I ask that the resolutions be made the order of the day for Tuesday next.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, 1st. That by the treaty between the United States and Mexico, concluded at Guadalupe Hidalgo on the second day of February, in the year 1848, no other power or authority is given to the commissioners and surveyors, whose appointment is therein provided for, than to determine and, by suitable land-marks, establish the boundaries between the two countries, as they are prescribed by said treaty; and that nothing in said treaty contained can be construed to authorize these officers, in any manner, to alter, vary, or modify the boundaries so provided.

2d. That such power and authority is conferred by the treaty on the commissioner and surveyor of each Government, jointly, and that no separate power is conferred on either.

3d. That the act of John R. Bartlet, Esq., the commissioner on the part of the United States, in disregarding the boundary laid down on the map which is made a part of the treaty, and in establishing, in lieu of one of said boundaries, a parallel of latitude as determined by astronomical observations, is a departure from the treaty.

The report and resolutions were ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, to postpone the further consideration of the resolutions till Tuesday next, and make them the special order for that day.

Mr. HALE. I ask a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT. The question will then first be on postponing the further consideration of the resolutions till Tuesday next.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on making the resolutions the special order of the day for Tuesday at one o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that proposition. The Senate a while ago refused to make matters of much more importance special orders.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HALE. We have been told, Mr. President, that various matters of practical and pressing necessity in the country cannot be taken up and acted upon, because there is not sufficient time to devote to the consideration of the appropriation bills which are necessary to carry on the Government. If these great practical questions cannot be taken up, why is it that one day, of the very few days which we have left, shall be specially assigned for the discussion of this matter, which, in my humble judgment, should be more properly considered in Executive, than in open session. Are all the territorial bills, and the appropriation bills, and the other great measures that have been spoken of, to have the go-by for this? I shall vote against making the resolutions the special order, and I was in hopes that the Senate would have given me the yeas and nays upon the question.

Mr. RUSK. This is a most important matter. It is a question with regard to the giving away of territory which properly belongs to the United States, to an amount nearly as large as the State which the Senator from New Hampshire has the honor of representing on this floor. That, it seems to me, is a question of very considerable importance. It is not a question involving the giving away of territory to the citizens of the United States, but the surrender of our territory to Mexico. The honorable Senator from New Hampshire could not certainly have looked into this matter, or he would not regard it as one of such slight importance.

The motion to make the resolutions the special order of the day for Tuesday next, was agreed to—there being, on a division—yeas 21, noes 16.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That during the residue of the session the Senate will take a recess from four, p. m. till seven, p. m.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate then took up the river and harbor bill, and after a protracted discussion, which lasted till near five o'clock, p. m., all the amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to, with the exception of that appropriating $15,000 for repair of the piers at Ashtabula, Ohio, which was rejected. [For the particulars of the proceedings on this bill see Appendix.]

POSTAGE BILL.

The bill to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1851, was read a third time and passed.

MILITARY RESERVE IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have a little territorial bill which I ask the Senate to consider at this time. If it leads to debate I will consent to lay it aside. I have waited for an opportunity for three months to get it up, and have not succeeded. It is House bill No. 238, "An act to reduce and define the boundaries of the military survey of St. Peters river, Territory of Minnesota." I will state that it curtails the boundaries in the exact words of a recommendation from the Department, and has no other provision in it.

Mr. GEYER. Has it no provision in regard to preemption rights?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir; nothing of the kind. I move to take up the bill for consideration.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

No amendment being offered, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be read a third time, read a third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. BRADBURY, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 20, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 120, "authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them and to locate others in lieu thereof."

Mr. STUART. Before proceeding to the consideration of that bill, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up and pass Senate bill No. 30, which I called the attention of the House to the other day. It confirms to the State of Michigan certain salt-spring lands, and corrects an error of a clerk in the General Land Office. It is of vast interest to that State.

Mr. PENN. I object.

Mr. STUART. I believe it is now in order for me to move a suspension of the rules to enable me to have that bill taken up?

The SPEAKER. It is not; we have not yet reached the last ten days of the session. The Chair on yesterday was mistaken as to the number of days yet remaining.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is it not in order for me now to move that the House proceed to the consideration of the private bills upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Not in the morning hour, because that has been assigned to the reception of reports from committees, under a special order, by a two-thirds vote of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN. It will be in order, then, for me to submit the motion I have indicated at the expiration of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will at that time.

Mr. WASHBURN. Private bills sent to us from the Senate, considered and reported favorably upon by a Committee of the Whole House, and to which there is no objection, have lain upon the Speaker's table some six months unacted upon. I hope, at the termination of the morning hour, they may be taken up, considered, and passed. Such action is demanded at our hands.

Mr. DUNCAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Commerce, "A bill granting a registry to the vessel Boundary."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for the regular order of business.

SURRENDER OF BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business has been called for, which is equivalent to an objection. The business in order is the consideration of House bill No. 120, "authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof." The previous question has been demanded by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston.]

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his call for the previous question, and let the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hendricks] submit the amendment which has been suggested by him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is not present.

Mr. STUART. I think, by unanimous consent, the amendment might be introduced.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the call for the previous question will be considered as having been withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to insert after the word "individual," in the first section, the words "or sold for taxes," so that it will read as follows:

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That it shall and may be lawful for any soldier in the late war with Great Britain, to whom bounty land has been allotted and patented in any State of the Union, by virtue of the laws of the United States passed prior to the year 1850, which was and is unit for cultivation, to surrender such patent and receive in lieu thereof the same quantity of any of the public lands subject to private entry at the minimum price, as he may select: Provided, That before receiving such new land, it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office the land so allotted and patented to said soldier is unfit for cultivation, and that the soldier has never disposed of his interest in said land by any sale of his own, or that the same has not been taken or disposed of for his debts due to any individual, or sold for taxes; and that he shall release all interest in the same to the United States in such way as said Commissioner shall prescribe; and such surrender and location shall be made within five years from the passage of this act."

At the request of Mr. MASON, the section as it would read, if amended, was read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire whether or not he is mistaken in supposing that the unanimous consent has been granted for the introduction of the amendment?

Mr. MASON. I asked for the reading of the amendment to see whether or not I would object.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. It was submitted without objection, and then the gentleman from Kentucky called for its reading.

The SPEAKER. It was by the unanimous consent of the House that the demand for the previous question was withdrawn, the mover not being present, and at the moment the Chair forgot that there was pending a motion to recommit, which excludes, except by unanimous consent, the amendment.

Mr. HALL. Is not the amendment in order, and before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order; and the gentleman will recollect that the amendment cannot be in order so long as there is pending a motion to commit, unless by unanimous consent that motion be withdrawn.

Mr. HALL. I made the motion to commit the bill, and if it be in order, I now withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BOWIE. I give notice that at the proper time I shall move that the rules be suspended for the introduction of the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read for information.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object to the reading.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the several standing committees of this House have leave to report on the matters referred to them, by filing their reports, with the accompanying bills, (if any,) with the Clerk of the House; and that said reports and bills be printed and referred, and, as may be, recommended by said committees, in the same manner as if made in the House, upon the call of the committees by the Speaker.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee had examined bills of the following titles, viz:

H. R. No. 176. An act for the relief of Daniel Murphy; and

H. R. No. 257. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to settle and adjust the expenses of the people of Oregon, in defending themselves from the attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians, in the years 1847 and 1848," approved February 14, 1851;

And found the same truly enrolled. The Speaker signed the said bills.

Mr. HALL. I only wish to say a word or two before moving the previous question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There are a good many gentlemen who desire the amendment to this bill which I have proposed. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to yield me the floor to propose the amendment. The gentleman can then make his objections to the amendment.

Mr. HALL. I will yield the floor to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I now offer the amendment which has been reported already in regard to the tax sales.

Mr. HALL. I move to strike out all after the sale or forfeiture of land for taxes, in the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. You strike out then, the whole amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment, strictly speaking, is not in order. It would be tantamount to striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. HALL. I do not wish to debate the question, but to call the attention of the House to the effect of that amendment. The bill permits the soldiers who enlisted in the war of 1812, and who received for their services land that was utterly worthless, to relinquish those lands and receive other lands of equal quantity in lieu thereof, which are now subject to private entry. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] proposes, after these lands have been sold and forfeited for taxes, that the soldier shall receive no other land. What is the effect of it? Where the land is utterly worthless, nobody would think of paying taxes upon it; and land in swamps, that is frequently covered with water, would not be worth the taxes. An individual would not think of paying taxes upon land which had been forfeited to the State. The question for this House to decide is this: whether the soldier who served five years during the war of 1812 shall get bounty land, while we are, under recent laws, giving bounty land to those who have served thirty days. I hold that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] if adopted, defeats the law entirely; for, I repeat, that where land is utterly worthless, taxes will not be paid upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This bill provides for land being sold, and not for land being forfeited.

Mr. ORR. It was stated, when this bill was under discussion before, that it was an exact copy of a bill passed some years ago confined exclusively to the State of Arkansas. It was further stated that the construction given to the subject by the General Land Office was precisely the construction which this amendment proposes to provide for in the bill now before the House.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman is partly right and partly wrong. So far as I am concerned, I did state that the bill was a precise copy of a law passed a few years ago in regard to the military land warrants in the State of Arkansas. Upon that question the gentleman is right. He is wrong, however, in supposing that I said that the construction of the Department was the same as is contemplated by that amendment. On the contrary, I expressly stated—

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] made that statement.

Mr. HALL. Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] was wrong, or at least it was not the understanding of the Committee on Public Lands. When this amendment was before the Committee on Public Lands, the question was made whether we ought not to make an exception in regard to the lands sold for taxes. The answer of the committee was this: that the land was utterly worthless, and the individual would not pay taxes upon it at all, and to put in a provision to pay the taxes would be equivalent almost to denying all relief under the law. As to what the Department decided, I do not know, but if they have made such a construction as that, I think it is clearly wrong.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to correct the impression under which the gentleman seems to be laboring. The law in regard to the State of Arkansas requires the soldier, before he can locate other lands, to surrender to the Government the title of that which has been patented to him. The Department has given this construction to that; and if he does not still hold the title, it cannot be conveyed to the Government; and besides that, he must prove to the Department, by certificate of the auditor of the State, that the land has never been sold for taxes. That is the decision of the Department; and I so stated it to the House upon another occasion, and presented the printed instructions of the Land Office upon that subject.

Mr. MASON. I will briefly state the reasons why I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment. I know of but one solitary case where the land of an individual has been forfeited, and that is one of my constituents. The land was located in a swamp in the State of Arkansas. He received his patent for it, ascertained that it was in a swamp, and paid no attention to it. The land was neither sold for taxes nor forfeited. There are soldiers who are placed in the same situation, who swear, in their declarations, that they have never received any land from the Government. This man is so conscientious that he will not swear to this effect; although he got no benefit from it, yet he received a patent for it. He is a meritorious citizen and soldier, and was wounded in the war of 1812.

Mr. CARTER. Did he get a pension?

Mr. MASON. He got no pension. He was wounded in the fleshy part of the thigh, but asked no pension, although he is justly and as much entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land as any man who served in the war. This amendment will exclude him, and therefore I object to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I opposed this bill in the first place, because it did not contain this provision; and I shall oppose it again if this provision, as contained in the amendment, shall be excluded. Now, I disagree with the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] and I am unable to see the distinction which he seems to make, or the reason for it. If this land was worthless, as he says, it never could be sold for taxes, because no person would buy it. This amendment, as I understand, does not provide for land which has been forfeited to the State, but land which has been sold for taxes. If that should be the construction of it, I would ask how would the other provisions of the law be complied with in the absence of the principle contained in this amendment? If the individual is to reinvest the United States with the title which he receives from it before he can receive the benefits of this law, how can he reinvest that title where the property has been sold for taxes; or if the title has parted from him, either by operation of the law or his own free act, look at the consequences. Take the case of the military tract in the State of Illinois. Ejectments are brought in every court there growing out of tax titles which have accrued in the very same way in which they would continue to accrue if this provision is not inserted into this bill. They have permitted their lands to be sold for taxes. Where the settlers have got upon those patent lands, the speculators go and purchase the patents from them, bringing their suits against the owners of the tax titles, who, unless they have complied with every provision of the law, are ousted by the action of ejectment. If this law is permitted to pass, all they have to do is to bring up some kind of evidence that the land was not fit for cultivation; and then, instead of the Government giving one hundred and sixty acres to these soldiers, it gives three hundred and twenty acres to the owner of the patent, who, is the speculator. I ask if you are to give three hundred and twenty acres of land to men who, by their own acts, have neglected to pay the taxes upon this land, or are you to give them one hundred and sixty acres when they have received land that is worthless? I am willing that they shall have it; but when the title has gone into other hands and is held by the owners of tax titles, I will never record my vote that the Government shall give three hundred and twenty acres instead of one hundred and sixty.

Mr. STUART. It will be a little difficult to present this case more unfairly than it has been presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] It requires but two minutes' consideration to show the fallacy of that argument. This bill provides that the soldier must prove satisfactorily to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the land is unfit for cultivation.

Mr. ORR. What time does that refer to—at the time he goes into possession, or at the present time?

Mr. STUART. Always.

Mr. ORR. At the present time?

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir. Now, it is said that the land is unfit for cultivation, and that no one will buy it for taxes. Look at that argument. The bill does not provide for any other case except where proof is made that the land is unfit for cultivation. That must be proved, and proved conclusively, before any benefit can be derived to the soldier under this law. Within my own personal knowledge, thousands of acres of land have been bought and sold for taxes which are totally worthless. Men attend the tax sales, and buy the land at auction without having ever seen it, and they do it for the purposes of speculation. Here are one hundred and sixty acres of land sold for two dollars. They say that they will give two dollars for one hundred and sixty acres of land, and run their chances. The idea that people inspect land put up for taxes before they purchase it, is not true in point of fact. They buy it as in the bush, without looking at it. How does this matter stand? Here you take a soldier who has served in the war of 1812, and you propose to give him a bounty of one hundred and sixty acres of land. It turns out that the land he receives is good for nothing. A bill is now introduced compelling him to prove that fact; and not only that, but also to prove that he has not parted with the title; not that alone either, but to reconvey the title to the Government of the United States; and having done these three things, then you allow him to take land worth $1 25 to an equal amount. After having kept him since 1812 without anything, you now propose to give him what he ought to have had in 1812 or 1816—whenever the law was passed—and it is objected if his land has been sold for taxes, although utterly valueless, he shall not have what is proposed to be given. Now, I say that no construction, such as intimated by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] can prevail. This land must be shown to be valueless and unfit for cultivation at the time application is made; and if the bill be amended in that way I have no objection to it. I apprehend that nobody would dream of placing any other construction upon it. It would never do for a man to show that the land was unfit for cultivation in 1816 or 1818, but is good now. That is no argument at all.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, AUGUST 23, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 143.

Mr. ALLISON, (interrupting). There is another class of soldiers that I think ought to be provided for, if it is the intention to provide for those who have permitted their lands to be sold for taxes. There are no doubt a large class who have paid taxes upon land of inferior quality, and have continued to pay taxes from the time they received the patents up to this time, and probably have paid more in the shape of taxes than the land is worth. What would you do in such a case? If it is intended by this bill to place them upon an equality, then I think you must do something for such cases as I have alluded to. You cannot equalize by a bill of this kind. There are cases of individual hardship, and if we intend to equalize, I think that there should be an amendment offered to this bill by which persons who have received patents for lands that are of comparatively little value, shall be permitted to surrender their patents, and have the privilege of relocating their warrants. This is the only way that we can place them upon an equality, and do justice to the soldiers.

Mr. CHASTAIN. If I understand the provisions of this bill, Mr. Speaker, it provides that all warrants that have been issued, even if they have passed out of the hands of the individual to whom they were surrendered, and are now in the hands of speculators, shall have the benefit of this act.

Mr. HALL. No, sir; this bill proposes to confine the benefits of the act to the soldiers themselves.

Mr. CHASTAIN. For the purpose of setting myself right, I desire to have the original bill read.

My recollection of it is, and I know it was urged on a former occasion, that speculators will be benefited exclusively. So far as my knowledge extends in the region of country in which I reside, I know that all the lands have passed out of the hands of the old soldiers into the hands of speculators.

Mr. HALL. Then they will get nothing.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I desire that the bill may be read for the purpose of satisfying myself upon that subject; and I wish to say further, that if the speculators are inhibited by this bill, from receiving the benefits of it, I will go for the bill. I think it right that the soldier should enjoy the benefits of this act, and get a lot of land, but I am unwilling to give it to speculators.

The Clerk here read the bill.

Mr. HALL. My object was merely to call the attention of the House to the provisions of this bill. I do not think it necessary to discuss it in order that gentlemen may understand it; and their attention being called to it, is all I desire to accomplish.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama. This bill provides that soldiers shall have new lands in case their lands were unfit for cultivation; but the lands may be valuable, although unfit for cultivation. For instance, it may be covered with timber or contain minerals.

Mr. HALL. The answer to that is this: If the land, in consequence of containing minerals, is more valuable than land for cultivation, its owner will not surrender it up, but keep it. I move the previous question.

Mr. CARTTER demanded tellers on the second; which were ordered; and Messrs. LOCKHART and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 74; noes not counted.

So the previous question received a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The question now being upon agreeing to the amendment to insert after the word "individual," the following, "or sold for taxes,"

Mr. ORR demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—30 in the affirmative; and a further count not being demanded, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

Mr. JENKINS moved to lay the bill upon the table, and upon that motion demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and MOLONY, were appointed.

The question was then put, and tellers reported—ayes 47.

Mr. JENKINS demanded the yeas and nays. Mr. BUELL asked for tellers on the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and HOWARD were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—21 in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question then recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HALL demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. MOLONY and PENNIMAN were appointed.

The question was then put, and tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 58.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, having been engrossed, was read a third time.

The question recurring, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. HALL moved the previous question.

Mr. STUART demanded tellers on the second, which were ordered; and Messrs. McMULLIN and FOWLER were appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the previous question, and tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 65.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. CARTTER. Is it in order to move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CARTTER. I do not make that motion. Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not expired?

Mr. STUART. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALL. Upon that motion I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. A motion is made to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, which is in order.

Mr. CARTTER. Do I understand the Speaker to say that my motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole is not in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, for the reason that the committee was discharged from its consideration.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. HALL. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STUART. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Beale, Bibbhaus, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Bragg, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Dean, Dockery, Duncan, Eastman, Floyd, Fowler, Gentry, Goodenow, Hammond, Haws, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Martin, McLanahan, Miner, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Perkins, Reed, Robie, Ross, Schoonmaker, Scurry, Thad. Stevens, Sutherland, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Wallace, Walsh, Welch, Wells, Wilcox, and Wildrick—62.

NAVS—Messrs. William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bennett, Bocock, Bowie, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Fitch, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gayford, Gilmore, Green, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Holladay, Houston, Ingersoll, Jackson, A. Johnson, J. Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mason, McCorkle, McMullin, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Murphy, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Phelps, Porter, Powell, Price, Robbins, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Thurston, Townshend, Venable, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, and Yates—94.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HAMILTON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HALL, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question being put, there were—ayes 63, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order for me to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Not at this moment. In other words, the Chair thinks that the motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table takes precedence, inasmuch as it would carry the House to the consideration of the private bills upon the Speaker's table. This being private bill day, the Chair thinks it proper to state the effect of the vote now to be taken.

The question was then taken on Mr. Edgerton's motion; and it was agreed to—ayes 82; noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER stated the question to be upon the passage of Senate bill No. 185, for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I make that motion.

Mr. FOWLER. I hope the gentleman will wait for a moment, until we dispose of those bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole House, now lying on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. How many bills are there?

Mr. FOWLER. There are four.

The SPEAKER. There are seventeen bills.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, at the instance of parties advised upon the merits of Senate bill No. 152, for the relief of John F. Callan, administrator of Daniel Renner, deceased, to restore that bill to its original order on the Calendar, that we may have an opportunity of deliberately investigating its merits. I do this at the instance of those who assure me they have investigated the merits of the whole subject, and that injustice has been done by laying it upon the table.

Mr. DUNCAN. Will the gentleman state the purport of the bill?

Mr. COBB. It is a bill that was laid on the table late on Monday evening.

Mr. CARTTER. It is for the relief of a widow and six orphans. I do not know what its merits are, but I do not wish to do injustice to any one.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DUNCAN. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama to withhold that motion until the private bills upon the Speaker's table, which will not lead to debate, are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. If the House refuse to go into committee, that will be in order.

The question was put upon Mr. Houston's motion, and it was not agreed to.

RALEIGH AND GASTON RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER stated the question before the House to be upon the passage of the Senate bill No. 185, being an act for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railway Company; upon which bill the demand for the previous question was pending.

Mr. STUART. I move to lay that bill upon the table.

Mr. COBB. I would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan, that Judge Daniel, who is deeply interested in this matter, has lately lost his son, which detains him at home, and it would be a matter of courtesy to pass this matter over until he returns.

Mr. STUART. By the unanimous consent of the House, I will withdraw my motion, and ask that the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. MOREHEAD. No, sir; I object.

Mr. ORR moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether that motion is in order. There has been no action in the House since a similar motion has been disposed of.

Mr. STUART. There has been no question taken.

Mr. ORR. There has been a motion made to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was then taken on Mr. Orr's motion, and on a division there were—ayes 60, noes 66.

So the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question now being on the motion to lay the bill upon the table,

Mr. ROBBINS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAWSON called for tellers upon the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and Messrs. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, and King, of New York, were appointed.

The House was divided, and the tellers reported 37 in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUELL. I call for the reading of the bill. The bill was read by the Clerk.

The question was then taken on Mr. STUART's motion, and there were—yeas 81, nays 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, Bennett, Bibb, Haus, J. H. Boyd, Breckinridge, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Conger, John G. Davis, Dawson, Denn, Dismick, Dory, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Ficklin, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Hamilton, Hammond, Haven, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, R. M. Howe, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, R. W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Lockhart, Martin, McLanahan, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Newton, Andrew Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Price, Reed, Robbins, Robie, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, T. Stevens, Strepton, Stuart, Sweetser, Thurston, Townshend, Tuck, Washburn, Wells, and Wildrick—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, William Appleton, Averett, T. H. Bayly, Beale, Bocoock, Bowie, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, B. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Caskie, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, George T. Davis, Disney, Dockery, Duncan, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Fitch, Gentry, Grey, Hall, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hubbard, Hendricks, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, Landry, Mace, McCorkle, McMullin, McQueen, Miller, Milken, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Polk, Porter, Powell, Ross, Scurry, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Strother, Taylor, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Yates—80.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The next bill in order is Senate bill No. 67, "for the relief of John A. McGraw, of New York."

Mr. VENABLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill "for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad" was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina cannot make that motion, as he did not vote with the majority.

Mr. CARTER. For the accommodation of the gentleman from North Carolina, I make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BUELL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. VENABLE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider will be entered, but it must go over, as there is another bill now before the House.

Mr. POLK. Is it in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, it is in order.

Mr. POLK. Then I submit that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Polk's motion, and it was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FICKLIN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 240, "making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1853."

The CHAIRMAN stated that the pending question before the committee was the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Polk] to strike out the following clause:

"Norfolk, Virginia: For storehouse No. 14, wharf north side of timber dock, culvert, dredging-machine, and repairs of all kinds, $80,732 20."

Mr. MILLSON. Has any speech been made in opposition to that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that there has not.

Mr. MILLSON. My friend from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] intimated yesterday that, instead of an attempt to protect the timber, one ought rather to be made to protect the Treasury from the depredations of the marine-worm. Sir, the figure was very striking and original, and perhaps the hit was a very happy one. I only wonder that it should have occurred to any gentleman who voted for the Collins line appropriation, as the gentleman from Ohio did; or perhaps that is the very reason that it did occur to the honorable gentleman from Ohio. But will my friend deny the necessity for protecting the public property at navy-yards from the depredations of the marine-worm? Does he know nothing of its ravages? Does he not know that there is deposited at these navy-yards, and particularly at the navy-yard at Gosport, a large quantity of timber, and other very valuable property of all descriptions, worth between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000? Does he not see the wisdom and necessity of protecting those valuable deposits by the expenditure of a small sum of money? Why, then, does the gentleman manifest so much zeal in opposition to this appropriation? Why do the members of the Committee of Ways and Means resist with so much pertinacity the attempt to restore at least a portion of these estimates? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] said on yesterday that all the reductions made by the Committee of Ways and Means had been well considered by them. I ask that gentleman, or any other member of the Committee of Ways and Means, to tell this House the reason why they struck out the estimates for appropriations for completing the timber-dock and quay-wharves at Gosport? I should like to know, sir, what that reason was, and I will allow them now to state it. No reason has been given, and none can be given. Unless these gentlemen can give the House some reason for striking out these estimates, I ask with what grace can they urge the House to confine the appropriations to the amounts recommended by them? I find that it would be a hopeless task to attempt to restore the whole of the appropriations estimated for by the Secretary of the Navy, but stricken out by the Committee of Ways and Means. I shall not again urge it, but I shall presently offer two amendments, having in view the restoration of what I consider the most important of them.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to add at the end of line one hundred and twenty-five these words:

And for extending quay-wharves, $25,000.

Mr. Chairman, I shall call for tellers upon that amendment, and I ask the attention of the House to the reasons which constrain me to offer it here. Now, sir, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTER,] in commenting yesterday upon these amendments, seemed to speak with an air of injured innocence, as if he supposed that some wrong was attempted to be done to the country, by asking the Representatives of the people to protect their own property against loss. Sir, I have no interest in this matter. My constituents have no particular or exclusive interest in it; and it is only because I happen to represent the district in which this navy-yard is situated, and that it is therefore made my especial duty to be somewhat acquainted with its condition, that I trouble the House at all about it. It is a matter of as much interest to other gentlemen as it is to me. If there is any gentleman here who supposes that I would propose or vote for appropriations for the particular benefit of my own constituents, and not demanded by the public welfare—though I do not believe there is any such gentleman here—he does me much injustice. I would not do it. My constituents would not ask me to do it; and I do them but justice when I say that if I were to attempt it, I should not long represent them on this floor. I would vote as readily as any other man against any proposition, the object of which was to expend money unnecessarily in my district. But the object for which this amendment provides, is to continue an existing work of great necessity. I ask the Clerk to read an extract from the letter of the former commandant of the yard, showing the necessity for the work.

The Clerk read the extract, as follows:

"The entire line of quay-wharves cannot, in my opinion, be completed too soon for the public interests. To keep up the temporary water front at this yard, which is entirely of made ground, and to prevent its sliding into the river, frequent piling has to be resorted to. These piles last but a short time, as the marine-worm, which is perhaps more destructive at this, than at any other station, often cuts through them in one season. In point of economy, therefore, it is desirable to finish the permanent stone wharves as early as practicable."

Now, Mr. Chairman, if any member of the Committee of Ways and Means can assign to the House any reason for not continuing that work and completing it as soon as possible, I will yield the floor to him in order that he may do so. The work must be done, and the only conceivable reason which should prevent an appropriation now would be, that at this time there was not money in the Treasury sufficient to accomplish the work. But we have abundant means in the Treasury. The work must be done, and the sooner it is done the better. It has been commenced; it is now unfinished, and your property is subject to daily injury and loss. If it is to be completed at any time, I ask why not now, at once, unless it be that there is some particular reason why all the available funds of the Government are required for other public uses, at this particular moment. We all know this is not the case.

Mr. CARTER. I am opposed to this amendment, and for some of the reasons that I assigned hastily on yesterday. I believe, as the honorable member from the Norfolk district has stated, that he would not designedly ask a profligate expenditure in his district. But it strikes me, that he holds these navy-yards, and the lumber inside of them, animate and inanimate, in too high estimation. We have expended on this Navy, if I recollect aright, upwards of $146,000,000, and that principally since the war of 1812. What is the product of it? Why, the product is, that you have got in this Navy officers enough to man every vessel belonging to this Government, from the yard-arm down, and only about forty of them in employment. You have got a mass of crafts constructed under the genius of this Navy—a genius worked out by idleness and profligacy, in many instances, to correspond with the intellectual character that governs this department—a mass of crafts utterly unavailable for protective purposes; crafts without speed and without value. You have just been informed by the honorable member from the Norfolk district that there is $4,000,000 worth of timber—

Mr. MILLSON. I said between two and three millions.

Mr. CARTER. Well, then, you are told that you have got between two and three millions of property in this one yard. What is the result? Why, that there shall be an annual request made to this Congress, not to put that property into a shape of practical utility to the Government, but that you shall fence it in, and keep it in that unproductive condition. Now, as I remarked on yesterday, it would be far better to burn it up; and if you could extinguish with it the old foggy uselessness of the human materials of the Navy, as it now exists, it would be the greatest God-send that could come upon this Republic.

The gentleman says, I voted for the Collins line. I did vote for that line, and will do it again, and will keep doing it, until the rivalry of that civil and war marine shall extinguish, in the contrast it is furnishing to the world, that cancer upon the public trade.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I have an amendment to offer. I move to decrease the amount in the amendment of my colleague [Mr. MILLSON] $5,000. I submit the amendment, and leave it to the committee, without troubling it with any remarks at this time.

Mr. MILLSON. I am opposed to that amendment. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] has said not one word which has the slightest applicability to the amendment which I introduced. If you were acting upon a bill proposing to disband the Navy, the remarks from the gentleman from Ohio would be altogether pertinent; but we are engaged in the consideration of a bill for the maintenance of the Navy, and the simple inquiry is, whether the appropriation I have asked or suggested is necessary to maintain the existing establishment. But the gentleman did say one word in opposition to a view which I presented. He says, I declared that there is about three millions worth of property at the Gosport navy-yard, in an unprotected state. Sir, I said the whole amount of property at the Gosport navy-yard, embracing the articles under the supervision of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, and the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs, is between two and three million dollars, exactly $2,372,000—a larger amount than there is in any other navy-yard in the country, and as large as can be found in five other navy-yards. Everybody knows it is the most extensive and important navy-yard we have. It is designed not merely for the present wants of our swelling population and growing Navy. It is not to be supposed that fifty or a hundred years hence we will only have demand for the same number of vessels as now. Our policy should be to improve these naval establishments in such a manner as to provide for the prospective as well as the present wants of the service.

Now, sir, the Government have commenced a line of quay-walls, constructed of stone, which they have partially completed. At the upper end the ground is what is called made-ground, and of such a character as to require to be secured. Wooden piles are now used, which soon decay and require constant repairs. And the question is, whether you will not diminish this expense and save the Government from loss, by the erection of this wall. I say again, that this appropriation is demanded for the protection of that navy-yard. It was sanctioned by Congress when they first ordered the construction of the wall. You will have the depth of water in the river diminished by the washing away of this loose material, and you will be compelled to go to considerable expense for clearing out the channel with dredging-machines, so as to remove the impediments in the way of navigation, if this work is not completed. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Commandant of the Yard, and by the Chief of the Bureau. I know myself that it is of the utmost importance that the work should be completed. Can any member of the Committee of Ways and Means assign any reason why it should not be continued? If so, I will yield the floor to him for that purpose. Both the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of the Bureau have expressed to me their regret that the reduction was made by the Committee of Ways and Means. I say again, that neither I nor my constituents have any peculiar interest in this matter. I know what the wants of the Government require, and therefore I think it my duty to inform the House, and then let the responsibility be upon it.

The question now being upon the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. BOCKOCK, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. DEAN. I move to reduce the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] to $24,000. I do it for the purpose of saying that I see no reason for quarreling with the Committee of Ways and Means for their action in reducing the estimates upon this naval appropriation bill; but I rise now more particularly for the purpose of doing what I should have done on yesterday, had I been in my seat, when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] alluded to a report of some remarks made by me, in the Intelligencer of yesterday morning. I did not hear of this matter until last evening, when I called at the Globe Office, and examined the report of what he said.

I can only say the gentleman was entirely mistaken in relation to what I said the day before, if he supposed I made any such charge, or any such allusion to the late Secretary of the Navy as he indicated. What I did say was, that under his management, there were abuses existing in the Navy. I alluded to the fact of there being nearly $500,000 paid this year to officers waiting orders. I further said, which is true, that during the first year of his administration, the expenses of the Navy increased $3,000,000.

Now, I must say, for that reason, I am in favor of retrenchment. The National Intelligencer has not reported me as the gentleman says. It has reported, essentially, what I said. I will read the paragraph alluded to:

"He believed that our Navy, under its present management—especially under the management of the late Secretary—had been one of the corruptest sources of abuse in the Government."

Now, the reports in the National Intelligencer, so far as I have seen them, are ordinarily more correct than any I have seen of abbreviated reports; but in this instance they have made a mistake, by inserting a word I did not use, and which I did not intend at all. I intended to say what I repeat now, that under the management of the late Secretary of the Navy, the expenditures of that Department increased enormously; and being in a time of peace, I can see no reason whatever for it.

Mr. MILLSON. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN.] I have nothing to say in reply to his general remarks, which do not relate to this subject. I wish, however, to say a word in reply to an observation which fell from the gentleman from New York, lest it might be supposed that I was quarreling with the Committee of Ways and Means. I beg to say to that gentleman and to this committee, that I designed no such thing. I did not quarrel with the Committee of Ways and Means. I believe the reductions they have made have been from what they believed a just spirit of economy; and I heartily sympathize with them in that spirit. I entirely approve of their efforts to reduce the expenditures of the Government within economical limits. But these reductions must be wisely made, and I do not believe the Committee of Ways and Means themselves would have reduced the estimates now under consideration, if this bill had been prepared at a later period of the session. I know, when they had these matters under consideration, it was a matter of some doubt what amount would be left in the Treasury. I went before the committee on two occasions. I will not state the conversation which occurred there, but I will say, that from what was said to me, I inferred that several of these appropriations were struck out because the committee had not then the assurance that there would be a large sum of money in the Treasury at the expiration of the fiscal year.

Mr. PHELPS. If the gentleman will allow me, I will explain what governed me in relation to the item he is now advocating. I will inquire if it is not in relation to the quay-walls in Gosport navy-yard?

Mr. MILLSON. It is.

Mr. PHELPS. I do not recollect exactly the extent of the quay-wall which is there now; but the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia proposes a further extension of that wall. Now, the Committee of Ways and Means were of the opinion that such an extension was not necessary for the purposes of shipping, or anything else, except to beautify and adorn that navy-yard. It is said that the wall should be further extended so far as to prevent the river from injuring the property at that point. The committee were fully advised with regard to that matter. There is now a wharf where it is proposed this quay-wall shall be extended. It is composed of wooden piles, which are driven down, and which, as we are aware, very soon decay. But the committee were of opinion that another structure than a quay-wall might be constructed much cheaper, and which would answer the purpose much better at this time. That was the reason which operated upon my mind in inducing me to come to the conclusion which I did in relation to this quay-wall.

Mr. MILLSON. I am glad to hear the gentleman's explanation; and I will leave the committee to judge of the sufficiency of the reasons. It seems that some members of that committee supposed that instead of this masonry work, timber would answer just as well to secure this property from injury by being washed away into the river.

Mr. PHELPS. Not at all.

Mr. MILLSON. What then?

Mr. PHELPS. I will state that, from the opinion I had received, I thought a further extension of this quay-wall was unnecessary; that for all purposes of mooring vessels, and for the purpose of receiving supplies, and for every purpose for which such a wall was needed by the Navy, they had a sufficient extension of wharf already at Gosport.

Mr. MILLSON. This is still worse. I never heard before that the water-line of a navy-yard should not be protected from crumbling or washing away. It seems, from the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri, that there is to be no security at all furnished for this artificially-made land. That is not to be protected from the washing of the river, because there is no necessity of having a greater line of wharves than now exists.

Mr. DEAN, by consent, withdrew the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I move to reduce the appropriation one dollar. I do it for the purpose of submitting a few remarks upon this question.

It must be obvious to every gentleman who has given even a casual observation to the Navy, that one of two results must take place. Either some of its friends—its real friends—must undertake a revision of the whole affair, so as to produce the necessary amount of retrenchment, or the whole of that arm of the service must be abandoned; for if it goes on in the same ratio of increase as it has done for several years past, and the same means are used to produce that increase which have been used, the Treasury of this country must and will come to a point when it cannot supply its demands. Now, look at this case. It is said the commandant of the yard makes a recommendation. Who is he, sir? An officer of the Navy, who, however honest he may be, desires to beautify and adorn this particular yard—not only to the extent necessary for its protection, but to extend it in the most expensive and permanent style; such as would vie with any portion of the Old Country, under the direction and with the purse of its most expensive proprietors. Now, sir, this country cannot carry out such a system. An officer of the Navy makes a recommendation, the Secretary of the Navy sanctions the recommendation, and Congress is called upon to make the appropriation, for the reason that the naval officers recommended it. This is no reason at all. Sir, we must rely upon some committee. We must rely upon the Committee of Ways and Means, whose duty it certainly is to examine this question, and to omit such appropriations as they may deem unnecessary.

Mr. PHELPS. If the gentleman from Michigan will permit me, I desire to say one word. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] has urged the necessity of constructing this quay-wharf. If I understand it, that necessity has existed for several years past, and this is the first time for two years past that an estimate has been submitted from the Navy Department, for the further extension of this quay-wharf now in process of construction.

Mr. MILLSON. Will the gentleman allow me to explain that matter?

Mr. PHELPS. I have in my hand the printed estimates, which I will have read if the gentleman desires.

Mr. MILLSON. I know that much of this made ground has been deposited along the side of the river within the last twelve months, and it ought to be protected without delay.

Mr. STUART. Five minutes is a short time to speak on any subject, and I desire to resume my time and go on. I was saying that the Committee of Ways and Means, whose duty it is to examine this question, has omitted the appropriation for which the gentleman contends. Now,

I am disposed to sanction the action of that committee, and leave the responsibility there. It must rest somewhere; and it is very much better to rest it with a regularly-organized committee of the House, than undertake to override its action here, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. What I desire is, the lowest amount of expenditure possible for the Navy, until such a revision of its whole affairs shall take place as to restore it to what it once was, and now ought to be—the pride and glory of the country. But, at this time, instead of occupying that position, it is in a position so different that it would not require much for me, as much as I desire it, to vote to abolish the whole concern, unless it can be better managed than it has been lately.

Mr. HEBARD. I rise simply to say that I am opposed to this amendment, and desire that the committee shall come to a vote upon the remaining proposition. I think we have expended time enough upon this subject. I am exceedingly anxious to know what the next proposition will be—for I suppose there will be another—and I hope we shall now take a vote upon this. We want a little variety.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is right.

The question being upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. MILLSON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and DUNHAM were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question now recurring upon the adoption of the original amendment,

Mr. MILLSON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HAMILTON and BUELL were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 28, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BOCOCK offered the following amendment, to come in at the end of the clause in relation to the Norfolk navy-yard:

For the purchase of lands, amounting in quantity to about six acres, according to a survey recently made under the direction of the Commandant of the Gosport Navy-Yard, which land is now the property of C. P. Edwards; $9,000: Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid until a valid title to said land shall first have been obtained, and the assent of the Legislature of Virginia shall have been given to the said conveyance.

Mr. BOCOCK. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a matter which comes in conflict with any recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, because I believe it never was before them. It is a matter which has been brought up in consequence of peculiar circumstances, since the action of the Committee of Ways and Means upon this bill.

The amendment relates to a quantity of about six acres of land, contiguous to land now owned by the United States Government, and which the Government has been attempting, as I understand, for about twenty years to buy, because it is necessary for the protection of property there, and which it has only lately been able to purchase upon fair terms.

Now, I can state, that by a map which has been delivered to me, made under the direction of the superintendent or commandant of the yard there, this land is necessary. But I am met here with the declaration, by my friend from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] that the recommendation of the commandants of the yards, and officers of the Navy, are not worth a picayune. I was exceedingly surprised to hear such a remark from so sensible a gentleman as the member from Michigan. The advices of men who are familiar with these matters, who are upon the ground and know all about them, not worth a picayune! Who understands matters about your navy-yards? Is there any one here who comes from those navy-yards? Is there any one familiar with all their wants? You must rely upon these persons. They are appointed for the purpose of examining into these matters, and to give us their recommendations. The gentleman from Michigan comes forward and says that their recommendation is not worth one cent. The gentleman had better have gone one step further, and, with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] say: Let the Navy perish. That is the only question. Take care of your Navy—take care of your property—or let your Navy perish. That is the issue now presented to the committee.

I understand that the Congress of the United States, at its last session, made an appropriation to purchase a quantity of land contiguous to the navy-yard at New York, for which $285,000 was paid. We propose to buy six acres of land, which are very necessary, and which we are able now to get for $9,000. Let me state one or two reasons why this should be done. There are contiguous to this land several public buildings, and there have been built upon these six acres shanties of combustible materials, exceedingly liable to take fire, and which, by taking fire, might consume $60,000 or $70,000 worth of public property. These six acres also extend very near to those timber sheds, in which all this property has been stored, and of which my colleague from the Norfolk district [Mr. MILLSON] has just spoken. I wish gentlemen to understand that Norfolk is not in my district. As I have before said, this land extends nearly to these timber sheds, and if it is not bought by the Government, it will be built up entirely down to them with combustible shanties; and instead of appropriating $9,000 for this purchase, the Government may shortly lose $100,000 by the destruction of property by fire. Its purchase is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and by the commandant of the yard.

Mr. STUART. I did not make use of any such term as the gentleman says I did. I did not use the term picayune. Not being a southern man, it is a name for coin I know nothing about.

I said that these recommendations come to us from officers in the Navy, and were not, from the very nature of things, and from the nature of men, for that reason, entitled to much weight. Let a man be a commandant of a navy-yard, and let him recommend to Congress what amount of money ought to be there expended, and in what way, and I submit to this committee, without fear of contradiction, that if you will adopt that as the principle, your whole Treasury will not supply his wants and his recommendations.

Now, take this very case. They want six more acres of land, at a cost of $9,000, and then they want, at least, one side of that land walled in with this same sea-wall, because it is necessary in order to carry out the plan of these officers of the Navy. What great good grows out of it? Any? Sir, I see none; but I do not profess to be so advised upon this subject as to be able to instruct this committee. It is for that reason that I, for one, feel much more secure in relying upon the action of the Committee of Ways and Means, and if that committee is disposed to urge retrenchment in our Navy expenditures, I am disposed to stand by it. It is the principle against which I contend—that principle which allows an officer of the Navy to make a recommendation for the expenditure of money, and that to be reason enough why Congress should vote it. I deny the correctness of the logic, and deny that that is safe action.

Mr. EVANS. I move to increase the amount to $10,000. I have examined this subject a little, in connection with the maps and plans. I do not propose to take any part in this general naval debate. The Secretary of the Navy has examined this matter, and the commandant says that the Government has been endeavoring to purchase this land for some years, but that it has been held heretofore by an individual who would not part with it at all. They have at length prevailed upon him, if Congress will buy it; and it is stated, and I believe truly, that if it is purchased, it will be valuable property to the United States. If that be the case, and I have no doubt of it, this amendment ought to be regarded in a different light from that in which the Committee of Ways and Means view it. The purchase of this small piece of land at a cheap rate—and it is cheap considering everything—may possibly, and, indeed, probably will save us from a great deal of expense hereafter. Sudden conflagrations are not unusual at all in our towns, particularly in our southern towns, and the large ship-sheds, and timber-sheds of the Government may be consumed; and we will lose an amount of property much greater in value than the amount contained in this appropriation. I trust, therefore, the committee will adopt it.

Mr. MILLSON. I am opposed to the amendment, and in favor of the original amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BOCOCK] from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I have risen for the purpose of saying a word or two, to give the House some information in regard to the facts. I never heard of this appropriation until within a few days past. The suggestion is made by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I will state that the extent of the Norfolk navy-yard is now less than that of other navy-yards of less importance. The New York navy-yard contains about one hundred and eighteen acres. The navy-yard at Norfolk, much more important, much more useful, as I conceive, contains only about seventy-nine acres.

I am informed by my colleague, [Mr. BOCOCK,] and from other sources, that this land is desired, and I believe it would be advantageous to extend the yard in that direction.

I am in favor of the original amendment, and as I am informed that the land can be purchased for $9,000—that being the amount asked by the present proprietor—and as the amendment is to increase it to $10,000, which amount is not required, I am opposed to it.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. EVANS, and it was not agreed to.

The question now being on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. BOCOCK,

Mr. BOCOCK asked for tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. SUTHERLAND, and STANTON of Kentucky, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the following section, viz:—

“Pensacola, Florida: Towards completing permanent wharf, to complete guard-house and kitchen, to complete yard railway and repair old track; to complete extension of central wharf, to rebuild east wall of cistern No. 26, for ice-house, repairs of cisterns Nos. 14 and 25, and repairs of all kinds, $88,044.”

after the word “wharf,” to insert the following:

“For extension of smithery and machine shop, for wharf on east side of yard, four new forges and chimneys.”

and to increase the appropriation to $162,782.

As I have stated, I am instructed by the committee to submit that amendment, but I have very little expectation that it will pass. It seems to me that the Committee of Ways and Means have monopolized to themselves all the business of this Congress. The recommendations of the Committee on Military Affairs, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and of all the various committees of the House, are treated with contempt, at the instance of the chairman of the Ways and Means, who assumes that his committee are alone to say what is essential and what is proper, and that the House must vote for, and adopt without alteration or amendment, all of their recommendations, and against all others.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend is too intelligent a gentleman to indulge in such remarks as those towards the Committee of Ways and Means. I assure him, and he must have known it, that we have acted upon nothing which was not committed to us by the House.

Mr. CABELL. I am not speaking of that. My point is that the Committee of Ways and Means come to us, and say that we must act according to their recommendation, and that unless we do adhere to it, improper legislation will be the result; or some argument of that kind. We see the honorable chairman passing the word around the House, that unless you pass his bills exactly as they are, the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government may be lost. Everything must, therefore, be opposed, except what comes from that committee. The House seems to have acquiesced in this, and is saved the trouble of thinking for itself; and I have not much expectation of the passage of the amendment I propose, but introduce it because it is recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and because I deem it proper and essential, and because its adoption is urged by the Secretary of the Navy, and head of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

The geographical position of Florida is unfortunate for the interests of the whole country. She has a sea-coast of twelve hundred miles in extent, and is therefore brought very much in communication with the General Government. Unfortunately she has but one Representative upon this floor, and consequently an influence only in proportion. The importance of this navy-yard at Pensacola is admitted upon all hands; and the completion of the works there is recommended by the proper officers of the Government. The Secretary says that it is essential to the commercial interest of the whole valley of the Mississippi.

I beg to read a short extract from the report of Commodore Smith, indorsed by the Secretary:

"It is due to the great western portion of our country, that a navy-yard of the most efficient character be maintained on the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. That sea necessarily, from natural causes, has become a most important channel of navigation and commerce; and when the three passage-ways across the continent that are contemplated—connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—shall be available, it will become yet more so; and should collision or war with foreign Powers take place, these waters will become the prominent theater of action, and the stronger naval power engaged will command the termini of these passage-ways, as well as the mouth of the Mississippi. The importance, therefore—indeed I would say the necessity—of fostering the navy-yard in that quarter, is fully apparent."

The whole country, especially the great West—the constituents of my friend from Ohio, and others who oppose this appropriation—are much more interested in this navy-yard than are the people of Florida. I had a right to expect their coöperation instead of their opposition.

I have a word more to say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTER,] all of whose arguments strike at the existence of a Navy. I, like him, am in favor of the reforms in that service which have been proposed. I advocated the Collins line of steamers. I advocated the contract system for the construction of steamers. I desire to see the effect of that competition of which he spoke. But I will say to that gentleman, and I know that his intelligence must convince him of the truth of the statement, that these navy-yards are as absolutely necessary for the preservation of the class of vessels he wishes to see substituted for the present system, as they are to our existing naval establishment.

In regard to the improvements asked for in this yard, I will state further to him and the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] that not one of the appropriations I propose, and which were stricken out by the Committee of Ways and Means, is for "the embellishment of the yard." The improvement is not for "the officers or offices," but for the workmen. One portion of the amendment provides for machine-shops and forges, which are deemed absolutely necessary to the secure and economical completion of the works, and the increased appropriation is essential, and if not made now will be asked for next year. The work has to be done some time or other; the money is in the Treasury, and it is deemed a matter of economy that it should be done now. For the reasons I have stated, I hope the amendment will be adopted. The Committee of Ways and Means cut down the estimates of the Department from $162,782 to $88,044. My motion is to restore the original appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. I am opposed to the amendment, for the reason that I fully concur with the Committee of Ways and Means in their effort to restrict the expenditures at these navy-yards, and for the reason lying back of that: if the improvement of these navy-yards is to result in the product they have heretofore produced, then I go for destroying them. When my friend from Florida, and the friends of these navy-yards, will bring forth craft and put them into daily service in carrying your mails and your ministers, instead of sending them on three years' cruises to lay dismantled and idle in the Bay of Naples, with the officers on shore idling, I will extend as liberal appropriations as he will for the Navy. But until you curtail the proportions of the Navy, until it is whipped by a rival marine that does partake of civil qualities, you may spend and expend upon it from now till eternity without producing any reform. I became satisfied three years ago, that the only way to regenerate this Navy was to starve it out, and to patronize a rival militia upon the seas. Why, sir, how was it in your Mexican war with these old hulks floating around your docks at New Orleans? You had to hire merchant craft to transport your soldiers. They had raised themselves above that practical employment.

Much has been said by gentlemen on this floor of the great value of the Navy to the country. They are careful to deal in general terms, and are cautious to avoid any detailed statement from which its aggregate value can be estimated. Now, sir, I have taken the trouble to ascertain, from a reliable source, the history of a three years' cruise, from which one of the finest ships of the Navy has recently arrived, from which a pretty correct estimate may be formed of the whole concern. The razees Independence, the flag-ship of the squadron in the Mediterranean sea, under the command of Commodore Charles W. Morgan, arrived at Naples from the United States, on the 14th of September, 1849, and sailed thence for home on the 29th day of March, 1852, having been upon that station over two and a half years.

Now, sir, will it be credited, that, of these thirty months and over, SEVENTEEN MONTHS (five hundred and ten days) were passed in idleness—at anchor in the beautiful bay of Naples, a locality of less commercial interest to the United States than almost any other capital in the Mediterranean—and that more than FIVE MONTHS were passed at anchor in the bay of Spezzia, making nearly TWENTY-THREE MONTHS, out of thirty months, squandered between Naples and Spezzia, both of the smallest commercial consideration?

During all this time, or very nearly all of it, Commodore Morgan lived on shore with his family, visiting the Independence only at rare intervals. His continued absence from duty does not appear from the log-book of the ship, but was known to all. He rarely, if ever, as I am informed, visited any of the ships of the squadron for exercise or inspection, and never practiced his squadron of five ships in fleet-sailing, naval evolutions, or gun practice. Once only, in a service of three years, the crew of his flag-ship were exercised in target-firing! It is presumed that the Secretary of the Navy did not neglect to give directions, in regard to these important matters, in his letter of instructions to Commodore Morgan. And yet, Mr. Preston and Mr. Graham, in their official annual reports, speak in terms of praise and commendation of the activity of the Mediterranean squadron! Now, sir, Commodore Morgan will have credit, in the Navy Register, for more than three years' "sea service," for this cruise—let us see with what justice or propriety. In all the year 1850, he was at sea in the Independence not over forty-eight days, ten days of which the ship was towed about by the steamer Mississippi! In 1851 he was at sea in his flag-ship but seventeen days, and twelve days in the Mississippi, the residue of that year, about eleven months, having been passed with his family at Naples, or at the baths of Lucca in the interior of Tuscany. Thus for seventy-seven days afloat, or at sea in these two years, this commodore is allowed his full sea pay and credited for sea service.

I understand it to be required by the naval regulations, that the broad pennant of a commodore shall be constantly displayed from the main-top of his flag-ship. And yet, in the face of this regulation, during the summer of 1851, which Commodore Morgan passed at Lucca, he sent the Independence on a cruise, with instructions to hoist his broad pennant on a given day, and the pennant, the insignia of his presence, was worn on that ship, when he was a thousand miles distant from her; but subsequently, for some reason known to himself, the captain of the ship hauled it down, and there ceased to be any evidence of the presence of a commodore on the station for a considerable time, although he was receiving his $4,000 per annum for his arduous services.

Now, it is an interesting inquiry, what was the expense to the Government of this memorable cruise?

From the best information which I have been able to obtain, the cost of a ship of the class of the Independence, properly officered and manned, is at least $500 per day. In a recent number of the "Sailors' Magazine," the cost of a razees is put down $200,000, or a little over $500 per day. Will any one suppose, while at this immense outlay, that the commodore, while his ship was lying idle in the Bay of Naples, would hire a merchant vessel to bring supplies of provisions from the depot at Spezzia to Naples? This was actually done in the winter of 1852, and the cost of the charter of the vessel charged to the Government. Whether that charge has been allowed at the Department, I have not learned. It will be a subject of future inquiry.

Such, sir, has been the cruise of one of your best ships, and such the honor which has been conferred upon the nation by one of the squadrons of your gallant Navy.

In the early part of December, 1851, orders were sent from the Navy Department to Commodore Morgan to return to the United States without delay; and yet he disregarded that order, to prolong his winter's residence at Naples until the 29th of the following March. His excuse for this disobedience was, that the state of affairs in France required his presence. What protection was or could be afforded by an idle frigate in the Bay of Naples, to the general interests of the country in France, it would puzzle a wise man to tell. The truth is, the commodore did not relish a winter passage to the United States, and preferred his ease at Naples.

This disobedience of orders cost Uncle Sam a round sum. The delay of five months may be set down at $60,000 at least.

But this was not all. The period of service for which most of the men had shipped, had expired, and the Government were subjected to the payment of twenty-five per cent. advance upon the wages of about four hundred men, who were unjustly and cruelly kept from their families and their homes, after their term of enlistment had expired, until he could find the weather sufficiently mild to enable him to cross the Atlantic with safety.

It is not a little singular, that for a similar disobedience of orders, this same commodore was dismissed from the only command at sea which he had ever before had. I find that the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Upshur, recalled him from his command in Brazil, with this severe remark:

"An officer who questions the orders of the Department instead of obeying them, is no longer fit to be intrusted with command. Your successor having been appointed, you are at liberty to return."

The passage of the Independence from the Rock of Gibraltar to the United States, was an extraordinary one—being forty-two days to New York—while the merchant vessel Arbellino, which left Gibraltar simultaneously with the Independence, arrived in New York in twenty-four days.

When the frigate arrived, she had but six barrels of pork, and no beef, for her officers and crew.

With the valuable wind charts of Lieutenant Maury on board, in utter disregard of their directions, the ship was navigated to latitude 21° 30' north, on her passage from Gibraltar to New York, and thus secured the gentle breezes and tranquil seas of a southern passage, which were, no doubt, quite agreeable to the lady passengers.

If, Mr. Chairman, I have done injustice to this officer or the naval service, by this exposition, my justification must be found in the truth of every part of the statements which I have made.

It is no wonder, sir, that the service is at a low ebb, when such is a sample of duties performed by our squadrons.

Now, how idle it is to build up and extend navy-yards with this unproductive and disgraceful result to the nation. When the gentleman shall propose that every ship fitted out at your navy-yards shall enter your mail service, and that your midshipmen upon their decks shall feel the sea-breeze and encounter the storms; that those ships shall be equipped for the service and the defense of the Republic, I will vote as liberally as any other man; but until I see that reformation take its beginning, I will not vote one cent.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to reduce the appropriation to one dollar.

The amendment of the gentleman from Florida is to strike out $88,044, the amount now in the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert $162,782; so that the appropriation, if the amendment be adopted, will be—

For the Pensacola navy-yard, $162,782.

Now, without proposing to discuss particularly the merits of this amendment, I will say that the Committee of Ways and Means, in considering this bill, examined as carefully as they could this item, and agreed to appropriate for the Pensacola navy-yard all they believed necessary, under the circumstances, and no more. I think now, as I thought then, that the allowance made by the committee was unreasonably liberal, in proportion to what was allowed in other cases; but as it was agreed to and put in the bill, I was not disposed to disturb it here. I am opposed to the amendment, and hope the committee will not adopt it.

We have heard much complaint in regard to the action of the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not propose seriously to answer it, nor attempt to justify the conduct of that committee, because I do not believe that it is necessary to do so before the committee or the country. What is it the Committee of Ways and Means have tried to do? What is the great crime of which they are guilty? Everybody complained of the great, the enormous expenditures of the Government, and nowhere more than in this naval department, and this committee have sought where they could retrench these outrageous expenditures. In my judgment, they have not done enough. They have not cut sufficiently deep. They have not used the knife enough; but this is not what is complained of by gentlemen. These allegations are not particular, but are put before the country in the gross. They will go out with our action here, and then let the country judge. I am not afraid of the verdict—not all, sir. My friend from Florida makes a new allegation—he takes a new tack. It is not, as I understand, that the Committee of Ways and Means have allowed too much, though he offers an amendment to increase the amount we report here, but he complains that that committee are attempting to grasp all jurisdiction—to take the control of everything. Had we done any such thing it would have been a good cause of complaint. It is because we have not reported enough; because we have not covered as large an amount as he thinks we should have; because we have not recommended appropriations we thought unnecessary, that he gets up, offers his amendment, and asks the committee to override our action. But in the same breath, we are told that we grasp too much, and take the whole influence of Congress within our jurisdiction. I know it has been the practice to put on appropriation bills every description of measures, and particularly every kind of claim, public and private, which can come before Congress. It is a wrong practice, one deeply to be lamented, and I hope that the committee will sustain the Ways and Means in their endeavor to reform it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to the amendment, and hope the debate upon this matter may cease. I think the question is well understood. The Committee of Ways and Means think that certain objects for expenditure at the various navy-yards are unnecessary, which the officers at those yards, the heads of bureaus, the Secretary of the Navy, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and gentlemen acquainted with those various matters, think are necessary. The committee have determined that the Ways and Means did right, and that the head of the executive department, heads of bureaus, officers, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, were all wrong. The Whigs on this side of the committee refuse to sustain their Administration, and the Democrats refuse to appropriate money to sustain the public works until the Administration they expect comes in. The sentiment seems to be against the navy-yards and for stopping improvements in them. If that be the case there is no necessity for further discussion. The question has been decided over and over again, and I am not disposed to say anything more.

Mr. HIBBARD. I concur entirely with the gentleman, and trust the question will be taken on the amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. HIBBARD, and it was rejected.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CABELL's amendment, and it was rejected.

The following section was read:

"Memphis, Tennessee: For pavements, drains, and ditches, cisterns, for rope-walk, hemp-house, store-house, (one wing) complete, railing for vertical wall, and repairs of all kinds, $47,043 34."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am under the necessity of offering the amendment which I send to the Chair, and upon which I will say a single word:

After the word "for," in that section, insert "excavation and embankment," and increase the appropriation to $67,000.

I desire to say to my friend from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] that this is not for an improvement in a navy-yard—and it is not for an improvement to adorn a navy-yard, but it is for the purpose of doing justice—a small measure of justice to the only establishment of the kind we have in the West to spin the American hemp, which is made in the valley of the Mississippi; and which, I believe, by the recent disposition manifested by the Navy Department, is to be cut down to a rope-walk. There are a good many fearful holes upon the ground owned by the Government, contiguous to the various buildings; which, for all the purposes of convenience and for sanitary purposes, and to preserve the health of those employed there, ought to be filled up. This amendment is to restore the appropriation of $20,000 estimated for by the Department. If this property is to be sold, or whatever is to be done with it, this work ought to be finished. I do not know upon what principle gentlemen have proposed to strike out that particular part of the appropriation, whether the property is to be sold or retained. If it were private property—if it were my property to-day—if it were the property of any prudent man having the money, he would have the work done himself upon his own premises. It is absolutely indispensable. That is all I have to say.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STANTON's amendment, and it was rejected.

The following section was then read:

"San Francisco, California: For completing the floating dry-dock, $360,000."

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to strike out that section. The $360,000 embraced in this item was included in the deficiency bill. There is no necessity for this appropriation being here.

The question was then taken upon Mr. PHELPS's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the following amendment to come in after that clause, viz:

For completing the war steamer authorized by the act of Congress, approved April 14, 1842; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby required to have the same completed with the least possible delay, and the money appropriated by said act shall be applied to the purpose.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. This same proposition was ruled out by the committee some days ago.

Mr. PRICE. It is presented in an entirely different form.

Mr. VENABLE. The substance is the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. PRICE], that the substance of the amendment is the same as that offered a few days ago; and the Chair would give as an additional reason upon which to rule it out of order, that there is a bill for the same object—for the building of this vessel—pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PRICE. I will call the attention of the Chair, and the committee, to the law making an appropriation for that object. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the law will be read.

The law was then read, as follows:

"An act authorizing the construction of a war steamer for harbor defense.

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into contract with Robert L. Stevens for the construction of a war steamer, shot and shell proof, to be built principally of iron, upon the plan of the said Stevens: Provided, The whole cost, including the hull, armament, engines, boilers, and equipment, in all respects complete for service, shall not exceed the average cost of the steamers Missouri and Mississippi.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $250,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, towards carrying this law into effect.

"Approved April 14th, 1842."

Mr. PRICE. I will call your attention to the 81st rule, to show the committee most distinctly that this amendment is proper and pertinent. The work is now under construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that he has read the 81st rule, and regards it as cutting off this amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the Clerk to read the rule.

The 81st rule was then read, as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. The 55th rule will now also be read.

The 55th rule was then read, as follows:

"No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment. No bill or resolution, shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto, or incorporating therewith, any other bill or resolution pending before the House."

Mr. PRICE. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] submitted an amendment, which the Chair has decided to be out of order. The question now is, "Should the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. SKELTON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STRATTON and STUART were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 65, noes 57.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will submit the following amendment:

For paving, grading, building pier of wharf No. 4, and prosecuting other improvements in the Philadelphia navy-yard necessary for the preservation of the property therein, $29,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. We have passed the point where that should come in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark a question of order is made, that we have passed the proper point.

Mr. FLORENCE. There is a necessity that these repairs should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state again that a point of order is made, and the amendment is not in order at this time.

The following section was then read:

"For hospital at New York; for fence round garden, repairs of buildings, painting, white-washing, clearing up grounds, &c., at hospital, and for completing fence and wall around the burial ground, $8,993."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy—I have a letter from him upon the subject—to move to restore the amount estimated for repairs at this hospital, $18,151, instead of the amount in this appropriation. I will simply say that the items of appropriation provided for by the Committee of Ways and Means are precisely the same, with the exception of a wharf-tax, which is a small item. I do not know how it is that the Committee of Ways and Means can arrive at the conclusion that the work which the Secretary of the Navy, and those who have control of these measures, have estimated as costing $18,151, can be done for less than half that amount. If the Committee of Ways and Means can show that this work can be done, and done well, for half that amount, why our amendment ought to be rejected. But if not, and if this work cannot be done for less than the Department have estimated, and carefully estimated, then the amount ought to be restored. I have been instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the same amendment with regard to the other hospitals; but if the House is not disposed to adopt this amendment, I shall not offer the others.

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to this amendment. The Committee of Ways and Means saw fit to leave $5,000 for the purpose of completing this fence. At that time the committee were not advised of the amount of unexpended appropriation, for the support and maintenance of the hospital in New York. On the 1st of July, there was $39,409 of unexpended appropriation for the maintenance of the hospital in the city of New York.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. That is for maintaining the hospital.

Mr. PHELPS. Any further appropriation is therefore unnecessary.

Mr. STANTON. That is for medical expenses.

Mr. PHELPS. Not entirely for medical expenses. The item embraces medical expenses and others.

Mr. STANTON. Not repairs.

Mr. PHELPS. But, lest any difficulty might arise, I shall not try to modify the bill, but shall content myself with opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WALSH. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the amount $100.

It does seem to me, that the answer given by the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, is no answer at all. That unexpended appropriation is for medical attendance; this appropriation is for improvements connected with the building.

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman allow me to say that that unexpended appropriation is not only for medical attendance, but for the support of the patients in the hospital.

Mr. WALSH. The balance of the unexpended appropriation is for medical attendance. This appropriation proposed by the Naval Committee is for improvements of the establishment.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Maryland is mistaken in relation to this matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. It has nothing to do with medicine at all.

Mr. PHELPS. This unexpended balance for the support of the hospital does not embrace any portion of the expense incurred in the supply of medicines—not a particle of it, as the gentleman will see by referring to the naval appropriation bill of the last session of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. For what purposes is it, then?

Mr. PHELPS. For plastering, painting, flagging, wall and fence round grave-yard—

Mr. WALSH. Does it include any one of the items recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. PHELPS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to say that it does not embrace the same items.

Mr. PHELPS. Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. WALSH. But apart from that, whether it is proper for this House to sustain the Naval Committee, and the Committee on Military Affairs, against the assumed jurisdiction of the Committee of Ways and Means, as a general rule, I will not pretend to say but unquestionably this House, particularly in the present position of our affairs, should not allow that committee to overrule them by striking in the dark, to use a phrase not new in this House. I was surprised at the remark made by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD,] a little while ago, in the case where the Navy Department had estimated for the navy-yard at Pensacola the sum of $150,000, and the Committee of Ways and Means rejected their estimate because it did not accord with what was given to other places. Now, here are estimates coming from the Navy Department, through the Naval Committee, upon information supplied by the bureaus connected—

Mr. HIBBARD. The gentleman has misunderstood my reason. The reason I gave was that we considered the appropriation not necessary.

Mr. WALSH. They considered it not necessary. On what evidence?

Mr. HIBBARD. On sufficient evidence.

Mr. WALSH. Why, here is an appellate court undertaking to overrule the court below, which has all the evidence—the estimates furnished by the bureaus whose business it is to attend to it, furnished by the naval commanders from the proper sources upon which that information should be supplied. The committee, without any evidence, undertake to decide that the appropriations are not necessary.

Mr. HIBBARD. If the gentleman's position is right, that the estimates of the Department ought to be conclusive, of what use is the Committee of Ways and Means, and the after action of this House?

Mr. WALSH. How can the committee determine unless they have the officers before them to give evidence? How shall they undertake to say that the $150,000 estimated for by the Department as necessary for Pensacola, is not necessary? Shall they, uncontrolled and uninformed, reduce the amount, and yet keep the item in the bill?

Now, a word as to how this record is to be made up. Here, when it is complained that in our present difficulty, we have but one vessel of war to send to our northern frontier, and when the Committee on Naval Affairs tell you that these appropriations are necessary for the protection of our Navy—in this state of things we find this House reducing the estimates coming from the proper Department—the Navy Department—and refusing to pass the measures essential to our protection.

I saw a few days since, in the newspapers, that the British fleet sent out here on the northeastern coast, had already cleared the Bay of Fundy. I suppose that gentlemen by their votes in reference to the reductions made by the Committee of Ways and Means, intend that they shall also clear the Bay of New York, and the Bay of Pensacola. They have already cleared the Bay of Fundy, where they had no more jurisdiction than over the Gulf of Mexico; and in the face of facts like these, you are to let it go out now to the country, that this body of intelligent men, the special conservators of the interests of the country, are voting against giving proper appropriations to our Navy, and upon the ground which is here insisted upon as a reasonable and proper one, that our officers engaged in the public service, occasionally when they go—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Maryland has paid a compliment to the intelligence of this committee, but permit me to tell him that I differ with him in relation to the facts about this unexpended balance. If the gentleman had referred to the appropriations made at the last Congress, he would have found that among the items for the hospital at New York, there was an appropriation made at each session for the purpose of inclosing this burying-ground, and building fences, and that on the first of July last, there was an unexpended balance of appropriations for the hospital at New York of $30,409.

Mr. BROOKS. The hospital is not in the city of New York.

Mr. PHELPS. I speak of the hospital in the neighborhood of New York.

Mr. VENABLE. It is the same thing.

Mr. PHELPS. I know the hospital is not in the city. At the first session of the last Congress, the following appropriation was made for that hospital at New York:

"For paving, grading, completing sewers, wall and fence round burying-ground, and current repairs, $16,000."

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish the gentleman would inform the committee for what purpose the $30,000 remaining unexpended was appropriated.

Mr. PHELPS. That is what I am now showing. At the second session of the last Congress, $15,000 was appropriated for plastering, painting, repairs of furniture, wall round grave-yard, and so forth. The Committee of Ways and Means reduced the estimate at this session to $5,000 for the purpose of erecting a fence around that burying-ground; and if they had been in possession of the fact at that time, that there was an unexpended balance of $30,000, it is probable that no further appropriation would have been recommended. I think that the gentleman is mistaken when he says that this balance of appropriation to which I refer, is for the purpose of supplying medicines. It is for repairs and improvements about the hospital and grounds.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to say that $16,000 was appropriated the year before last, and $15,000 last year?

Mr. PHELPS. Sixteen thousand dollars were appropriated at the first session of the last Congress, and $15,000 at the second session. How much there had been appropriated at preceding Congresses, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. STANTON. That makes $31,000 for the two fiscal years, and the gentleman says there is an unexpended balance of $30,000. There could, then, have been nothing spent.

Mr. PHELPS. There have been previous appropriations and previous balances brought along from year to year. I am not now prepared to turn to the documents which show the amounts appropriated at former Congresses, but $31,000 was appropriated for the hospital at New York during the last Congress, and there is now an unexpended balance of $30,000. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will not be adopted.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question was then taken on Mr. STANTON's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the clause relating to the hospital at New York:

And to secure some proper place for the burial of seamen who die in the New York hospital, $5,000.

Mr. B. I propose that amendment for the benefit of the whole country, and if gentlemen will give me their attention for a moment—

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. BROOKS. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I make a question of order upon it.

Mr. CABLE. It is not in pursuance of any law.

Mr. BROOKS. Oh, yes, it is. It is as much in order as any appropriation in the bill. If the Chair has any doubt about it, I call his attention to the 148th line, where almost precisely the same words are used. It is in pursuance of the marine hospital fund laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that being upon the same general subject, it is in order.

Mr. BROOKS. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this amendment is not for the benefit of my own constituents particularly, but for the seamen of the country generally, who die in the city of New York. There are three hospitals, in, or in the vicinity of, New York. One belongs to the United States, and is in Brooklyn. That is the hospital about which we have been debating, and belongs to the United States Government. Another, on Staten Island, is supported by the State of New York—liberally and cheerfully supported. And the other is the New York city hospital, supported by the liberality of the people of that city.

Now, the sailors who are in the hospital of the city of New York, though in a good degree maintained by the charity of the people of that city while they are sick, are nevertheless, if they die there, buried in the Potter's field. So that, when they die away from their friends, it is impossible to distinguish forty-eight hours after, in the confused mass of dead who are buried in that field, one grave from another. The greatest pang the sailor feels when he is about to die, is not so much the fear of death, as the utter impossibility of his friends being able to distinguish him from the confused mass of dead around him, even if they arrive within three or four days of the time of his death. It is therefore for the benefit of the seamen from distant places, who may die in the hospital at the city of New York, that I ask the adoption of this amendment. It is for the seamen from Louisiana, from New England, from the upper lakes, and for all those who may come to the city of New York, and there die amidst the million of people who are in and about the city of New York. I could portray a mournful picture, if I had the time, or if it were necessary, of the sufferings of those seamen who come to that city unknown, and who, from sickness, are thrown into this hospital, to die there, and then to be buried in Potter's field among criminals and paupers.

The object of this amendment is to purchase a burying-ground for those seamen who die in this hospital. The hospital itself is supported, as I said, by the liberality of the people of New York; but owing to the great value of grounds in that vicinity, when sailors die there unknown, it is necessary that they should be buried with criminals and paupers in the Potter's field. I ask the adoption of this amendment, not so much, then, for the benefit of my own constituents, as for the benefit of all parts of the country, and I am quite sure that no man who has any regard for this great body of serviceable men, or who has any heart for the sufferings of humanity, can possibly refuse so small an appropriation.

The question was taken, and Mr. Brooks's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE offered the following amendment to the section which provides for repairs, &c., of the Philadelphia Naval Asylum:

For curbing front on Shippen street, and paving street and sidewalk, $4,328.

Mr. F. said: I submit this amendment because I seriously believe it to be an appropriation which ought to be made. There has been, or soon will be, a street opened upon the south side of the Naval Asylum. It has been the practice in the city of Philadelphia, and I suppose it is a question for the municipal corporation, in which this property is located, to decide—of taxing the property on both sides of the street for paving, and setting curb-stones for such street. If this street is opened it will be necessary that the United States should pave and curb it upon the south side—for the Naval Asylum is upon the south side of the street. There is an act of the Legislature which requires that all persons owning property shall conform to this municipal law. It is, therefore, necessary, in my estimation, that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. VENABLE. Has this street been opened?

Mr. FLORENCE. I apprehend it has, or at least it will be opened. It is necessary that the United States should conform to this law, unless the authorities pass a law exempting that property from taxation; for there is no reason why the people of the district of Moyamensing, in which this Naval Asylum is located, should be taxed for the benefit of the United States Government. We ask that there may be an appropriation to protect the property of the United States, and we ask that the United States shall make such appropriation.

Mr. STUART. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be advocating an appropriation for opening a street through the lands of the United States, and for paving it afterwards?

Mr. FLORENCE. No, sir, it is not.

Mr. STUART. Is this street laid out?

Mr. FLORENCE. I cannot answer whether it is or not.

Mr. STUART. Is there any authority of law which authorizes the appropriation?

Mr. FLORENCE. I think there is; but I am not prepared to answer at this time whether the street is already laid out or not. If it is not, it is the intention that it soon shall be.

Mr. HIBBARD. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the United States Government are now obliged to open and pave this street.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. HIBBARD. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. FLORENCE. I said no such thing. I said when streets were opened by the side of any property—the south side of property—its owners must provide for curbing and paving the street; and I submit this amendment, because such a provision will be necessary. I submit this proposition seriously to the consideration of the committee, and I would be unfaithful to the trust reposed in me if I did not, in my humble manner, protect, as far as I could, the interests of my constituents. I really am a conscientious man. I come here to perform my duty, I ask that justice shall be done us by this House, and by every member upon this floor. I assure this committee that the appropriation I ask is a necessary and proper one. I am responsible personally for any declaration whatever I may make here.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that in all such cases as the one to which he alludes, I think the Supreme Court has decided that the legal authorities shall have power to levy taxes. They have decided that property over which the United States have jurisdiction shall not be exempt from taxation. It is only by a special agreement entered into with the new States that the public lands in those States should be exempt from taxation. All the property of the United States, except that specially guarded by constitutional provisions, is liable to the operation of State laws in reference to taxation. I think the case to which my friend from Pennsylvania refers, is one which does not come under such provision, and the United States property, therefore, at that point may be taxed according to the provisions of the State laws.

The amendment was then disagreed to.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the one hundred and sixty-first line.

Mr. HOUSTON. We have passed that section of the bill.

Mr. CABELL. I know it. I got up as soon as I could, but the Clerk was reading so rapidly that he had passed before I could get the ear of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee having passed that section of the bill, the gentleman cannot offer his amendment except by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair decides that the gentleman cannot offer his amendment.

Mr. CABELL. I appeal from the decision. I think under the circumstances I am entitled to offer it.

Mr. ASHIE. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having passed that portion of the bill which the gentleman desires to amend, it is not in order, according to the rules of the House, to return to it except by unanimous consent. The Chair, however, hopes, under the circumstances, that no gentleman will object, and that the gentleman from Florida will be allowed to offer his amendment.

There was no objection, and Mr. CABELL accordingly offered the following amendment:

Strike out the words "$2,000" in line one hundred and sixty one, and insert "$24,427," so that the section will read as follows:

At Pensacola, for draining and filling up ponds, and so forth, $24,427.

Mr. C. said: Mr. Chairman, the Committee of Ways and Means, of which I have already spoken, has undertaken to reduce this estimate of $24,427 down to $2,000. This hospital at Pensacola happens to be in the State of Florida, and as I stated before, is situated in a portion of the State where there are not more than about 10,000 people in that State living within sixty or one hundred miles. The State of Florida, therefore, has but little interest in it. It being situated at the extreme western point of the State, it is nearer the city of New Orleans than the city of Tallahassee. So it will be seen that I am not interested in this case to any very great extent, although, because this hospital happens to be in a portion of my district, I am liable to certain remarks which have been made with reference to some of the other public works.

But I rise now for the purpose of asking this Committee of Ways and Means, inasmuch as I see the House have determined that they, and they alone, are to estimate for the House, that they will review their decision in reference to this item. The Committee on Naval Affairs, whose especial duty it is to have cognizance of this particular subject, it seems, is not competent to recommend to the House what ought to be done; but this Committee of Ways and Means, who have charge of the Army, the Navy, the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, and of every other branch of the public service, know better what should be done for the good of the Navy than the Committee on Naval Affairs, whose especial duty it is to look to that branch of the service.

Now, I ask any member of the Committee of Ways and Means to say to the House why it is that this appropriation of twenty-four thousand and odd dollars was stricken out, and $2,000 inserted in its place? If no sufficient reason can be given, I shall ask that this estimate be restored.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Florida desires to know why the Committee of Ways and Means have reduced the estimate sent in by the naval Department, to $2,000. I will explain to him by stating the detailed and specific estimates of the Department.

At Pensacola there is an estimate for a wall, which includes the hospital building and grounds, and also including naval materials, of $22,487. The other estimate is for draining and filling up ponds, $2,000. The latter estimate the committee retained in the bill; but the other, which the committee believed wholly unnecessary at the present time, was stricken out. If it would tend to provide for the comfort of the sick, or tend at all to provide for the health of those so unfortunate to be confined in the naval hospital, I am sure every member of this committee would vote to restore it; and if the Committee of Ways and Means had believed it would so provide, they would have embraced it in their recommendation.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from Florida, and some other gentlemen, have alluded to these recommendations made by the Naval Committee. Now, I should like to have some gentlemen show what authority they have for making these recommendations. The rule under which they are authorized to act, provides that they shall take into consideration such matters relative to the naval establishment as are referred to them by the House. Now, the estimates of the Department for maintaining and carrying on the Navy have never been referred to the Naval Committee by the House at all.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana, that that portion of the President's message which relates to the Navy, is always referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs by the House.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. CABELL, of Florida, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, proposed the following amendment as a separate section:

Be it further enacted, &c. That it shall be lawful to appoint and commission eight surgeons and ten assistant surgeons in the Navy, in addition to the numbers now authorized by law in those grades; and also, to enlist and employ in the naval service, in addition to the marines now authorized by law, forty sergeants, forty corporals, twenty drummers, twenty fliers, and five hundred privates: Provided, That a number of ordinary seamen and landsmen, equal to this addition, shall be dispensed with, if the same can be done without injury to the service.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel bound to raise a question of order for the consideration of the Chair. That amendment, if I understand it, proposes to change the laws entirely in regard to the class of seamen referred to in the amendment. It proposes to dispense with some, and to create others, under a law not now in existence.

Mr. STANTON. I will remark that my attention was called to this subject by a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, urging the necessity of these changes. I have not had an opportunity to present it to the Committee on Naval Affairs, but I deemed it a matter of respect to the Secretary of the Navy to present the amendment. I have no doubt of the necessity of the amendment.

I should like to have the letters read, if it is the pleasure of gentlemen; but if it is not, I am not disposed to trespass upon the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards this amendment as falling within the rule of order laid down, and therefore decides it out of order.

Mr. STANTON. Its object is the carrying on the naval service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards it as a proposition for increasing the naval force.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, offered the following amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not exceeding $10,000, for the purchase of one thousand copies of the work on the "Naval Dry-docks of the United States," (by the Engineer in Chief of the Navy) for the use of the members of the present Congress, the libraries of the different States and Territories, the libraries of the departments, bureaus, and navy-yards of the United States Government, and for international exchange.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a point of order. That amendment is not to carry out any existing law, and it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair considers it out of order.

Mr. STANTON. This publication is a very valuable one, and necessary to the useful and enlightened discharge of the duties of the offices of some of the departments of the Government. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. McCORKLE offered the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized to pay to the Navy commissioners, for expenses incurred while actually on duty in Oregon and California, to wit: from the first day of April, 1849, to the twenty-seventh day of November, 1850, double the pay of a commander in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. DUNHAM. I submit that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, offered the following amendment:

Be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they hereby are, authorized and directed to allow to the officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the United States Navy, who served in the Pacific ocean, on the coast of California and of Mexico, during the late war with Mexico and since that time, such additional compensation as shall be proportional to the extra compensation which has been paid or allowed to the officers and soldiers of the Army, who served on the same coast during the same period.

Mr. DUNHAM. I raise the same point of order as to this amendment that I did to the preceding one.

Mr. STANTON. I desire simply to say, that precisely such a provision as this was in the Army bill; and it is only making the appropriation for the Navy conform to that of the Army; and certainly this ought not to be ruled out of order. Upon what principle is it that the Committee of Ways and Means can report a provision in the Army bill of that sort in order, and when we propose to make the Navy bill conform precisely with it, it is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not to decide upon the consistency of the course of the committee. I understand that an amendment of that sort was offered by the Committee of Ways and Means to the Army bill. The Chair supposes that no objection was made to it. The Chair thinks several amendments were proposed by that committee to the Army bill, which were not objected to.

Mr. STANTON. Then there ought to be no objection to this. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question now being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" It was put, and there were, upon a division—ayes 69, noes not counted.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. GAYLORD offered the following amendment:

That the sum of $18,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States to send a Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, to inquire into the expediency of instituting negotiations for the acquisition of those Islands by the United States.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I raise a question of order upon that amendment.

Mr. GAYLORD. It is perfectly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment out of order.

Mr. GAYLORD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SUTHERLAND offered the following amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the officers and men who served in the "Arctic Expedition in search of Sir John Franklin," shall have the same extra compensation paid to them, as was by law paid to the officers and men who served in the "Exploring Expedition."

Mr. CARTTER. I object to the amendment. It is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is not in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I appeal from the decision.

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. RIDDLE offered the following amendment:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the officers of the medical and pay departments of the Navy shall hereafter enjoy the same rank as officers of similar grades in the Army have had assigned them by law.

Mr. HIBBARD. I raise a question of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BOWNE offered the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to appoint commanders in the Navy, as well as captains, for chiefs of bureaus, of navy-yards, and docks, and of ordnance and hydrography, and of construction, equipment, and repairs.

Mr. HIBBARD. I object to the amendment that it is not in order.

Mr. BOWNE. I merely wish to say that it proposes a reform measure, about which we talk a great deal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. BOWNE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STUART. I hope the amendment may be read before the question is taken on the appeal.

The amendment was then again read, as above inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment conflicts with the 81st rule.

Mr. STUART. I call for the reading of that rule.

Several Voices. I object! I object!

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was disagreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 50, noes 63.

Mr. BOWNE. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say to the committee, that there are about fifty captains in the Navy from whom these heads of bureaus can be selected. There are about one hundred and fifty commanders. I will not pretend to a close accuracy of figures; but I have been informed the number of commanders is one hundred and fifty. My amendment will increase the number from which the heads of bureaus are selected. These commanders are the most active and efficient officers of the Navy. If my friend from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] really wants to see the Navy always ready for service—good service—let him take these commanders, who will have to live to the age of Methuselah before becoming captains, and give them the management of these bureaus. If that be done, a different aspect of affairs will be presented.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will introduce the word "civilian" before the word "commanders," I believe that he will do much to strengthen his amendment.

Mr. BOWNE declined modifying his amendment.

The question was then taken, and the amendment of Mr. BOWNE was agreed to.

Mr. STANLY. I submit the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill, as an additional section:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to cause a survey to be made of the coasts of navigation in and from Behring's Straits, and such parts of the China and Java seas, and Straits of Gaspar, as vessels employed in the whale fishery and China trade usually navigate; and to provide a screw-steamer and two small vessels, suitable for the purpose, to be officered and manned, and equipped from the Navy. And the sum of $120,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of fitting out these vessels: Provided, That the whole expense of fitting out these vessels shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated, and that the expedition shall be confined to a survey for nautical and commercial purposes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think, Mr. Chairman, an amendment resting upon the same principle, if not covering the same substance, was ruled out of order, a day or two ago, to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the fact; a similar amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. STANLY. All amendments cover the same substance, because they cover the ocean.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. GOODENOW. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. FICKLIN) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 244, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th of June, 1853, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be voted upon in mass, excepting those upon which a separate vote may be desired by any gentleman.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole were then read by the Clerk.

Those to which there was no objection were agreed to. The question was then taken on the following amendment, upon which Mr. VENABLE demanded a separate vote, and it was adopted:

After the following:

"For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations, $90,960"— add the following:

"And the Navy agent at Memphis, for the time during which he has performed or may perform the duties of purser, in addition to his own, shall be allowed and paid the annual salary of a purser on duty at navy-yards of the second class, which shall not be in addition to his commission, but in lieu thereof."

The question was next taken on the following amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. HOUSTON:

"Provided, That hereafter, whenever a vessel in ordinary shall be so much decayed that the expenditures required to repair and equip her shall be estimated to exceed two thirds of her original cost, it shall not be lawful to repair such vessel; but she shall be sold, and the proceeds applied to the construction of a new vessel in her stead. And the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be built a vessel of war, whose frame shall be of white-oak, and of the best and most approved model for sailing, to be fitted with auxiliary steam power, and to be armed exclusively with the heaviest and most destructive ordnance which, according to recent improvement, it is possible to carry with safety and serve with efficiency at sea. And to this object shall be applied, in addition to such sum as may be conveniently spared from the foregoing appropriation, any unexpended balance remaining in the Treasury to the credit of similar appropriations in former years."

Mr. DUNHAM. Is that amendment, Mr. Speaker, susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. It is a report from a Committee, and is indivisible. The amendment must be voted upon as a whole.

Mr. PHELPS. Perhaps there may be no objection to a division.

Mr. TAYLOR. I object to a division.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House—as I think this very important amendment is in danger, and as there seems to be objection to only one clause—that it be divided.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my objection to the division.

Mr. DUNHAM. I renew it.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was disagreed to—yeas 43, nays 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bowne, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Colcock, Edmundson, Florence, Gilmore, Goodnow, Hammond, Harper, Haven, Hebard, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, George G. King, McKorkle, Miner, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Polk, Price, Robbins, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scurry, Frederick F. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Sutherland, Taylor, Thurston, Ward, Washburn, and Wildrick—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bibbhausa, Bragg, Brenton, Buell, Busby, Cartter, Caskie, Chastain, Churchill, Clark, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dimmick, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Evans, Floyd, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Green, Hall, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Preston King, Landry, Mann, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Miller, Millson, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaselee, Penn, Perkins, Phelps, Reed, Robie, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Townshend, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, and Watkins—85.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POLK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There are several gentlemen who desire to speak. If we take a recess till this evening, they will be afforded an opportunity upon the next bill. I move, therefore, that the House take a recess till eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. HOUSTON. Finish this bill first, and I am satisfied.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

The motions to adjourn, and to take a recess, were then withdrawn.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the following amendment, upon which Mr. VENABLE had demanded a separate vote:

"And the Secretary of the Navy is also authorized and directed to cause to be applied, as soon as practicable, to all steam vessels belonging to the United States, the best form of condenser for supplying fresh water to marine boilers at sea; and to pay to the owner or owners thereof, such price for the right to use such condenser, as a board of the Engineer-in-Chief, and two or more chief engineers of the Navy, may designate to be the value thereof: Provided, however, That no condenser shall be so applied, unless the same shall have been practically tested at sea, and found capable of being used as a surface, as well as jet condenser."

The question was then put, and upon a division, there were—ayes 52, noes 64.

Mr. POLK demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. There were—ayes 52, noes 64; so the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. POLK. I move that the bill be laid upon the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I call for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The call comes too late. The Chair has announced that the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Have I not the right to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to?

Mr. KING, of New York. If you voted with the majority.

Mr. JOHNSON. There were no yeas and nays, and I can vote just as I please, and afterwards move a reconsideration. I am not in favor of the Navy or Department, and never have been; but if we are to do anything for that branch of the service, we could do no better than adopt this amendment. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. KING. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas voted in the minority.

The SPEAKER. There were no yeas and nays called, and that is the only form in which the fact can be fixed.

Mr. AVERETT. I move the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Mr. POLK. I renew it.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CABELL. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HENDRICKS and ROBBINS were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the motion to lay upon the table was agreed to; the tellers having reported—ayes 79, noes 44.

The question was next taken upon the following amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, and it was agreed to, viz:

"At the end of the provision for the Annapolis Naval School, add: 'To complete quarters for the students and professors at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the sum of $75,000.'"

The question recurred upon the following amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. SWEETSER:

After line one hundred and forty-nine insert:

"To secure some proper place for the burial of seamen who die in the New York hospital, $5,000."

Mr. SWEETSER. I withdraw my objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed it was read the third time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That from and after this day the House will hold an evening session, commencing at seven o'clock, to be devoted to the receiving of reports from committees: Provided, All bills and joint resolutions reported with a recommendation that they pass, be referred when reported.

Mr. CARTTER. I object.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it in order for me to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. According to former practice it is not in order. Within the last ten days—the Chair will state the rule—it is in order to move to suspend the rules. The Chair understands that Sundays, as well as other days, have been considered as embraced within the last ten days. As an original proposition, the Chair would decide differently, and that the Sabbath not being a legislative day, ought not to be considered as embraced within the rules. He decides, however, according to practice, Sundays are included within the last ten days.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move we take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I move we adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 21, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion pending to recommit House bill No. 120, "authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof."

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up one of the first bills upon the Speaker's table—a Senate bill for the relief of Margaret Farrar, whose father and mother are both dead. It is a bill which I have been endeavoring to take up for a long while. It will not occupy five minutes' time to consider it. If I can have the unanimous consent of the House to take it up, I shall be very glad.

Mr. PENN. I must object. I have several bills which have been pending for some time.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is to recommit House bill No. 120, the title of which has been read, and upon which the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. MASON. There is a little matter in which members are interested in relation to getting their books early, and during this session, and which I wish to bring up. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution requiring the Clerk to get the books of members ready before they go home. It will take but a minute or two.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to anything that interferes with the business of the morning hour. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. EDGERTON. This being private bill day, I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, if that motion be in order.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order during the business of the morning hour, which is the special order.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill "authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain to surrender their bounty lands, and to locate others 'in lieu thereof,'" was ordered to be read a third time yesterday, and a motion was made to recommit the bill, which is the question now pending; and upon that motion the previous question is demanded.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. STUART. If there is no objection, I will withdraw the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. ORR. I object.

The question was then taken upon the motion to recommit the bill; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 28, noes not counted.

So the House refused to recommit the bill.

The bill was then read the third time.

The question being, "Shall the bill pass?" it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CARLETON.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is a bill reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, being an act for the benefit of Washington Carleton, late Postmaster at Hawesville, Kentucky.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. Is not the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce in relation to the protection of the lives of passengers on board of steamboats first in order?

The SPEAKER. The bill now reported being precisely in the same condition, except that it was introduced a long time before the other, takes precedence. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. GREY. This bill is for the benefit of the late postmaster at Hawesville, Kentucky. I will briefly state the facts to the House. The postmaster at Hawesville, being indebted to the Post Office Department for postages received there, the Postmaster General sent to the postmaster at Louisville (one hundred miles from Hawesville) an order to collect the money due to the Department from the postmaster at Hawesville.

Mr. STUART. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] to allow the bill to be read again before he proceeds with his remarks.

The bill was then read, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Washington Carleton, late postmaster at Hawesville, Kentucky, out of any money appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for the use and benefit of the Post Office Department, the sum of $110 31."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded of the fact, that there was a motion pending to recommit the bill, which is first in order.

Mr. GREY. As I was about to state, the money was in the hands of this postmaster at Hawesville, and the draft was drawn upon him to pay the postmaster at Louisville. The draft was never presented to the postmaster at Hawesville. The postmaster at Louisville merely informed him by letter that he had a draft upon him, and was authorized to make immediate demand for payment of the money due from him to the Post Office Department. The postmaster at Hawesville was not bound by law, nor by precedent or common usage, to go to Louisville to pay this money, nor would the postmaster at Louisville have been allowed the expense of sending an agent down to Hawesville to collect the money from the postmaster, it being one hundred miles distant from Louisville. The postmaster at Hawesville being anxious to do his duty, and understanding that he was to send the money to Louisville by mail, which accords with the universal custom all over the country—practiced every day by postmasters of the interior offices, who receive small amounts—as soon as he received intelligence of the demand for payment, he remitted the amount to the postmaster at Louisville. The postmaster at Louisville states that he received that mail-bag sent from Hawesville, and that a package mailed at that place had been broken open; for the post-bill found in the bag showed that six letters had been mailed at Hawesville, only two of which came to hand, which two, together with the post-bill, were lying loose in the bottom of the bag. The postmaster at Hawesville then informed the Auditor of the Post Office Department of the facts, and asked that the sum which had been thus lost should be credited to his account. I refer to one of my colleagues upon this floor, who was for years the postmaster at Maysville, Kentucky, and who knows that it is a fact that money is usually sent by mail in this way by the postmasters, to pay such drafts. The Auditor replied to him that the loss was of such a character they could not allow him a credit for the $110; but he had no doubt that if he would appeal to Congress, and make a statement of the facts, he would get relief, and be authorized to have a credit upon the books of that Department to that amount. These are the facts. This man bears as high a character for honor, honesty, and unimpeachable integrity, as any man in the State of Kentucky. He is a poor man, and is not able to pay this money. The profits from his office only amount to about $105 a year, and he could not incur the expense of going up to Louisville for the purpose of depositing his money there, at the expiration of every quarter. There was no bank near him, in which he could deposit the money, and he adopted the usual course of sending the money by mail. He put the money in a letter, and he put the letter in the mail-bag, and gave the bag to the Government mail agent, and that Government mail agent swears he put that bag upon the boat. The postmaster at Louisville vouches for the robbery of that mail. The question, then, for this House to decide is, shall this honest old man, who was so anxious to do his duty, and who, in the honest discharge of that duty, sent this money in the usual mode adopted in all similar cases, lose this money, or shall the loss fall upon this mighty Government? He, Mr. Speaker, is not able to lose the money, and I hope that the House will not agree to recommit the bill, but permit it to pass.

Mr. ORR. I am surprised that the bill which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] has been advocating was reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GREY. It was, I believe, reported by the unanimous consent of the committee. I heard no objection.

Mr. ORR. My surprise is still greater. The proposition contained in the bill is simply this, that the Government shall become the insurer of every dollar's worth of value sent through the public mail.

Mr. OLDS. I believe my colleague upon the committee [Mr. GREY] is mistaken, when he says that it was unanimously reported. There are three or four bills reported from the committee, all embracing a similar principle with this one, and making the Government liable for losses of postmasters. One was where an office was robbed, and another one where an office was burned. I have opposed the whole of them upon principle. I believe the facts are just as stated by my colleague on the committee, that there has been a loss, but I am opposed to the principle.

Mr. ORR. I am glad to hear the correction made. Of course the error was unintentional on the part of the gentleman upon my right, [Mr. GREY.] Admitting the facts to be true, and I do not, of course, question them, as they have been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, it presents such a case as may be presented from every county in every State in the Union. Is the Government to become the insurer of all the letters deposited in the post office? If this bill should pass—and I have no idea that it will—it will be the first instance where losses of this sort have been made up by Congress. I move, therefore, to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. ROBBINS, upon that motion, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call the yeas and nays upon the question.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays cannot be ordered upon a bill, when there is no quorum voting.

Mr. ORR. I hope there will be a recount.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that by unanimous consent there may be a recount.

There being no objection, the tellers resumed their places, and a recount being had, there were—ayes 70, noes 42; still no quorum voting.

Mr. ORR. I move that there be a call of the House, and I hope it will be carried through and let us see who are absent.

The question was then taken; and it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon laying the bill upon the table.

Mr. GREY. I hope that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] will withdraw his motion to allow me to make further explanation.

Mr. ORR. As the gentleman has appealed to me, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. GREY. I return my acknowledgments to the gentleman for his courtesy, and, Mr. Speaker, I will say I am convinced, if the facts in relation to this matter were fairly understood by the House, that there is not a man upon the floor who would not say that this was a claim deserving the favorable action of the House. Now, here is an order sent to the postmaster at Louisville to collect the money from the postmaster at Hawesville. The postmaster at Louisville writes that he has the draft, but he does not present it. If the postmaster at Hawesville had waited until the draft had been presented at his office, he would have sustained no loss. But if he had not paid by letter, the postmaster at Louisville would not have been authorized to have sent to him for it, by paying the expenses of an agent to go in person and collect the money; nor would the postmaster at Hawesville have been authorized to pay an agent to carry the money to Louisville to the postmaster there. What should he have done? Should the expense of sending the money to Louisville fall upon that postmaster there, or should he add the expense of sending it to the account of the postmaster at Hawesville and ask him to pay it out of his pocket? The draft was never presented, but when the postmaster at Hawesville received intelligence that the draft was in the hands of the postmaster at Louisville, he sent the money by mail according to the common usage in such cases. I appeal to my colleague from Maysville, [Mr. STANTON,] who has been postmaster, to know what has been the custom with postmasters similarly situated?

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. My colleague is right in saying that I have had some experience in this matter. Some four years ago I was postmaster at Maysville. The postmaster at Cincinnati was one of the local depositaries, and he was required to collect from the postmasters in the neighborhood the balances due upon their accounts current, at the expiration of each quarter. I recollect very well at that period—I do not know what the regulations of the Department are now—that I was instructed to pay my balances over to the postmaster at Cincinnati, and I was instructed also not to incur any expenses in making a deposit at Cincinnati. If I could not send it by private hand, it must be sent through the mail, and it was my invariable custom to send the balance at the end of each quarter through the mail.

Mr. GREY. Then that was the instruction of the Postmaster General.

Mr. STANTON. That was accompanying the instructions directing me to deposit my balance at Cincinnati.

Mr. GREY. It was with a full understanding of these facts, in reply to the request of the postmaster at Hawesville, that the Auditor of the Post Office Department referred him to Congress in relation to this case. With a full knowledge of all the facts, he says to him, Apply to Congress, and if you have been guilty of no negligence, I have no doubt that Congress will give you relief.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman, to see if I understood the facts correctly. As I understand, the postmaster at Hawesville sent through the mail, bank notes for the balance for which he was indebted to the Post Office Department. Am I right in that?

Mr. GREY. The postmaster at Hawesville, when he got the letter, changed his silver for two fifty and one ten dollar note.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to ask the gentleman further, that the fifteenth section of the Independent Treasury law may be read, by which it will appear that this exchange of the funds of the Government by the postmaster at Hawesville for bank paper is a felony, for which he might be prosecuted, indicted, and convicted.

Mr. GREY. Then, Mr. Speaker, two thirds of the postmasters throughout the United States occupy the same criminal and felonious position. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS. I hope this Congress are not going to disobey the law.

Mr. GREY. I will say this: if we had a law passed by which relief could be afforded, the claimant here would seek relief in the courts of the country. But this is a case which we are called upon to decide by a regard to the peculiar circumstances attending it, sitting here as a court of equity, as we now are. I stand here ready to declare a precedent and to make a law that shall do justice to all honest and worthy men, when the strict and rigid construction of the general laws cannot afford merited and just relief. I know this claimant personally. I know he is poor and with a large family, and that he has done his duty faithfully, and acted honestly, and from the purest motives.

Mr. FOWLER. Will my colleague upon the committee allow me for a moment? I wish merely to say, in addition to what my colleague upon the committee has said, that in examining and testing this case we took into account the fact that the mail is the carrier of the Government, and that the money was lost while in the hands of the Government. I hope that my colleague will bring out that fact fully.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Allow me to ask whether you mean to establish the principle that all losses by the mail are at the charge of the Government?

Mr. FOWLER. That is for Congress to decide.

Mr. GREY. I wish this case to stand upon the particular circumstances attending it.

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that in this case the Government was carrying the money for itself.

Mr. GREY. I do not understand the committee—I do not understand myself as intending to claim that the General Government should be liable for all the losses sustained in the mail. It is shown that this man put the money in the letter; that he put the letter in the mail bag, and gave the mail bag to the Government agent to take it on board the boat. The postmaster at Louisville testifies to the fact that the mail bag had been broken open before it came to him.

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman having given me the floor for a moment, I wish to make a statement in relation to this matter. I am opposed to the passage of this bill, not but what I believe that the postmaster has honestly lost the money—and I am satisfied that there has been sufficient proof adduced before the committee to leave no doubt upon the mind of any man that the postmaster had lost the money—but I can see no difference at all between the case of a postmaster and any other individual who sends his money through the mail. Now, it is a mistake, and there is no proof in this case, that this man was required to send the money by mail.

Mr. GREY. The proof is, that the postmaster at Louisville said in his letter that he was authorized to request immediate payment.

Mr. OLDS. That is true; he was notified that the postmaster at Louisville had a draft upon him for $110, and that he was required to make "immediate payment." So far all is correct. But under your independent Treasury law, he had no right to convert his money into bank notes; and if the postmaster at Louisville had this draft for collection, the Government, as a matter of course, were bound to pay his expenses in collecting this draft, if he had to make a journey after it.

Mr. GREY. I will ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads if such claims were ever allowed?

Mr. OLDS. The principle of law is just the same in this case as in any other. The notifying this postmaster that he had a draft upon him was not a demand for that draft. The draft must be presented to him for payment, and he could not pay it unless it was presented to him at his office.

Mr. GREY. I will ask the gentleman one question. Does he not know that it is a universal fact, when the Postmaster General sends to any postmaster in any State of this Union a draft to collect money from postmasters which has been received by them, that the postmaster to whom the draft was sent sends it back to the Post Office Department unless the payee sends or pays it at the office of the postmaster who holds the draft?

Mr. OLDS. I have no such knowledge at all. I do not suppose that the postmaster at Louisville had any right to report this matter, until he had a legal demand made upon him for the money at his place of business; and if he was an agent of the Government for the collection of this money, the Government is bound to pay the money. If the postmaster undertook to send the money by mail, he must take his chance, as any business man in the community would have to do. There is no difference in this case. There are other cases before our committee, which are somewhat analogous. We have one case where the committee have been ordered to report a bill—and I believe that I was the only dissenting member on that committee—in which the postmaster had kept the money in his office until it had accumulated to $800. A robbery was committed upon his office. There was positive proof that he had been robbed and had lost the money, and the committee ordered the bill to be reported, to make the Government underwrite for the postmaster, who had left his money in his office and lost it.

Now, there is a principle involved in this case. Shall the Government underwrite for the faithful discharge of the duties of a public officer? Shall they become security for him? It is an inducement held out to postmasters all over the country, to suffer frauds to be committed, and to connive at frauds, and then to come before Congress and demand restitution.

I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to make a speech. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, who has propounded this matter to us, whether he is satisfied with the proof that the money was deposited in the mail by the postmaster who asks compensation?

Mr. GREY. The chairman of the committee admitted that there was positive proof that the money had been actually deposited in the mail by the postmaster now asking for justice from this Congress.

Mr. OLDS. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I merely wish to say, whatever may be the law—

Mr. STUART. (in his seat.) There is a motion pending to lay the bill upon the table. It was made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS;] but the Chair was occupied, and did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. Was the motion made before the gentleman took his seat?

Mr. OLDS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear it, and therefore it is not a motion.

Mr. OLDS. I made the motion again afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan when he addresses the Chair will rise.

Mr. STUART. I merely stated that the Chair was occupied at the time, and did not hear the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair receives the rebuke in all kindness, but would rather receive it from the gentleman standing than sitting.

Mr. STUART. Will the Chair allow me to state that I made the suggestion with the most perfect respect to the Chair?

Mr. CHANDLER. I merely wish to remark, that if this were a case clearly sustained by the existing law, it would not come here to ask our legislation upon it; but it is one that appeals to our sense of right.

Mr. OLDS. (interrupting.) Does the Chair entertain my motion to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not, because he did not hear it.

Mr. OLDS. I made it twice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was saying, sir, that this is a case that clearly appeals to our sense of right and justice; not legally, perhaps. If this person had deposited his money in Adams & Co.'s express office below here, and Adams & Co. had lost the money, as the mail lost the money, they would have been responsible to the person who deposited it, or the person who was to receive it, for the full amount. Now I know that the Government, although it takes upon itself to be a common carrier, does not regulate its conduct by the common laws which it prescribes for common carriers, and if I send money to you through the mail and it is lost, even though I can show that it was deposited, I cannot compel the Department to repay it. But if, in the case of common carriers like Adams & Co., they are compelled to do it, then, a fortiori, if Adams & Co., besides being carriers, are themselves to be the receivers of money or carriers of their own, it appears to me that not only they would be doubly bound, but that we would be singly bound in right to pay that which we undertook to carry for another person on deposit, but really for ourselves. It is a case that appeals, I think, to our sense of right.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to ask a question. I want to act understandingly in this matter; and I do not wish to set a bad precedent, if I know it. Let me suppose a case. Suppose here is a contractor with the Government; and after the contractor has carried the mail, say, for a quarter at Washington, they make out a draft, or remit money at some point to the contractor in payment of his contract. Suppose while the draft or money is in transitu from the Government making payment of the money to the contractor, the money or draft is lost: who will bear the loss of the draft or money in that instance—the contractor or the Government? The Government remits the money at its own risk; and if the contractor does not receive it, of course the Government is bound to pay it. Well, then, vice versa, suppose the contractor or postmaster falls in debt to the Government, and remits the money, must not he take the risk of the mail on the one hand, as the Government does upon the other? If we pass a bill of this sort, it will establish a principle that we become responsible for all the money lost in the mail, and there will be no end to this thing. The postmasters all over the country will have remitted their money, and will apply to Congress for payment; and there is no telling to what extent frauds will be the result.

Individuals should be placed upon the same footing in making payments to the Government as the government is in making payments to individuals.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will simply reply to the question of the gentleman, that in this case he overlooks the fact, which he stated himself, that the Government in both cases undertakes to be carriers, and is paid for carrying. It is different if I should send the money to you. If the Government sends the money to me, and undertakes to carry it to me, it must take the risk of it. That is the case presented here. I do not wish to argue a case, of course, not sustained by any existing law, but one that demands our legislation.

I renew the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise for the purpose of moving that the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask the gentleman, and the House, to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during this fiscal year, and bring it into the House and pass it. It will not take half an hour to dispose of it.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to inquire, if the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, will they go to the consideration of private bills?

The SPEAKER. Private bills alone, this being private bill day.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I hope that the House will agree to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. Edgerton's motion, and it was agreed to.

GASTON AND RALEIGH RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. There is a pending question to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad was laid upon the table yesterday. It can be considered now or hereafter.

Mr. STUART. I propose to have it at once disposed of, and I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. VENABLE demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. STANLY. What is the question we are about to vote upon?

The SPEAKER. On yesterday the House, by a vote, laid the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad bill upon the table. A motion was made to reconsider that vote, and a motion is now made to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, which is the pending question, and upon that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the gentleman who represents the district through which this line runs, and in which he is much interested, is not in the House; and that being the case, I hope the House will agree to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Post Office appropriation bill. It will not occupy half an hour.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the motion to lay upon the table is equally a privileged motion as the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and being first made, it must be first acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair concurs in the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Michigan, that the motion to lay upon the table is a privileged motion, and being first put, must be first acted upon by the House. The gentleman from Alabama proposes, inasmuch as some gentleman who is much interested in this bill is not in the city or in the Hall, that the consideration of the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider, be postponed, which can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I object.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STUART's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 72—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bennett, Bibbhaus, John H. Boyd, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chapman, Clark, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodenow, Green, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Henn, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Knritz, Mann, Martin, McLanahan, McNair, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Newton, Andrew Parker, Perkins, Robbins, Robie, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Thurston, Townsend, Tuck, Walbridge, Washburn, Wells, and Wildrick—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Barrere, Beale, Bocoek, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Caldwell, Caskie, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Dockery, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Fitch, Gentry, Goodrich, Hall, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hebard, Hendricks, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Landry, Mace, McQueen, Miller, Millson, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Porter, Powell, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham F. Stephens, St. Martin, Strother, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, and Alexander White—72.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to test the sense of the House, whether they will go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up one of the appropriation bills, or not. I therefore move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. How many appropriation bills are there behind?

Mr. HOUSTON. Only three—the Post Office bill, the steam-mail service bill, and the fortification bill. I wish to take up the Post Office appropriation bill. It will not take long to dispose of it.

Mr. HAMILTON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HAMILTON and MOLONY were appointed.

The question was then put upon Mr. Houston's motion, and the tellers reported 74 in the affirmative. A further count not being insisted on, the motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to take up House bill No. 241, "making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1853."

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly taken up for consideration.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is a very short bill, and I am anxious that a portion of to-day shall be devoted to the Private Calendar. If the committee will consent to act upon the bill without any general debate, I am satisfied; but if any general debate is to spring up, I shall move that the committee rise, and ask the House to close the debate upon it. I now ask that the bill may be read.

The bill was read through.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston.] I have taken up very little of the time of the House this session, but I want to make a few remarks with reference to a bill which may come up, and upon which I may be unable to get an opportunity to say anything. I do not wish to occupy much time, but I wish to make a few observations to the committee, of a general nature.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman wants only fifteen or twenty minutes, I am willing to close the debate in that time.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object to any such arrangement.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor. Does he yield it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand the gentleman as yielding it to me.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall propose to go into the House, and close the debate, letting the House exercise its discretion as to the time that shall be allowed.

Mr. CARTER. I suppose the House will exercise its discretion any way.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will yield me the floor. I merely want to make a few random observations to the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will yield the gentleman the floor for a portion of my time.

Mr. CLINGMAN referred to the defeat of the bill for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company, and remarked that when that bill was first under consideration he thought it was likely to pass easily, and it would have done so at that time; but since then there had been adverse influences operating against that and all similar measures. There was a certain iron interest in the country which had its representatives here every session, and whose delegates came on here about that time, and remained here for weeks. These delegates succeeded in creating such a prejudice in the minds of many members—he would say prejudice, because, if gentlemen were as well informed in relation to the purposes and designs of these persons as he was, they would have produced no effect upon their minds—that they induced them to vote against the measure to which he had alluded.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. All I have to say is, that, so far from operating against this railroad, unfortunately the delegation of which the gentleman speaks, by what I deem an unwise contract, succeeded in getting passed through this House, a bill giving 3,000,000 of acres of the public lands to the Missouri railroad. Without these outsiders, that bill stood no chance.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman has made a reflection upon certain members of the House, and I desire to know who they are. He says a contract was made.

Mr. CLINGMAN insisted on his right to the floor, and refused to yield to any more interruptions.

He thought it was very likely that the delegation to which he had alluded did succeed in passing the Missouri bill. Their object was to obtain the votes of western men to impose high taxes upon the country for the benefit of the iron interest, and they very probably pushed through the Missouri bill, expecting a return for it. They did not, however, get that return, and he was glad of it. Now, they were not satisfied with having the community taxed for their benefit; they were not satisfied with the tax of thirty per cent. upon farmers and other individuals for their own benefit, but they had grown so insolent that they were not willing to extend the time of payment of duties upon iron rails imported for railroad use three or four years. Pennsylvania insisted that this tax should be paid without delay.

He hoped that they might yet be able to get up the bill exempting railroad iron from duty. And in this connection he wished to remind western gentlemen of the fact, that prior to 1842 not one cent of duty was charged upon railroad iron. It was during this time that the old States began their system of railroads; but many of the new States did not begin their system until after the act of 1842 was passed, which imposed a heavy duty of $25 per ton upon railroad iron, which fell very oppressively upon the new States in the west and southwest. It oppressed them and kept them down. The eastern and northeastern States had their railroads made when iron was free of duty, and he now proposed to put the new States upon the same footing with the old States, about which a great hue and cry was made.

He then gave his views at length upon this question, arguing earnestly in favor of a repeal of duties imposed upon railroad iron, and showing from authentic statistics that whilst labor in manufactures in his State, and in several other southern States, was paid at a rate ranging from 40 to 55 cents per day, labor in the manufactures of iron in Pennsylvania received $1 06 per day. He was opposed to labor in his country being taxed to give a bonus to the manufacturers of iron.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield me the floor for a short time?

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. EVANS. I am opposed to that motion unless a reply will be allowed to the speech of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HENN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and CARTER were appointed.

The question was taken, and the motion to rise was agreed to, the tellers having reported—ayes 63, noes 58.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. STUART) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly Housebill No. 241, making appropriations for the Post Office service for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the usual resolution that debate in the Committee of the Whole shall be terminated on the Post Office appropriation bill at two o'clock this day.

Mr. STANLY. I trust the gentleman will say three o'clock.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will modify my amendment, so that it will provide debate shall close at half past two o'clock, and call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the vote by which the resolution was just passed be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, leave was granted for the withdrawal of the petition and papers of Eliza Reeves, that they be referred to the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is the consideration of House bill No. 211, making appropriations for expenditures in the Post Office Department.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. EVANS then took the floor, and addressed the committee in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] upon the subject of the tariff; and pointing out the reasons why the labor employed in the manufacture of iron is paid higher than that employed in the manufacture of cotton. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read through by paragraphs, and each paragraph will be open for amendment as it is read.

Mr. FOWLER, under instruction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, offered the following amendment, viz:

In the fortieth line, after the words "dollars and cents," insert "also $2,500, out of which the Postmaster General is directed to pay $1,666 66 to the late Assistant Postmaster General, for his services performed under the direction of the Postmaster General, subsequent to the 1st of April, 1851, when his resignation took effect, in the organization of a mail service in California, approved by the joint resolution to legalize certain contracts for the transportation of the mails in Oregon and California, approved January 13, 1852, and the residue, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be applied to settle and pay his expenses."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to submit a question of order. At the time this person was sent out upon that business, there was no law authorizing such a mission. Such authority was asked for, and Congress positively refused to give it. The Postmaster General, therefore, sent him without authority of law.

Mr. FOWLER. I will say in connection with what the gentleman from Tennessee has said, that Congress has since legalized this mission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee. He thinks the appropriation is now authorized by law, and will receive the amendment.

Mr. JONES. It was without any authority of law whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The service has, however, the Chair understands, been recognized by Congress.

Mr. FOWLER. Allow me to state, that after the resignation of the Assistant Postmaster General, he was deputed to go to California, to organize a mail service there. This was done according to directions, and he returned. After his return, Congress, by the joint action of the two Houses, sanctioned the contracts he had made. This amount is merely designed to pay for his services and his expenses during his mission. It is only $2,500. I will merely add, that the Postmaster General has presented a letter upon this subject, which I have before me, and which will be read, if necessary; but I do not suppose it is necessary. I will add, further, that I think the subsequent action of Congress has furnished sufficient authority for the appropriation; and as this gentleman has performed the service, and organized the mail service in California, is it not reasonable that we should pay him for his services, and pay his expenses? I think, if gentlemen will look at the facts, they will not hesitate for a moment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman state how long Mr. Hobbie was gone?

Mr. FOWLER. About four months.

Mr. HOUSTON. He was out on that mission four months; and he was for a month or two of that time drawing his salary.

Mr. FOWLER. He was first, I think, sent to Havana, and then to Panama; and while he was acting upon the business of the Department at those two places, he was under his salary. His resignation did not take place until he reached, or very nearly reached, Panama—at the time stated in the amendment. From that time forward he claims this double salary, which, considering the nature of the services rendered, the exposures to which he was subjected, and the responsibilities of the transactions in which he was engaged, the committee were of opinion is just.

Mr. HOUSTON. How long was Mr. Hobbie out upon the whole service? It was only one trip.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not able to state precisely when he left this city, but it was before the time had expired in which he was acting under his appointment as First Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. HOUSTON. This amendment in its present form is incorrect. The very essential facts are not before the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I will ask that the letter of the Postmaster General may be read.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know the general facts. Mr. Hobbie left the Department partly because of bad health; and he did not resign until a good portion of the time during which he was absent had elapsed. During a part of the time that he was absent, he was drawing his salary here—for how much of that time I do not know.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask the gentleman to allow the letter of the Postmaster General to be read.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is this $1,600 precisely double the sum he was receiving as Assistant Postmaster General?

Mr. FOWLER. Precisely double. His salary was $2,500 a year, and he was in that service one third of a year.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is this recommendation from the Post Office Committee?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. Was there evidence before the committee showing precisely what his expenses were?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. Why is the matter left indefinite as to his expenses?

Mr. FOWLER. The amendment proposes $2,500. His salary consumes some sixteen or seventeen hundred of that. His expenses were between $600 and $700, which will consume the whole sum.

Mr. HOUSTON. The sum is not much. The principle involved is much more important than the money; and, in my opinion, if the expenses in this instance were footed up on the scale of liberality usual with the Government, his salary while here ought to be enough.

Mr. DUNHAM. Another fact. Those who were here during the last Congress will recollect that a resolution was offered in this House to authorize this very thing to be done, and it was voted down; and then, in spite of the express opinions of the House, this man was sent out upon this mission.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the fact, that if the last Congress voted this proposition down, this Congress has voted it up? They have sanctioned the services.

Mr. DUNHAM. They have simply done this: He went out there, and entered into certain contracts connected with his mission. Then he came back here. For the purpose of saving the services in California, we ratified those contracts, made in violation of law. We did it not as sanctioning the course of the Department, but in order to save the services in California; and I say this thing was done in the face of the action of this House, which refused to grant the authority which was then asked.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. FOWLER; and it was agreed to.

The next clause was read, as follows:

"For miscellaneous items, $95,000."

Mr. CLARK. I move to strike out that clause. There is a looseness and uncertainty about that which, it seems to me, is worthy of scrutiny. It is a pretty large appropriation. What are the items? Are they things too numerous or too small to mention? In this bill there are appropriations for wrapping-paper, for office-furniture, for blanks, for mail-bags, for locks and keys, &c. It seems to me that these are miscellaneous items, which are small by themselves. What other items are miscellaneous? Are they things which cannot be named? I should like to know what is intended to be included under this head of miscellaneous items. I am unwilling to vote for so large an appropriation as that without having some information upon the subject, and knowing what is included in it. It seems to me that it was as easy to have named these miscellaneous items, as to have named certain small items preceding them. Unless we can have some information, I hope this item will be stricken out. What is it for? That is the question. Are we to vote $90,000 without knowing anything about what it is for? For one, I am unwilling to do it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know that it is necessary to consume any time in replying to these questions. This is one of the items in all appropriation bills, and it will always necessarily be so. There are a great many contingencies attending the services of the Post Office Department in all parts of the Union, which require things to be done, which cannot be anticipated, and which cannot be specified, especially since the extension of the services of that Department in California, New Mexico, and the distant Territories, all of which are to be paid out of that item of appropriation. It is necessary that a miscellaneous item of that kind should be allowed. We examined those items, as we did every contingent item in every appropriation bill. They passed under our scrutiny, and we cut them down to as small an amount as we thought would meet those contingent services.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, what item they examined under this head?

Mr. HOUSTON. We examined the receipts and expenditures of the last year, and thus obtained the character of the expenditures under this head. Those receipts and expenditures, necessarily show, under the law, what every item is.

Mr. CLARK. Have they not a name, and could they not be designated?

Mr. HOUSTON. They had at least five hundred names—as many as they were objects of expenditure, and they have never been brought into this bill separately.

This item has always been included in this bill, since the first one was passed.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. CLARK, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I offer another amendment. I propose to reduce the sum to $20,000.

The gentleman from Alabama says that there were at least five hundred items, to which an appropriation of this kind is applicable, and that they had names. Now, it seems to me that we might have had some intimation given to us as to what this appropriation is for, and if there are really five hundred of them, could not we have had five of them specified. My Lord Coke says there is something in an "&c.," as in this, that, and the other, "&c." But there is not even an "&c." to this, not even a starting point for the "&c." We know nothing of what it is. I hope the amount will be reduced to $20,000.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER offered the following amendment:

Provided, That all locks, keys, stamps, and paper purchased for the Post Office Department, be of the manufacture of this country.

Mr. C. said: I wish, Mr. Chairman, to make a remark upon the principle involved in that amendment. I wish to extend those remarks, but I see how impatient—and justly, in my opinion—is the honorable gentleman who has this bill particularly in charge. I should like to reply to some of the errors of the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN;] and if I do not now, I shall be compelled, upon some other appropriation bill, to spend an hour or two upon it. If the committee will allow me to present and publish in another form—through the press—I will not now occupy their time, nor trespass upon their patience.

[Several Voices. "Very well!" "Very well!" and "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object to publishing speeches not delivered here, unless it appears that the speech has not been delivered. The reason is this: there are a great many things said in these speeches, which no one has an opportunity of answering, and hence they appear in our published debates as unanswered.

Mr. CHANDLER. If there is no objection, I will withdraw my amendment.

No objection was made, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the bill be laid aside, with instructions that it be reported to the House, in order that we may take up House bill No. 212—the light-house bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. The resolution closing debate upon this bill requires us to report it to the House.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DUNCAN,] that under the order made by the House, it will be necessary for the committee to rise and report this bill to the House, unless the committee unanimously consent to a different course. The Chair somewhat doubts whether it could be done even by unanimous consent, but he would entertain the motion.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I object. The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. STUART) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 241, making appropriation for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, and to ask the concurrence of the House therein.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. FOWLER, (which will be found in another column,) and it was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed according to order, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FOWLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MICHIGAN SALT SPRING LANDS.

Mr. STUART. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 30, entitled "An act to confirm to the State of Michigan certain lands selected for saline purposes," to which I have called attention several times before. It is for the correction of an error which occurred in the General Land Office of the United States, from which we have suffered since 1836. The bill consists of only one section.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up.

The Clerk read it through.

Mr. STUART. I desire simply to state, that this does not propose to change the land originally selected by the State of Michigan. That original selection underwent an error in the General Land Office, in consequence of an act of the clerk in carrying down the towns and ranges. It merely proposes to confirm to the State the land originally selected; nothing more. I call for the previous question.

Mr. HENN. I have examined this subject, and it is all right.

Mr. EDGERTON. I will ask the gentleman to allow me to attach an amendment to the bill for a similar case in the State of Ohio?

Mr. STUART. If the gentleman's amendment be attached, it would be necessary to send the bill back to the Senate, and then the bill would probably be lost.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and according to order, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. STUART. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCQUEEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table "the bill for the relief of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad Company," and refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly referred.

Mr. ALLISON. There is upon the Speaker's table a bill which has passed the Senate for the relief of two children of an officer of the Army who died recently. I trust that there will be no objection to its being taken up and acted upon.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object. I have got half a dozen such cases. The Committee on Claims have got fifty of them, and I will guaranty every one of them. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is Senate bill No. 67, for the relief J. A. McGaw, of New York, which was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and according to order read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next bill which came up for consideration was Senate bill No. 66, entitled "An act for the relief of William P. Greene," which was also reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and, according to order was read the third time and passed.

Mr. KING, of Rhode Island. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next bill which came up was House bill No. 152, for the relief of Patrick Gass, granting three hundred and twenty acres of land.

Mr. COBB. That bill should not pass. I ask the reading of the report accompanying it, as my speech why it should be rejected:

"The petitioner asks an appropriation of three hundred and twenty acres of land, to be located by him anywhere on the public domain of the United States, where the same could be located by any one entitled to bounty land. This is the amount of land granted by Government to the actual settlers in Oregon, and the petitioner predicates the equity of his claim to this bounty on the just and reasonable ground that he was one of the original explorers of that distant country; that his bravery, zeal, and devotion aided materially in the discovery of the Oregon river and its principal tributaries, under Lewis and Clark.

"The petitioner entered the service of his country in 1799, remained in its military service till 1803, when he volunteered in the service of Lewis and Clark, and served faithfully throughout their long and perilous journey.

"In 1812 he enlisted in the Army of the United States, under General Bissell, and served with fidelity to the end of the war, losing an eye at the battle of Lundy's Lane.

"The Government is now giving to the actual settlers in Oregon three hundred and twenty acres of land. The donation of this quantity of land to actual settlers is a ready means to induce population, and convert the wilderness into blooming and cultivated States; and while the committee, under the circumstances and position of the Oregon Territory, readily recognize the propriety and justness of such an application of the lands in that distant and unprotected quarter, they also think that something may be due for the remnant of that small band who accompanied Lewis and Clark in their long, perilous, and laborious expedition. This expedition was undertaken under the direction of Government; the officers and the men were under its command; their toilsome services were for the benefit of the country at large, and their discoveries constitute, perhaps, the true and legitimate basis, next to proximity, of our title to that country. The petitioner not only fought in defense of his country, but his labors contributed to the extension of its borders and the possession of the magnificent and important valleys on the Pacific slope.

"He was appointed sergeant by Lewis and Clark, and kept a daily journal of the transactions of the corps of exploration, and a full and homely, yet graphic description of the country through which they passed. This journal spoke with its native and forcible simplicity to the people of the West, long before the voluminous and expensive work of Lewis and Clark was published, and it contributed much to the feeling and the fact that made Oregon a part of the whole country.

"Mr. Gass, it is believed, is the only survivor of that expedition who returned with it; he has otherwise faithfully served his country; he is too old and helpless, and with a numerous family of small children, to go to Oregon for the land that his boldness discovered and his valor defended; and he thinks, and the committee concur with him, that the Government should compensate him out of its public lands for the service he rendered it in discovering and settling the title to that immense country which is now bestowed without price on the actual settler, and that the original explorer encountered more hardship, danger, and privation in serving his country than the settler does in serving himself. The committee report the accompanying bill for his relief."

Mr. SACKETT. I perceive, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has not the usual words of limitation to enter upon lands at the minimum price. Nor is he required to locate in Oregon, the very foundation for his claim. I suggest that the gentleman move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection, if that be the pleasure of the House.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. COBB. I then move that the bill be laid upon the table.

The question was put, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 45—

Mr. HART demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CURTIS and HENDRICKS were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 39; no quorum.

Mr. ORR. We have been without a quorum all day. I move the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned till Monday at 11 o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of James W. Turner and 18 others, praying the removal of the land office from Augusta to Paulding, Mississippi.

Also, the petition of S. M. Howse and 124 others, making the same prayer.

By Mr. CHANDLER: Several memorials, signed by J. Rundle Smith, J. R. Ingersoll, and many other citizens of Philadelphia, asking Congress to pass the bill recently reported by the Hon. E. STANLEY, relative to the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money.

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: Memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, asking the passage of a bill introduced by Mr. STANLEY, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money directed to be made with said States by act approved June 23d, 1836.

By Mr. FULLER, of Maine: The memorial of Isaac T. Cole and other citizens of Machiasport, in the county of Washington, Maine, praying Congress to take prompt and efficient measures for the protection of the right to the American fisheries.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 21, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. HUNTER. I must ask the Senate this morning to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic bill in the morning hour. I submit that motion.

Mr. FISH. I would appeal to the honorable Senator from Virginia to withdraw the motion, or to allow it to be modified so as to enable me to submit a motion to take up the bill from the House of Representatives, commonly known as Bennett's land distribution bill. I gave notice of my intention to call it up yesterday morning, but I abstained from an unwillingness to interfere with the civil and diplomatic bill. I ask the Senator to allow me to submit that motion, for the purpose of taking the sense of the Senate on the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I have had a great many applications of that kind, and I would be very glad to yield to them all if I could, but I cannot do it. A sense of duty constrains me to insist upon my motion.

THE FLORIDA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise to what I believe is a question of privilege. The select committee appointed to consider the petition of the Hon. David L. Yulee, claiming to have been elected a Senator from the State of Florida, to which the subject was referred some months ago, have directed me to make a report. The report ought to have been made earlier, but the committee have been so engaged, that they were not able to report before this morning. I am prepared to present the report, in order that it may be printed, and laid before Senators, so as to be acted upon during the next week.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive it. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it a question of privilege?

The PRESIDENT. It involves the right of a Senator to his seat, and therefore the Chair considers it a question of privilege which authorizes him to receive the report.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I will present the report of the committee, which concludes with the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY was duly elected a member of the Senate of the United States from the 3d day of March, 1851."

I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. There are various documents in the case—the petition, the argument of counsel on the one side, and the argument of one of the gentlemen himself on the other side, and various other documents that have been referred to the committee. I move to print them, and to refer the motion to the Committee on Printing. They will make a book of three or four hundred pages. Of course they could not be printed within the next week. I therefore move that the motion to print them be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest that the order for printing these papers might as well be made without reference to the committee.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator who made the motion himself asks that it should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion of Mr. HUNTER was agreed to, and the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending on the 30th day of June, 1853, and for other purposes," the pending question being upon the amendment of the Committee on Finance to increase the appropriation "for stationery, printing, binding, furniture, and repairs, subscription to newspapers, introducing gas into Patent Office, fuel, and other contingencies," in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, from $5,000 to $9,485.

Mr. HUNTER. That amendment is in accordance with the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert among the appropriations for contingencies "in the office of the Secretary of the Interior" the following:

"For Library books and maps, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For compensation of one additional clerk in the office of the Commissary General of Subsistence, $1,000."

Mr. HUNTER. This item is in accordance with estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation "for blank books, binding, stationery, and labor," for the Bureau of Topographical Engineers, from $750 to $1,250.

Mr. HUNTER. This is in accordance with estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For compensation for one additional clerk in the office of the Postmaster General, $1,000."

Mr. HUNTER. That is according to estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Post Office Department, from $10,500 to $12,500.

Mr. HUNTER. That is to raise the amount to the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation for "repair of the General Post Office building, for office furniture, glazing, white-washing, and for keeping the fire-places and furnaces in order," from $1,500 to $2,500.

Mr. HUNTER. That is in pursuance of estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add to the clause for the payment of the salaries of United States district judges the following:

"And the district judge of the northern district of California, until otherwise provided by law, shall be judge of the southern district in that State, with an additional annual compensation of $2,800, so long as he discharges the duties of both districts."

Mr. HUNTER. The explanation of this amendment is, that the salary proves insufficient. There are two judicial districts in California. One of the judges has died, and it is proposed to let one judge discharge the duties of both judgeships with this additional salary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the present salary?

Mr. GWIN. The present salary of the judge of the northern district is $3,500. The salary of the judge of the southern district is $2,800. This proposition is to give the judge of the northern district the salary and the duty of both judgeships. It does not increase the expense to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add to the clause, "for salary of the Reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, $1,300," the following words:

"For each volume published by direction of the Supreme Court."

Mr. HUNTER. It has been customary, since two volumes a year of the decisions of the Supreme Court have been published, to allow the Reporter $1,300 for each volume. The House cut down the amount to $1,300. The reporter has been directed by the Chief Justice to publish two volumes, and he has furnished, at his own expense, one hundred and fifty copies to the United States. The committee propose to continue the practice which has heretofore existed of giving him $1,300 for each volume.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation "for compensation of the district attorneys" from $8,800 to $9,000.

Mr. HUNTER. That is in pursuance of estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation "for expenses of weighing and mooring, cleansing and repairing, and supplying losses of buoys, beacons, chains, and anchors," from $45,000 to $59,057 32.

Mr. HUNTER. The original estimate was for $59,057 32; but the House cut it down. The Auditor says the amount named in the estimates is indispensable; and the Committee on Finance propose to restore the amount to the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses under the Independent-Treasury act of August 6th, 1846," from $15,000 to $16,500.

Mr. HUNTER. That item is in pursuance of estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert—

"For completing the construction of the marine hospital at San Francisco, California, and for arranging the grounds, fencing, furnishing warming apparatus, and superintendence thereof, $130,000."

Mr. HUNTER. That is in pursuance of an estimate from the Department. They say that, owing to the great expense of maintaining sick and disabled seamen, it is important that this hospital should be finished at once. The Committee on Finance were of the same opinion, and agree to the estimate of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

"For purchasing a site, and the construction of a suitable building at Wilmington, Delaware, for custom-house, post office, court-rooms, and other offices of the United States, and furnishing the same, $25,000: Provided, That the said lot and building shall be exempted from city and all other taxes whatever, by the act of the Legislature of Delaware: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall erect the said building, it shall first be his duty to procure a proper site, or lot of ground, and to make a contract, or contracts, for the erection of said building and furnishing the same, at a sum or sums which shall not in the whole exceed the sum of $25,000, inclusive of said lot, which said contract or contracts shall be secured by good and sufficient sureties, to the satisfaction of the said Secretary of the Treasury and President of the United States."

Mr. HUNTER. This is in pursuance of an estimate sent to us for the erection of a building for a custom-house, post-office, and court-room, at Wilmington, Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation "for incidental expenses of the several land offices," from $30,000 to $34,240.

Mr. HUNTER. The object is to restore the amount to the original estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to amend the clause appropriating $22,500 "for surveying private claims in California," so as to make it read:

"For surveying private claims in California, which may have been presented in good faith to the Board of Land Commissioners, $22,500: Provided, That the authority hereby conferred on the surveyor general shall apply only to such unconfirmed cases as, in the gradual extension of the lines of the public surveys, he shall find within the immediate sphere of his operations, and which he is satisfied ought to be respected and actually surveyed in advance of confirmation."

Mr. HUNTER. This is a limitation upon the clause as it came from the House. It provides that the surveyor general shall survey these private land claims which may be presented in good faith to the Board of Commissioners. The proviso is taken from a bill which was reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FELCH. I wish to inquire whether that is all the limitation which the bill alluded to contains?

Mr. HUNTER. My impression is that it is. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For completing the geological survey of the iron region of that portion of Michigan which borders on Lake Superior, $1,500."

Mr. HUNTER. That is in pursuance of an estimate. The estimate was not made originally, but it was afterwards found necessary, in order to complete this geological survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For the compensation of a clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, $1,200."

Mr. HUNTER. That is an item which the Senate, for some time past, have inserted annually, and the House have usually stricken it out. My own opinion is, that the Commissioner ought to have a clerk, for he has a great many duties to discharge.

Mr. CLARKE. I move to amend the amendment, by striking out "$1,200," and inserting "$1,000." The Committee on the District of Columbia had intended to propose an amendment, giving the Commissioner a clerk at a salary of $1,000; but they have been anticipated by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to increase the appropriation "for the purchase of manure for the public grounds" from $600 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"To complete and revise the grades in the city of Washington, and to determine the plans for the draining and sewerage thereof, $6,000; the surveys and plans to be made by the engineer now in charge of that duty, under the direction of the President of the United States."

Mr. HUNTER. A former appropriation was made for this object, which has proved to be one of the most useful appropriations ever made in the District. This is designed to continue it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"To enable the President of the United States to cause the necessary surveys, projects, and estimates to be made for determining the best means of affording the city of Washington an unfailling and abundant supply of good and wholesome water; report thereof to be made to Congress at its next session, the sum of $5,900."

Mr. HUNTER. This is according to estimate. It was thought best, as the object was one in relation to which some differences of plan existed, that it should be sent to one of the Engineer Departments for estimates and plans and surveys. This appropriation is according to the estimate from the Department for that purpose.

Mr. BRADBURY. This subject has been before the Committee on the District of Columbia; and after some examination, in consideration of the great amount of expenditure now going on in this District, the committee did not see fit to recommend any estimate of the kind. How the subject has been brought before the Committee on Finance, the chairman of that committee has already indicated. It appears to me that it would be unwise, at this time, to incur this expense. We are already expending many hundred thousand dollars here, and it is believed that whenever a survey of the kind is undertaken, it might as well be undertaken under the direction of some committee of Congress, who should have something to say in designating the various surveys that may be made. I hope the amendment may not be agreed to. I see but one other member of the Committee on the District of Columbia present—the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE]—and I think his recollection will correspond with mine.

Mr. CLARKE. The fact is as the honorable Senator from Maine has stated. This proposition is to appropriate $5,000 for a survey, and for a report upon the best means of supplying the city of Washington with water. Now, it is well known that an abundant supply of water for the city of Washington may be obtained within three or four miles of this place. The proposition to appropriate $5,000 for a survey, appears to me to be of no use. The Committee on the District of Columbia had this subject under consideration, and they did not propose, at the present time, to recommend any appropriation for the purpose. It would be very expensive, and the appropriations that are already contained in this bill for the city of Washington, exclusively of the public buildings, amount to $120,514; and there are certain amendments to the bill which are to be proposed by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, [Mr. SHIELDS,] which will swell this amount to about $200,000. It appears to me that that is enough, in fact too much, to be expended at one time. Besides, this appropriation is for a mere exploration of the ground—a mere survey—to ascertain in what manner the city of Washington can be supplied with water. It seems to me to be unnecessary at the present time. If you make the survey, it implies an intention to go on and carry out the object of supplying the city with water, no matter at what expense. The Committee on the District of Columbia have not recommended this appropriation; and, for myself, I think it is not necessary to insert it now in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it strikes me that if there is one single appropriation, which there is an imperative obligation upon Congress to make, it is this. Since I have been in the city at the present session, there have been several occurrences which have suggested its necessity to my mind. I remember that, very early in the session, I was called out in the evening by an alarm of fire at the corner of Four-and-a-half and C streets, I think. I stood there, and saw building after building burn down, without a pail-full of water to put out the fire. The fire was exhausted and stopped, merely because there was no other building within its reach which could be consumed. Subsequently to that, I was called up at midnight by a fire very near the house where I was boarding; which exhausted itself in the same way, for there was no water on hand there.

I would be perfectly willing to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "dollars" the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary," so that the Department need not feel themselves under obligation to spend the whole $5,000. If there be a place in the world where there should be some facilities afforded for obtaining water—and especially when they can be obtained as easily as they can be obtained here—it seems to me that it is at the capital of the nation. Ask, sir, any of the citizens of Boston, New York, or Philadelphia, if they would abandon their facilities for water in case of fire—which they have procured at great expense—and they would tell you that, great as has been the expenditures for that purpose, they would rather double and treble them than give up the facilities they have for putting out fire.

This city, the capital of the nation, over which we have exclusive legislation, is, I think, the worst provided with water, in case of fire, of any place that I ever saw in my life. At the same time we have, within a very short distance, at the Falls of the Potomac, the facilities of bringing in a supply of pure and wholesome water, perhaps at less expense and with greater ease than any other city of similar size in the whole United States. It never will be done until there has been an exploration and a survey made that may be laid before Congress, so that we may be enabled to determine whether the object is practicable and feasible, and for what it may be accomplished. I think that, as a matter of safety for our public buildings and our public records, we owe it to ourselves that we should inquire, at least, at what expense this may be done. The cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, have taxed themselves to the amount of millions in order to get good supplies of water; and they would double the expense rather than forego the advantages they have secured.

I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after "$5,000" the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and with that I am willing to take it. With that qualification I hope we may make this exploration; so that at another session we may, at least, have light before us to know whether the object is practicable; and if it be practicable, at what expense it can be accomplished.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I do not see any particular necessity for it. There was some difficulty in the Department in making an estimate of the precise amount with exactness; and of course I presume they will expend no more than may be necessary for the object. I do not know that I should disagree, if the Senator from Rhode Island were to desire to reduce the appropriation, if that would satisfy him. All that I desire is, to have some appropriation made to enable us to get surveys, plans, and estimates, that the Committee on the District of Columbia, at the next session, may have the means of selecting the best plan, in order to recommend it to Congress for adoption.

Various estimates were sent to us for accomplishing the object. Such is the want of water in the public Departments, that the Commissioner of Public Buildings sent in an estimate for collecting more water at the spring on the hill, from which a supply of water is furnished to the Capitol and the Departments. But, instead of expending some $40,000 or $50,000 in this way, it seemed to us better to obtain some plan which would accomplish the whole object at once.

Water is not only very necessary here for the purposes indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire, when fire occurs, but there is an actual scarcity of water now for the use of the Departments; and we know that it is becoming scarcer. Such is the demand for water in this city, that it is almost impossible—and, unless we have some more stringent laws, I may say that it is impossible—to prevent persons from tapping the pipes which conduct the water along the streets to the Departments. In case of fire, there is now on this account, a very dangerous scarcity of water. I look upon a sufficient supply of water as the very first want of this city. The best mode of obtaining it, and the most economical mode, it seemed to us, was to get a plan and surveys from the Engineer Department; upon which the Committee on the District of Columbia could pass, and from which they could select some suitable plan, and present it for our consideration at the next session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope that the amendment of the Committee on Finance will be adopted. There are some three or four projects which have been entertained upon this subject. One is to bring water from the Great Falls of the Potomac. My opinion upon that subject is, that if it be brought from those falls, by the natural law of water finding its own level, you may get a supply that will reach higher than the dome of the Capitol. Another project is to have a dam at the Little Falls, some two or three miles above Georgetown, and then, by means of force-pumps upon the plan of the Schuylkill water-works at Philadelphia, furnishing water from that point. A third plan is to obtain a supply from Rock Creek.

Now, it seems to me to be absolutely necessary that a competent engineer should go upon the ground, examine the practicability of the various plans which have been suggested, make his estimates, and give us the results of his examinations, so that Congress may act hereafter understandingly on the subject.

This city, as every gentleman must have perceived, is growing with a rapidity unparalleled in its past history. This is visible to all of us. We see new structures going up everywhere. Your census tables show a vast increase in the population of the city within the last ten years. If this goes on, as I believe it will, the present supply of water will not be sufficient for the demands, or anything like the demands for private uses, independent entirely of the public uses. Indeed, I believe there is now a deficiency in the supply of water for private uses, in which this city, and all the persons connected with the Government, its legislative and executive branches, are interested. The Government is intimately concerned in having a good supply of water here. The object of the amendment is to obtain preliminary information, and I hope that engineers may be sent out to report upon all the various plans, so that we may have some data upon which we can act discreetly and properly hereafter.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President, I do not intend to oppose this appropriation. Perhaps no gentleman here cares less than I do whether $5,000 are appropriated, or more or less. But here you have a corps of engineers. There are probably plenty of them in the city doing nothing, and you propose to appropriate $5,000 to send one of them out to make a reconnaissance and see, by proper levels, from what point the city of Washington can be best supplied with good and wholesome water. That such a supply is necessary, I admit; and I agree with the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, that it will be of great service to the city of Washington. That Senator speaks of the supply of water at Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. Have either of those cities been supplied with water by the Congress of the United States? No, sir, they have supplied themselves with water, and they force those who use it to pay a tax for the use and benefit of it. It is a regulation of their own, which I have no doubt has been a benefit to them.

Sir, I should like to have this amendment amended so as to include the city of Georgetown within its provisions. I have referred to the appropriations contained in this bill for Washington;

I have a list of them here, and they amount to something like $200,000. Yet there is not a single solitary appropriation for the city of Georgetown. Georgetown is as much within the legislative control and care of Congress, and is entitled as much to the paternal regard of this Government as the city of Washington, although the Capitol and public buildings are located here. The citizens of Georgetown have to look to the Government as much as the citizens of Washington. We have the right of exclusive legislation over both. It appears to me as if the city of Georgetown has been treated, and is about to be treated, as we sometimes hear of poor cousins and poor relations, as if they came in left-handedly from the wrong side of the blanket. I think that Georgetown is entitled to some consideration. If it be important that the city of Washington should be supplied with water in order to extinguish fires, and in order to supply the inhabitants, it is equally important to the city of Georgetown.

I do not oppose particularly this appropriation. I care nothing about it; but in my short experience here, I have noticed that whenever you make an appropriation, the whole of it will be expended and probably more will be asked for to supply deficiencies. If you now appropriate $5,000 for this object—which I can get done in the poor country from which I come from for $500—it will certainly be all expended, and the probability is that we shall be called upon for $5,000 more, and that, too, by a corps of engineers who belong to the United States, who are paid by the United States, plenty of whom have nothing to do, and might employ themselves, their time, and their instruments, in making all the surveys necessary.

If the amendment is to pass, I shall move to insert, after the word "Washington," the words "and the city of Georgetown," so as to give this remote and poor relative a little share of the advantages that may be conferred by this appropriation. If there is any reason why the houses and the homes of the citizens of Washington should be preserved from conflagration, the same reason applies with exactly the same force to the citizens of Georgetown. I make no opposition to the amendment, although I think the appropriation is too large, and perhaps in that view the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire may do very well.

Mr. MANGUM. I am not prepared to express, or to form any opinion as to the amount which should be appropriated. I understand, however, from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance that the amount proposed in the amendment will be sufficient for the object of obtaining the preliminary surveys and estimates. As to the importance of procuring a supply of water for this city, there is not a gentleman present who does not feel and know it. Where that supply is to be obtained—whether from Rock Creek, or from the Potomac—should be subjected to a proper scientific determination. It is necessary to understand whether a sufficient supply can be got at either of these points. It is also important to know what amount of expenditure will be required. When we have this information, we shall be prepared to legislate understandingly on the subject; and I feel a perfect conviction, that if we had all the necessary preliminary information to enable us to act in an intelligent manner, the Congress of the United States would, in some proper way, endeavor to procure a supply of water for this city. I shall vote for the proposition with a great deal of pleasure, and I have no objection to including Georgetown in it.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is not to include Georgetown. That amendment was suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island; but it cannot now be offered, as the question pending is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no particular objection to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I cannot see any necessity for it. We know very well that whenever we make an appropriation, it is very sure to be expended. I am not aware of an instance in which we have undertaken to make an appropriation, that the whole amount has not been expended, and in very many cases we have been afterwards asked to supply deficiencies. I therefore think that it is almost useless to make any provision to limit the expenditure, unless we reduce the amount of the appropriation. Any other provision will be ineffectual for the purpose.

Sir, I shall vote against this appropriation, not because I am prepared to say that it is too much to accomplish the object—for I do not know that it is too much, I do not know that it is even enough—but I shall vote against it upon the general ground that I do not consider it the duty of Congress to establish water-works for this or any other city. We expend an immense amount of money here every year for the purpose of improving this city. We are told that it is increasing and growing more rapidly than any other city perhaps in the Union. What improves it? What increases it? The trade of the place? The business of the city? Such business as builds up other cities? No, sir; it is the money expended by Congress in the District, and nothing else, which increases it. Remove the seat of Government, leave Washington city to depend on itself as a city, and upon the advantages of its position for commerce, trade, or business of any kind, and I apprehend six months would not elapse before grass would grow in the streets; and if a steamboat or vessel of any kind ever reached its wharf, it would be merely on a trip of curiosity or exploration, to look at what once had been the seat of Government. Immense influence is brought to bear to induce us to expend money for this city. Complaints are made that we do not take care of the city, when everybody knows that its whole prosperity, in fact its very existence, is drawn from the public Treasury.

I think it is time that some limit should be put to this. The Senator from Rhode Island has already mentioned what is about the amount proposed to be expended in other ways for this city. I do not think he has quite gone up to the real amount. I have not estimated it very precisely, but I think he has fallen much below, rather than exceeded, the amount proposed to be expended here.

Why should we undertake to make all these works for Washington more than for any other city? Other cities have made their water-works, and not called upon Congress to pay for them. Other cities have made them by taxing the property of their citizens, whose property was increased in value thereby. We are told that real estate in Washington city has increased most rapidly very lately. I have heard it said that in many portions of the city, where we have expended public money, real estate has increased two hundred per cent. within the last three years.

Mr. CLARKE. Three hundred per cent.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, will persons owning property that is paying them, in addition to rents, an increased value of two hundred or three hundred per cent. per annum come before Congress and say that it is necessary that we should go on and improve that property for them? Sir, I would ask the Senator from Illinois how much it will cost the city of Chicago to put up the water-works there? Will it not cost $200,000?

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the inquiry is directed to me, I can only state that we are now constructing water-works in Chicago, and my impression is that the contemplated cost of them for the present and the prospective wants of the city will be about $250,000.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the population of Chicago?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Forty thousand.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Arkansas, if he examines the amendment, will see that it does not bind the United States to bring water here at such an immense cost, but it is to obtain a survey and estimate of the cost of some plan. Of course it will be decided by Congress hereafter whether they will undertake the work or not upon the plan proposed. But according to any plan the United States would have to pay largely, because they will consume a very large amount of water for the public offices.

Mr. BORLAND. Then we have the city of Chicago, with a population of about 40,000, taxing themselves $250,000 to establish their water-works. I would ask the Senator from Michigan if the city of Detroit, with a population of between 25,000 and 30,000, has not expended some $200,000 or $300,000 for the erection of water-works?

Mr. CASS. That is the case.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator says that that is so. It is estimated that there is a population in the city of Washington of about 40,000. Why should they not tax themselves to make water-works for this city? I would ask the Senators from Illinois and Michigan if real estate in the cities of Chicago and Detroit has increased as much as from one hundred to three hundred per cent. per annum within the last three or four years? I apprehend not.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I must say that, with regard to increase in real estate, Chicago is far in advance of Washington or any city in this country this side of San Francisco. I have known land to be purchased at $100 an acre adjoining the city of Chicago, and to be sold at $1,500 an acre very recently.

Mr. BORLAND. Within the last three years?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. I confess I was not aware that any place had increased with such rapidity; but that does not affect the argument. If the fact had been otherwise it would have strengthened my argument.

But I put the question to the American Senate, and the American people who have to pay this money, if, when we by our appropriations already have increased the value of the property of the inhabitants of this city from one hundred to three hundred per cent. per annum, there is any propriety or any duty resting upon us to appropriate still more to increase this rapid enhancement of the value of that property? for that is the effect of it.

I know very well that opposition to anything of this sort will go for nothing. I have no idea that it can defeat any such proposition. I have no idea that a proposition to expend money in the District of Columbia will be defeated. It overrides everything. I am only surprised that the amount is so small in this case. If it had been $50,000 I should have thought that it was about in accordance with the other demands made upon us. This is the smallest appropriation, I think, that I have ever known to be proposed for the District. If it fails, it will be, in my opinion, only because it is so small.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not rise to discuss this amendment, but simply to state what may, perhaps, relieve the mind of the Senator from Arkansas from some of the objections which he appears to have to this proposition. The Committee on the District of Columbia has been engaged, as the Senator knows, with all kinds of duties; but I must say, that there is not a single item in the bill, so far as I have seen it, in regard to which that committee has been consulted. How these things have got into this bill, by what influence or authority, or on whose advice, or by whose recommendation, and on what estimates, I am at a loss to find out.

Mr. BORLAND. If my friend from Illinois will allow me, I will state that I was objecting to the general practice.

Mr. SHIELDS. I know that. I am not replying to the Senator from Arkansas alone. I only mentioned this circumstance as a sample of the way in which things go on. I should recommend that the Committee on the District of Columbia be dispensed with; and I certainly shall ask to be relieved from further service on it after this session. I have had more trouble, more labor, and more annoyance on that committee than I ever had before, in the same given time, in my life. The committee has taken great trouble to obtain information in regard to the condition of the bridges across the Potomac, and to the consideration of the various wants of the District which require immediate attention; and here we now find amendments in relation to the District coming into this bill at hap-hazard, without any consultation with them. I do not blame the Committee on Finance on that account, because I know that the amendments have been recommended to them; but it is a singular mode of legislation, and is certainly in keeping with a great deal of the legislation which is at present going on. It is not our extravagance which causes these fresh demands on the Treasury, but the want of a proper system, and a proper mode of procedure. I have been honored with the position of chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but I shall undoubtedly ask, as a great favor, to be relieved from performing the duties of that position next session.

Now, what is the point under the consideration of the Senate? It is one which the Committee on the District of Columbia have investigated; they have given it all the attention in their power, and the conclusion to which they came was not to recommend the Government to undertake the execution of this work, but to effect a survey or a reconnaissance.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the sole object of the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. The proposition contained in the amendment is correct. I do not take any exception to it. The Committee on the District of Columbia would have recommended it. We were desirous of having a correct survey or reconnaissance effected, because, if that were done, it would be easy to obtain able and competent persons to bring the water into the city; not in the usual mode of managing such matters by companies, for, as I understand, all such companies have failed in this District. It was contemplated to offer the execution of the work to a company, and compel them to carry it out under the superintendence of an officer appointed by the Government, in accordance with a plan prepared by the Government; and when any deviation from that plan was made, that the work should be stopped immediately. It was also proposed that monthly or quarterly returns should be made to the Secretary of the Interior, showing the condition of the work, and the manner of laying out the money expended. It was to be left discretionary with the Government, at any time after the work was completed, to take the work into its own hands, if necessary. We would thus insure the completion of the work on the plan laid down by the Government, at the expense of the company; and if the management by the company was not satisfactory, then it would be in the power of the Government at any time to take possession of the work, and manage it according to its own views. That appeared to us to be the most economical plan of accomplishing this great enterprise, which is exceedingly necessary. My friend, the honorable Senator from Arkansas, will perceive that it would not incur the heavy expense he fears; the only expense would be caused by the survey or reconnaissance for the purpose of drawing up a plan. All the expense subsequently would be borne by the company, and if their management proved inefficient, the Government would be enabled to take it out of their hands.

Mr. PRATT. I have only one or two words to say. I should not say a single word, but for the regret I feel at the remarks which have fallen from my friend from Illinois. I can assure that Senator that the District of Columbia fully appreciates the labors he has performed, and the ability he has manifested in the discharge of his duties as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia; and I deeply regret to hear him say, that because this recommendation comes from another source, he will cease to be a member of that committee, or to act as its chairman. As I understand it, application for an appropriation for the object contemplated by the amendment, was originally made to that committee, and a majority of the committee, as stated by two of its members, were opposed to it. Now I can see no impropriety, when individuals wish water to be brought into the city, and the application is refused by one committee, in their applying to another committee. It is natural to do so; and I think my friend from Illinois should not take exception to the fact that the citizens of the District of Columbia, wishing to have this thing done, should have applied to another source when they found that the Committee on the District were unfavorable to their wishes.

As I understand this application, it is simply for an appropriation sufficient to make a survey and estimate of the cost of bringing water into the city. It is not desired by the people of the District that the Government should appropriate one cent towards the completion of this work. It will not be necessary, as the chairman of the committee correctly says, a company can be easily formed for making the work, charging the Government for the use of the water only at the same rates at which they charge individuals. This application, therefore, is merely for a survey by the Board of Topographical Engineers, in order that we may have a correct estimate of the cost.

My friend from Arkansas says that property in the District has lately been increasing in value at the rate of three hundred per cent. per annum. He says that this increase of value is brought about not by commerce, but because the seat of Government is here, and because much public money is here expended. Why, sir, the people are here because the Government is here. You bring your Government here, and your people here to accommodate the Government, and then the argument of my friend from Arkansas is, that as you have no commerce to support them, you ought to let them perish for want of water. I hope that this appropriation for a survey will pass. Not one cent will be required from the Government for the purpose of completing the work.

Mr. HUNTER. There has been manifested a feeling on the part of the Senator from Illinois in regard to this matter, which I am truly sorry to perceive. If he will allow me, I will explain, and I doubt not to his entire satisfaction, the action of the Committee on Finance. That committee intended no discourtesy whatever to any other committee of this body in recommending any of these amendments. They have acted just as they have always been accustomed to act ever since I have been a member of this body. When I was a member of the House of Representatives, I was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and yet the Committee of Ways and Means invariably put into the civil and diplomatic bill any amendment in relation to the District, because in that way they could be acted upon with more certainty and dispatch. I had some conversation with the Senator from Illinois in relation to these bridges, and I supposed that we agreed about them. I think I got his idea in relation to them. I certainly understood from him that he would prefer that the amendments in regard to the District to be put into the civil and diplomatic bill should be recommended by the Committee on Finance. That has been always done heretofore; but if I had had the least idea that the Senator from Illinois desired to see the estimate—although we are not bound to present them to the Committee on the District—it would have given me great pleasure to have had his views in relation to these matters.

In regard to this particular item, perhaps neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the people of the District are so much the cause of it as the Senator seems to imagine. An estimate was sent to me, as the acting chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings was absent, in regard to bringing water from the hill from which the Capitol is supplied; and some $40,000 or $50,000 were asked for that purpose. It, however, seemed to me better to have an estimate for the whole job, in order that we might know what it would cost; and I believe out of that arose the fact that I received a letter in relation to this item.

Now, a word or two as to the plan for the manner in which the water is to be furnished. The Committee on Finance did not propose to say a single word in regard to that. It was to be left entirely to the Committee on the District of Columbia, or to the Bureau of Topographical Engineers, to say what that plan should be. Had we known that the Committee on the District of Columbia had designed to offer any amendments in regard to this matter, we should not have taken the trouble to offer this. The chairman of the Committee on the District knows that there were some amendments to be offered in relation to the streets of the capital, and he asked me to bring them in in this bill. I suggested that it would be better to bring them in from the Committee on the District, as that committee knew more about them than the Committee on Finance. It was the furthest thing from my thoughts to offer any discourtesy to any committee; but in the appropriations for the Army and Navy the Finance Committee never think of consulting with the Committee on Military and on Naval Affairs. It is usual for the Committee on Finance to consider all matters of this kind. The items in those bills generally make appropriations to carry into effect existing laws, or for the current service of the year, and the Committee on Finance is the proper committee to consider them.

Mr. SHIELDS. I must have been exceedingly unfortunate in the manner of expressing myself, as I have been misunderstood by both the Senators who have just spoken. I had not the slightest intention of saying anything that would bear the appearance of jealousy to the committee presided over by the Senator from Virginia; for, if I were to select a Senator who would devote himself heartily to the performance of his duties, I should certainly take that gentleman. There is not a gentleman in this whole body for whom, and for whose talents, assiduity, and fidelity, I have a higher respect. I would not think of drawing any comparison between that Senator and myself on these points. I will also say that I have a very high respect for his committee. Senators have misunderstood me, if they imagined that I uttered any complaint against the Committee on Finance. But here is what I complain of: Gentlemen residing in the District, who are interested in the improvement of the city, are in the habit of making application to the Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of carrying out some particular plan; and when they find that that committee is unwilling to advance their objects, they go to another committee, and make application, very frequently with success. I will give a case in point. We are coming to an appropriation of $18,000 for the repair of the bridge across the Potomac. Some time since, I reported a proposition from my committee for the appropriation of $12,000 for a similar purpose, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] no doubt recollects; and that Senator's invincible logic demolished it in about fifteen minutes. Yet here we have the proposition renewed by the Committee on Finance, the difference being that they recommend $18,000, whilst we only proposed to appropriate $12,000. It is very probable, that if I had not called the attention of my friend from North Carolina to it, it would have been passed without being noticed by him.

Mr. BADGER. We will demolish that, also, I hope.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have mentioned this not for the purpose of throwing any reflection on the Committee on Finance, but solely for the purpose of putting the Senate in possession of the mode in which the business of these appropriations are managed.

Mr. BRIGHT. I share whatever blame attaches, in consequence of the Committee on Finance having recommended this amount, though I disclaim having had any knowledge whatever that the Committee on Public Buildings had been appealed to by persons interested in the matter. I have not myself heard this amendment recommended by any person in the city. I was in favor of it on general grounds, believing that the convenience of the public would be promoted by making some provision for water in the city. I believe it is the duty of the General Government to make provision for water in the city. I am unwilling to give to any company the right to furnish such an important item of the necessities of life, and hence I am in favor of the appropriation of a reasonable amount, for the purpose of ascertaining what it will cost to furnish water to the city out of the National Treasury; and, if it can be done for a convenient sum, then, at some subsequent period, to make an appropriation and commence the work.

Mr. BRADBURY. It will be perceived that this discussion has proceeded on the ground that it is the duty of Congress to provide the inhabitants of this city with water. It is to this point that I wish to direct attention; because the discussion has proceeded on the ground, not that we are merely to supply the Departments with water, but that the citizens must be supplied by money furnished by the Government.

Mr. PRATT. Will the honorable Senator permit me to make one observation? He is entirely mistaken in supposing that the advocacy of this appropriation rests upon the supposed obligations of the Government to supply water to the city. The only object is to make a survey and estimate of what it will cost to bring water here.

Mr. BRADBURY. It is obvious, from the course which the discussion has taken, that the survey will be regarded as a pledge that the Government is to go forward and construct the work necessary to bring water to this city. Now, sir, I am willing, at a proper time, to do whatever is necessary to supply a sufficient quantity of water to meet the wants of the Departments; but it is a want felt by the citizens that we are called upon to meet. We are told that the city is increasing most rapidly, and that real estate has been enhanced in value to a most unparalleled extent. The reason for that has been alluded to by the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND.] Congress paves the streets and principal avenues of the city. It lights the city, it ornaments the city, and now it is proposed that we shall bring water into it; for I regard the proposition as identical with supplying the water. One result from the rise of real estate is an increased expense in living here. I am willing to do whatever the Government ought to do in an enterprise of this kind; but it does seem to me that the public buildings are already supplied to a reasonable extent. If the citizens desire additional facilities for water, it is incumbent upon them to show to Congress by proper surveys and estimates what may be the cost of the desired works; and further, for them to come forward and say what they propose to do; for this great work must be not only expensive, but of joint benefit. The citizens have a deep interest in it, and whenever they come forward, and are prepared to do what they ought to do, I am ready to cooperate with them. I am willing to aid them.

But the amendment proposes an appropriation of money for the survey. Now, it will be borne in mind that we have a large corps of engineers here. They are Government officers, already under pay, and receiving salaries, that we are to employ to do this work. I do not know but that the appropriation of $5,000 may be necessary, but it appears to me that it is not. I must refer to the remarks which have fallen from the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I find that many objects are embraced in this bill which have been very attentively considered by that committee. In regard to bridges, and to the repairs of the bridges, we spent many days in examining the subject, and employed men of science to collect information, and we were prepared to make such estimates as they thought ought to be recommended. Numerous facts were brought before us in regard to the subject embraced in this amendment; and yet, without information, without any notice to the committee, the work is transferred from out of their hands to another committee, before whom I believe no single memorial on the subject was laid.

Mr. HALE's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE. I move to amend the amendment by substituting "cities" for "city," and adding the words "Georgetown" after "Washington," so as to give both cities the benefit of the appropriation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I find that an amendment has been omitted, which either did not go to the printers, or they have lost it, in relation to the expenses of the judiciary. The bill as it comes from the House of Representatives, provides for defraying the expenses of the supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, &c., $550,000. This was reduced from the original estimate by the Committee of Ways and Means upon the letter of Mr. Whittlesey, informing them that if the fee bill which has passed the House should become a law, $550,000 would be sufficient; but he says if it does not become a law, we shall require $630,000, unless we decide in favor of some payments that are claimed to the amount of $50,000, upon estimates made by the judges, which he has rejected. We thought it safest, therefore, to increase the appropriation to $630,000; because, if we put it at $680,000, it might be considered a decision against the Comptroller, and in favor of the claims; whereas it was best to leave the question open for future decision. Under the instruction of the committee, therefore, I move to strike out $550,000, and insert $630,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For finishing the grading, manuring, planting, finishing the roads and walks, graveling and laying gutters along the margin of the same, and repairing the fence of the Smithsonian square, $13,300."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Early in the session I submitted a resolution which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, proposing to have some investigation made into the propriety of establishing a line of lights along Pennsylvania avenue, west of the President's house, and making some improvements upon that avenue. I acted upon the principle, that it was the duty of the Government to make the District answer all the purposes of the seat of empire, and furnish facilities in light and traveling; for I have myself experienced inconvenience resulting from want of light and necessary convenience for traveling, by several years residence in the city of Georgetown.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator will notice that the amendment under consideration does not relate to that subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly aware of that; but I mention this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether any attention had been given to, or any amendment is to be proposed for this improvement in regard to necessities, for I am somewhat of Eugene Sue's opinion, that it is not a very good policy to be granting superfluities to anybody, while we deny the necessities of an indispensable character to the great mass. This amendment proposes an appropriation of $13,200 for improvements of various kinds—for shrubbery, for flowers, for ornamental decorations, and everything of that sort. And, then, there is another amendment upon the same subject in regard to the triangular piece of ground on the north side of Pennsylvania avenue, as you go to the President's house. That proposes a similar appropriation—one for mere decoration. My object in rising was to ask if the Committee on the District of Columbia have determined to make any appropriation at all for lights according to the resolution which was submitted to them, or for pavements, while all this money is to be voted for mere decorations?

Mr. HUNTER. I understand from the Senator from Maryland, that there is some other information to come in relation to this amendment. I will propose, therefore, by general consent, that this, and the next amendment in regard to the triangular space on Pennsylvania avenue, be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT. If such be the pleasure of the Senate, they will be passed over.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For repairs of the Potomac Bridge, $18,000."

Mr. CLARKE. I do not rise to oppose this appropriation of $18,000, if it is founded upon an estimate; and whether it is or not, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance will be able to inform the Senate; but there was an estimate made about two months ago, and whoever made it, condescended to exhibit it to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and upon that, the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHIELDS] made a proposition to appropriate $12,000 for the temporary repairs of the bridge across the Potomac. At that time, it was my opinion that the bridge should be temporarily repaired, and the $12,000 would be well expended for keeping a line of communication or travel between the city of Washington and the adjacent parts of Virginia. I think, now, that that bridge should be repaired, but I desire to suggest that the word "temporary" be placed before "repairs." And while upon this subject, I will state that the Committee on the District of Columbia, I believe, have not been able to agree upon any plan for a permanent connection of the District with the Virginia shore. My own impression is, that this bridge has a deleterious effect on the city of Washington. Its abutments have undoubtedly served to produce the deposits above it, creating, I suppose, a malaria injurious to the health of the city; and I have come to the conclusion, that instead of permanently rebuilding it at great cost, it will be better to have a steam-ferry there, similar to that between Brooklyn and New York, and Jersey City and New York. It may be known, also, that there was a bridge some three miles above Georgetown, which was carried away by the same freshet that injured this bridge. The city of Georgetown has no means to build a bridge. They had a bridge across; it has been carried away, and they desire to have another. I have no particular feeling on the subject, for I never was there more than half a dozen times in my life, and never expect to be again; but it seems to me that the city of Georgetown is equally entitled with Washington to the fostering care of this Government. We hold jurisdiction over both equally, and there is no reason, in my mind, why all legislative appropriations should be made for the one, and none for the other.

I took some pains, Mr. President, as one of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to look at what I thought would be the best method of connecting the District with the Virginia shore, and came to the conclusion that it would be better to build a bridge across the Potomac river, at the city of Georgetown, a little way above the aqueduct, where there are some rocks in the river, and connect the city of Georgetown with the Virginia shore; and then, in my opinion, it would be better to connect the city of Washington with the Virginia shore by a steam ferry-boat than by the present bridge. I was in favor of an appropriation for temporary repairs to this bridge. They should be made—they should have been made, with due deference to my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] months ago. But in regard to this appropriation, whether $12,000, or $18,000 to furnish and complete it for the purpose of temporary passage, until something shall be decided of permanent character, I am in favor of it. If $12,000 is sufficient, it is not necessary to appropriate $18,000; but the appropriation I am in favor of, whichever it be; but I am in favor of inserting "temporary" before "repairs," so that it shall be considered as a temporary, and not as a permanent affair. Then I shall propose to offer an amendment for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac, at the point I have already indicated, a little above the aqueduct, in the city of Georgetown. But I will do this when this provision is disposed of. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "temporary," before "repairs."

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to agree to that. I will say, that I stated this was according to estimate; but it is $750 more than the estimate. There was an estimate of January 28, 1852, of $20,000 for this item, and the next amendment to be proposed by the committee, in the distribution of sums, it seems we added $750 to it.

Mr. BADGER. I ask my friend from Rhode Island to withdraw his amendment, to allow me to submit one to ascertain whether the Senate are disposed to make any appropriation to carry on the bridge or not.

Mr. CLARKE. I withdraw it.

Mr. BADGER. Then I propose to amend the amendment by striking out the word "repairs," and inserting "the removal of the remains," so that the appropriation will read:

For the removal of the remains of the Potomac Bridge, $18,000.

I desire to say a word or two on this subject, because I have some reason to believe that the importance of the removal of this structure is not fully appreciated by the members of the Senate. The accumulations that have been making by that bridge, which have been steadily increasing every year, have now got to such a pass that at low-water every day a large surface, which is covered at high-water, is exposed to the influence of this August sun. Mud, decaying vegetables, and all such materials, are brought and deposited there by the water of the river, which are most noxious when exposed, in a half wet, sloppy state, to the action of the summer's sun. This has been going on for many years. As far back as 1841, when I was residing temporarily in this city, my attention was called to the effect of the bridge by one of the most intelligent men who has ever been here from a foreign country—Baron Mareschal, then the representative of Austria here. He had no small experience on the subject, and he told me that if that thing was allowed to go on, yellow fever at Washington would be the necessary consequence. During the last winter a providential circumstance happened, as if to aid us in setting about the accomplishment of what ought long since to have been done. A flood has swept away a portion of the bridge. It can no longer be used. It is now proposed, by the amendment of the committee, to apply $18,000 in patching it up. My friend from Rhode Island proposes to make that patch upon the face of it a temporary affair. Now, sir, this word "temporary" is of very uncertain and indefinite signification. It would be temporary if it should last for ten, fifteen, or twenty years, or if it should last for the present generation. I call the attention of the Senate to this, and appeal to every gentleman if it is not so—and that so long as that bridge can be patched and kept in a condition to be crossed and maintained as a communication between the two shores, Congress will make no provision for building a suitable bridge, or any provision for the maintenance of a steam communication. We may be sure of that, I think.

Then the question comes down to this: Shall we spend $18,000 in perpetuating what undoubtedly is, in its present condition, a nuisance, threatening, at no distant day, to make a large and important part of this city uninhabitable, except at a great hazard to life, in the summer and fall seasons of the year? I entertain the opinion, which I formerly expressed to the Senate, that the best and most judicious course for us to pursue is to seize the favorable moment, and as nobody will be made the worse—for they cannot cross the bridge now—sweep away the remains of it; and, if we shall find it necessary hereafter, contrive some means by which the force given to the current may wash away the accumulation which we have by our structure put there. The health of the city is first in importance. All the members of Congress are obliged to spend a portion of every year here; and when we regard either our own health and comfort, or the health and comfort of the people of this city, it is a matter of high consideration to maintain no establishment here that may even probably result in endangering either.

Again, I am opposed to maintaining the bridge, because it has been, and is, a serious obstruction to the commerce of that venerable city—Georgetown. Its citizens feel it to be so. Senators have lately had laid upon their table a most earnest and respectful remonstrance of the entire population of that city, begging that the nuisance to them—if the nuisance to us be put out of the way—may be removed. I do not wish the bridge to be temporarily repaired. Temporarily will make it last three, or four, or five years, and in that time the nuisance may have increased so much as to have rendered consequences disastrous, and perhaps incurable. I sincerely hope that the Senate will concur in this view of the amendment, and that the appropriation will be for the removal of the nuisance instead of perpetuating it there forever, or for any time.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject, for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall make no objection on that point, for I hope we shall dispose of the river and harbor bill to-day, so that we may go on with the appropriation bills on Monday.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope so. I will do all I can to bring about that result.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after a short time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853. The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SURRENDER OF BOUNTY LANDS.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill authorizing certain soldiers of the late war with Great Britain to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and locate others in lieu thereof. The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

The PRESIDENT. The hour has arrived for the consideration of the special order, which is the river and harbor bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for a purpose of which I have never asked indulgence since I have been a member of this body. It is to make a personal explanation that will not last more than one minute.

Several SENATORS. "Agreed!" "Agreed!"

The PRESIDENT. If such is the pleasure of the Senate, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have received a note from Mr. STANLY, of the House of Representatives, in relation to the very interesting question that was the subject of debate the other day, concerning a certain circular put forth with the names of certain gentlemen, and which constituted a topic of discussion between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] and the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. SMITH.] I desire to have the letter read, in justice to the gentleman who writes it; and then to make a word of comment upon it.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, August 20, 1852.

SIR: In the Daily Globe of Thursday morning, August 19th, there is reported a debate in the Senate, in which remarks are made of a harsh character, in reference to a paper, purporting to have been signed by several members of the House of Representatives, and one gentleman not a member.

I have paid no attention to references made in newspapers, for if this were done we should attend to little else. But when the conduct of gentlemen is reflected on in the Senate, it becomes a matter of self-respect to notice it. I wish to trespass on your time a few moments, by giving you the facts in relation to the publication alluded to.

More than a week ago I received, by mail, one of these publications, and in looking over it hurriedly, I saw it was a parody, intended to ridicule those who had issued a paper of a like character, giving their reasons for opposing General Scott. I saw it was a hoax, and handed it to a friend. I did not read it through, being in a hurry. I have never franked one of them, did not know by whom it was written, and had no participation in its preparation. I had no more to do with it than either of the Senators who referred to it in debate.

I have asked each one of the gentlemen whose names are appended to the paper, and they inform me it was not prepared by their consent or procurement, and that, like myself, they had nothing to do with it. Only one gentleman, from the North, franked two of them, one to a Democratic editor, and another to an intelligent gentleman who could understand the hoax.

As far as I know, but two of them have been franked. It was the work of some idle wag, I know not who; and I did not believe there was a boy or a man in the United States who could be deceived by it. If you will examine the publication of gentlemen giving their reasons for refusing to support General Scott, you will see it was intended as a parody. I do not intend to speak of the contents of the paper, but to place the truth concerning myself before you.

I submit this statement to you, in the hope that Mr. WALKER and yourself will do that justice to myself and others, that you would expect under like circumstances.

Do me the favor to show this letter to Mr. WALKER.

Very respectfully, &c., EDWARD STANLY.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS, United States Senate.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I deemed it due to the gentleman who wrote this letter, that its contents should be made known to the public in the same place in which my comments on the circular were made. So far as Mr. STANLY is concerned, the letter which has been read is conclusive. If it is so as to the others, I am only utterly amazed that the Senator from Connecticut did not do that justice to his friends and to his own character that the truth would seem to require, if Mr. STANLY is well advised as to the facts of this case.

So far as the franking was concerned, I will only state, that instead of the frank of the member of the House of Representatives to which I referred being on the envelope, as I stated the other day, I find that it was on the circular itself. I make no issue with any gentleman in regard to it. I commented upon the subject when it was brought before the Senate the other day. I now put the letter of Mr. STANLY before the country, and let it go with the original paper and the comments which have been made upon it, leaving the public to ascertain who was the person that got up that paper called a "hoax," but which has been used throughout the country as an electioneering document. Of course it was not my purpose to make an issue with any of the gentlemen whose names are attached to it, but merely to give the Senator from Connecticut an opportunity to put to rest the rumors which are afloat, attacking the authorship of it, or at least the publication of it to him.

Mr. MANGUM. Mr. President, I received, some fortnight ago, when confined to my bed by sickness, the circular referred to, to which a person, wholly unwarranted and unauthorized, had taken the liberty to attach my name. It contained the declaration that I should withhold my vote from Pierce and King. When I looked at it, it struck me as being rather a singular thing, and I read it a second time. It occurred to me then that some person, who supposed himself quite smart, had endeavored to play off a parody on a publication of which we all have a distinct recollection, on the opposite side of the question, and in doing so, had most unwarrantably used the names of gentlemen who knew nothing about it. I knew no more about it than you, sir, or any gentleman in this Chamber, and I am well assured that the other gentlemen whose names are attached to it knew nothing about it.

I think it a very poor joke at best; and really I was surprised, before I was able to resume my seat in the Senate, to find that this very poor joke was made the subject-matter of Senatorial comment in this body. The whole thing is beneath contempt. It is unworthy of consideration. Whoever may be the author of the circular, his smartness will not be much illustrated by it; and in taking the liberty he has taken, of using the names of gentlemen who knew nothing about it, he has acted in a very unworthy manner. I know not who the author is.

I did not deem this matter of sufficient importance to make any denial here or in the newspapers. I have no ambition to see my name in print. I suppose there is hardly one of my associates, on either side of the Chamber, who deems it necessary for me to make a public declaration to the effect that I have stated now. I know nothing about the circular. I feel, as far as I am concerned, that the matter is beneath contempt.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will take occasion to state, that when the discussion sprung up originally, he happened accidentally to be out of the Senate Chamber. As soon as he returned and saw the course of the discussion, he resumed the chair, and stopped the discussion by calling the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] to order.

MR. SMITH. Mr. President, I feel no disposition to complain of the honorable Senator from Illinois for bringing the subject up at this time under the circumstances of the case; but I certainly did feel a very great degree of surprise that a subject of this character should have been introduced into the Senate Chamber—though, perhaps, it was hardly worth while for me to manifest the degree of irritation which I did on the occasion to which I refer. I desire to cherish very kind and respectful relations with the Senators to whom I now allude, and I do not intend to have any controversy with them on this or any other subject, if I can avoid it.

I feel even now some degree of surprise that the Senator from Illinois should say that he believed a document of this character had really been circulated over the country as an electioneering document. The idea of the gentleman would seem to be, that that portion of Congress who are friendly to the election of General Scott are really trying to use a paper of this character to promote his election. That is paying a very poor compliment, in my judgment, to the intelligence of the American people.

The circular alluded to was obviously a mere parody on a certain publication which was issued by members of the House of Representatives, some of whom are among the number of my very intimate and immediate friends; and it never was intended as a blow at the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. I will now say what I did not feel disposed to say the other day. That parody, as it is, and miserable as it may be, I have reason to apprehend—indeed, I know in fact, if I may rely on the statement of gentlemen with whom I have conversed on that subject—was not signed by the gentlemen whose names are appended to it, and that not one of those gentlemen had anything to do with it in any form whatever. The honorable Senator from Illinois says somebody has franked that paper. Will he have the goodness to say whose name appears on that frank?

MR. DOUGLAS. I will.

MR. SMITH. I wish the gentleman to state it, because I do not like to have it said in this blind and general manner.

MR. DOUGLAS. A member of Congress from the State of Connecticut, showed to me one of these circulars, printed upon half a sheet of paper, which had been returned to him by one of his constituents, bearing the frank of the Hon. Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. He stated to me that he took that to Mr. WARD, and understood Mr. WARD to say, distinctly, that it was his frank, and that he had franked it. The frank and the handwriting were both on the document itself, and not on the envelope. Another member of the House of Representatives told me, that he understood Mr. WARD to state that he did frank it; and a Delegate from one of the Territories also made the same statement, as to what he had understood Mr. WARD to say. From this fact—seeing the frank, and hearing the rumor—I took it for granted that the circular was being franked by those whose names were attached to it—that gentlemen being one of them. I make no issue as to whether it is his frank, or not. I do not know the gentleman personally; and I do not know his handwriting. And the reason why I stated it the other day was, to see if I could get a denial from the Senator from Connecticut.

I wish to add, in reply to the honorable Senator's surprise that I should have expressed a belief that I had reason to suppose it was true, that on that statement of fact I could not doubt it; and I was only then amazed, and am now amazed, that the Senator should have allowed himself to rest under such an imputation, when by one word he could have put an end to it at once. His denial would have been conclusive upon me, as would have been the denial of any gentleman whose name was attached to that paper.

MR. SMITH. I have simply to say that I do not apprehend danger from imputations arising out of such a matter as this. If I have not character enough to sustain me in the world, and place me above injury from imputations of this nature, let them come from what quarter they may, it will be useless for me to undertake to repel them.

I will simply add a word in justice to myself and my most excellent friend, Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. He tells me that some of his Democratic friends asked him whether his name, or what purported to be his name, upon the circular was really his frank. He took it for granted that it was; but in fact he knew but little about it. He spoke jocularly, however, when he said to the gentlemen who addressed him, "Yes, gentlemen, it's all right," or something to that effect, not supposing that those who addressed him were in earnest, for he was not. But he says that he did not, in point of fact, frank the circular—certainly not knowingly. Indeed, I understood him to say, that what purported to be his frank on that circular was not his genuine signature. With this explanation I leave the subject; for I really think it ought not to occupy the time of the Senate.

MR. WALKER. Mr. President, the letter which has been read, and which was addressed to the Senator from Illinois, imposes upon me, as the Senate will perhaps perceive, the duty of saying a word, and I shall be very brief.

The letter to the Senator from Illinois is entirely satisfactory to me, so far as Mr. STANLY is concerned. What has been said by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] is entirely satisfactory to me, so far as that Senator is concerned. I do not believe that either of those gentlemen had anything to do with the paper. I do not believe they knew that it was got up. I believe their names were used entirely without their authority. I might say something more plainly of others, if they had addressed me; but they have not. They have addressed the Senator from Illinois. Sir, if the debate upon the subject on the part of one Senator here—the Senator from Connecticut—had been reported as it actually occurred, I might have had something to say in regard to him and his connection with the matter; but it was not reported correctly. What he said in that debate was, that he was here to transact legislative business, and not to answer the blackguardism that was brought up in the Senate. As reported, he was made to say that he was here to transact legislative business, and if Senators saw proper to bring up the blackguardism of the newspapers, he should treat them with silent contempt.

Sir, dignity is a very good thing. It may be unfortunate for me, however, that I am not capable of practicing it to such an extent as some others; but, when an occasion arises where there is no other resort than dignity, I think that is a very poor one. I think that the resort to individual dignity is a very poor one, on the part of those who have about as much of it as an organ-grinder's monkey. I do not apply the remark to any one here. Then, while I excuse Mr. STANLY, and the Senator from North Carolina, who has spoken, yet, as long as that debate stands where it is, I have nothing to say to the Senator who is thus reported; and until he does correct it, and until he does deny it, it is my belief that he signed that circular.

THE PRESIDENT. The river and harbor bill is properly under consideration.

MR. SMITH. I want the privilege of replying to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

THE PRESIDENT. If such is the pleasure of the Senate, the Senator from Connecticut will be permitted to proceed. [Agreed! Agreed!] But the Chair will say, that this debate is contrary to all rules of proceeding; and, although it is the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senator may proceed, the Chair will feel bound to arrest personalities.

MR. SMITH. Mr. President, I had no idea of indulging in any personalities whatever. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say, that the remarks which I made the other day—I admit, under some little irritation—were not truly reported. I believe they are exactly reported, as I made them, word for word. I thought I was justified in those remarks. I thought that the Senator had brought into the Senate Chamber a matter that had nothing whatever to do with the business that was before the Senate. I thought he had introduced it for the purpose of trifling with my feelings. I thought that he intended something more than the introduction of playful amusement into the Chamber. If I had supposed that the intention of the honorable Senator was not to trifle with my feelings, I might not, and should not have indulged in severity of remark.

But what, sir, has this subject to do with the Senate? What had it to do with the business then before the Senate? We had before us a question in relation to the Sault Ste. Marie canal bill; and I had made some remarks upon that bill. How pertinent they were, or how worthy of consideration, I do not undertake to say. And what was it that the Senator did? He had recourse to newspapers, and brought into the Chamber matter which I stigmatized as wretched blackguardism.

The same matter had been published in the Union, and in that paper I had been stigmatized in connection with it. An effort was made to create an impression against me and other honorable gentlemen whose names were appended to that paper, that we had attempted to practice an enormous fraud upon the country. Now, what had that to do with the Sault Ste. Marie canal? I said then, and I say now, that it was mere matter of newspaper blackguardism, and never should have been brought into the Senate Chamber. But if the honorable Senator says, or is prepared to say, that he did not mean to trifle with my feelings on that occasion, I stand ready to make the amende honorable. The Senator can have his relations with me just as he pleases. It is to me a matter of the most entire and perfect indifference. Our relations have hitherto been friendly and cordial, to some extent. I would much rather be concerned in rendering acts of courtesy and kindness to the honorable members of this body than to be engaged in controversies with them; but if I understand my rights here, as a member of this body, it becomes me to maintain the dignity of my character, and the dignity of my position; and I will do it, whatever may be the consequences.

[Here the conversation dropped.]

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate then took up the river and harbor bill, and debated various amendments to a late hour, many of which were adopted and several rejected, when, a few moments before five p. m.—

The Senate adjourned.

[See Appendix for the proceedings.]

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, August 23, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a report from the Secretary of State, and the documents accompanying it, touching the Lobos Islands; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of State, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the clerks in that Department; which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill of the House of Representatives "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1853, and for other purposes," the question pending being on the motion of Mr. BADGER, to amend the amendment of the Committee on Finance proposing to appropriate $18,000 "for repairs of the Potomac bridge," by striking out the word "repairs" and inserting "the removal of the remains," so as to make the clause read:

"For the removal of the remains of the Potomac bridge, $18,000."

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, as the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] the other day made some remarks in relation to this question that might affect the vote on the amendment, I feel it my duty to say a few words. I do not intend, at this stage of the session to consume time on this subject; but I regret very much that I cannot go into it more fully. When the subject comes fairly and fully before the Senate, I shall be prepared to go into it in a manner as I think may materially modify or change the opinion of my honorable friend from North Carolina.

In 1833 this subject was thoroughly investigated. The best engineers in America were employed in the examination of it; and a plan was then approved by General Jackson, at that time President of the United States, for a bridge across the Potomac. But that plan was defeated, and the present structure was erected. Although the bridge has not answered the purpose, because it was not such a one as any engineer ever recommended—it was not recommended by the Government, by the President, nor by any engineer—still, I think my friend from North Carolina charges the poor bridge with a great deal more than it is properly chargeable with. He charges it with being the cause of fever and ague, yellow fever, and cholera; as diverting the channel of the river, and also as ruining the trade of Georgetown. I dare say all these things have occurred at the same time; and the bridge may be said to be the cause of them, on the same ground that a committee in England decided that the Tenterden steeple was the cause of the accumulation of the Godwin Sands; because the sands commenced accumulating there when the steeple was built, and had continued accumulating ever since; so that the accumulation was chargeable to the building of the steeple. [Laughter.] Now I am satisfied that the ruining of the trade of Georgetown, the prevalence of the fever and ague, and so on, are concurrent phenomena; but I do not know that they can properly be made chargeable to the bridge.

The subject was thoroughly investigated, as I said, in 1833. The Committee on the District of Columbia have been engaged lately in investigating it. Colonel Kearney, one of our best engineers, and Colonel Trumbull, who superintended the construction of the aqueduct at Georgetown—an engineer perhaps equal to any not only in this country, but (if that work be any evidence of his capability) one of the best engineers in the world—have been before us. We have had the advice and the aid of these gentlemen in our investigations of this subject, and, as I said before, when the proper time arrives I myself, who have had this assistance, will be prepared to go into the subject. The question arises now, where are we to have a new communication across the Potomac? Every one agrees that there ought to be some communication, whether at the old locality, or at a new locality at Georgetown or elsewhere, we cannot yet precisely determine. It is too large a subject to go into at this time.

These engineers all agree, that whether we reconstruct the bridge on the old site, or construct a bridge at Mason's Island, at the Three Sisters, or over the aqueduct, the repair of this bridge is one of the first steps to the accomplishment of that object. So much was that the case heretofore, that when the bridge was about to be built formerly, in 1832 or 1833, the Government purchased the old bridge then existing, in order to make use of it as a service bridge, until the bridge then proposed was completed. I hope that will remove the objection of my honorable friend from North Carolina.

I will not go into the question whether we ought to reconstruct a bridge at the present locality, or should build one at Mason's Island, or at the Three Sisters, or beyond Georgetown; but when the time comes for the investigation of that subject, I shall be ready to go into it, and give all the information that I have collected on the subject. But what we now want, as my colleague on the Committee on the District of Columbia stated the other day, is a mere temporary repair of the present bridge. For that purpose, I would suggest to the Senator from Virginia, that the amount proposed in the amendment of the committee is too large. The engineers to whom I refer gave us all the necessary information, and, from everything which we could learn, we thought that $12,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Since we came to that conclusion, we have ascertained that there are some other repairs to be made, which will make the whole amount necessary to be appropriated about $15,000.

Mr. HUNTER. It will be necessary for the Senator to move that amendment, as the amendment for the repair of the bridge is reported from the Committee on Finance, and cannot be modified without a vote of the Senate. I shall vote, however, for an amendment like that suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment cannot be offered until the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is disposed of.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the necessity of having a way to communicate between the District and the Virginia shore, not for the convenience of the people of the neighborhood alone, but for the convenience of the whole country, is manifest. Congress has undertaken, by purchasing the bridge many years ago, to make that way and keep it up. It would seem to me to devolve, as a matter of duty, on Congress, whatever ultimate designs it may have to furnish the repairs necessary to keep the bridge across the Potomac. Whether the appropriation should be $18,000 or $12,000, I do not know.

What the Senator from North Carolina has in view, strikes me as an object that must be attained one of these days by Congress. I presume there can be no question, that, from the manner in which the present bridge has been constructed, it has done serious injury to the town of Georgetown. It is not only by causing the flats in the river, resulting from the deposits from above, that it has impaired the health of the opposite part of the city of Washington, but it has obstructed the channel so as to do very serious injury to the commercial interests of Georgetown. As will be manifest to the eye of the observer, the portion of the bridge which does obstruct the channel, is what is called the causeway—a brick structure which has not been injured by the late freshet. That portion of the bridge remains. The proposition to repair the bridge, is one that does not interfere with any ultimate question as to the mode of reconstructing it or, whether there should be a change in the site. It seems to me, that the repair is indispensably necessary for the convenience of the people of the country; and that Congress is committed to do it, because, by purchasing the bridge originally, it incurred an obligation to keep it up.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It seems to me that there is one question appertaining to this subject which has not yet been suggested. In 1833, when the site was first surveyed, and when the bridge was erected, both shores of the Potomac were within the District of Columbia. Since that time, the territory on the other side of the Potomac has been retroceded to the State of Virginia. Now, what right has Congress, without the consent of Virginia, to erect or repair any bridge across the Potomac? The western shore of that river is within the jurisdiction of Virginia. If so, the Congress of the United States has no jurisdiction over the subject, and we ought to have the consent of Virginia before we can touch it. I entertain views on this subject similar to those which were expressed the other day by the Senator from North Carolina. I think if we do anything we ought to remove the present nuisance.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania has anticipated me on a point I intended to make, and it is a point which I think worthy of the consideration of the Senate. He has stated correctly, that, at the time the appropriation was originally made for building this bridge, the jurisdiction of each end of it was within the District of Columbia. By a late act of Congress, one side of the river has lately been retroceded to the State of Virginia, and I think she has no claim upon Congress to continue this bridge, nor have we anything before us to show that, as a State, she desires it. But, aside from that, I think the appropriation proposed by the honorable gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. SHIELDS] would be so much money wasted. I do not believe that the Long Bridge, so called, can ever be made a permanent and safe crossing point. But even admitting that in this I am incorrect, which I do not believe, there is one point in this District—one city in this District—one portion of the population of this District, which has been seriously injured by the erection and maintenance of this bridge. They have no representative here to speak for them; hence it is proper that those who understand the facts connected with this matter should present them to the Senate; and I was greatly in hopes that the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] when he was up, would have gone on and stated the grievances that Georgetown, which lies entirely within the limits of the District, has suffered, and is suffering. The people of Georgetown have, from time to time, complained of that structure as an interference with their commerce, and as interfering with the health of their city; and they have asked Congress repeatedly, in the most respectful manner, to afford them some relief from these grievances—in short, to remove this nuisance. But Congress, thus far, has been deaf to their appeals. Latterly, by the act of God, a portion of the Long Bridge has been swept away; and it is to be regretted that the whole was not taken.

Mr. BADGER. I agree with you.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from North Carolina is right. I would rather vote to appropriate $16,000 to remove what is left of the old structure than to appropriate $16,000 to repair it; for the reason, in the first place, that it is not now the sole property of the United States—it is the property in part of Virginia; and in the next place, if it were the property of the United States, and its improvement practicable, it would be an injury instead of a benefit in a public point of view.

I have no wish to consume the time of the Senate in discussing the question; and I know the necessity for passing on and disposing of the amendments; but I must ask the Senate to hear read the proceedings of a public meeting held lately in Georgetown on this subject. I think they will explain the whole matter better than any speech I can make.

The Secretary accordingly read the following:

"PUBLIC MEETING AT GEORGETOWN.—At a general meeting of the citizens of Georgetown, called by the Mayor, by direction of the corporation, at Forrest Hall, on Thursday evening, the 8th of June, 1852, the Mayor was called to the chair, and John Dickson, Esq., appointed secretary."

"The Mayor then explained the object of the meeting; whereupon Recorder Ould moved that a committee of three persons be appointed by the chair to report resolutions for the consideration of the meeting."

"The chair appointed Robert Ould, David English, and Judson Mitchell, Esqrs., said committee, who soon after reported the following preamble and resolutions, viz:

"Whereas, the people of Georgetown have been grievously injured, for the long period of forty-five years, by the erection of the Potomac Bridge below the harbor of the town, and against which we originally, and have ever since, protested, and do now protest; and as its continuance must ever have a disastrous effect upon our fortunes, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the people of Georgetown in general meeting assembled, That it becomes our duty to, and we accordingly do, make a united and earnest appeal to the justice of Congress, under whose exclusive jurisdiction we have been placed by the Constitution of the United States, to protect us from the oppression and annoyance of this enormous injury."

"Resolved, That we are persuaded that such an obstruction to the commerce of this town, as is occasioned by said bridge, would not be tolerated in one of the States of this Union, or permitted to embarrass one of the seats of its commerce; and feeling that we are entitled to such rights as belong in common to the American people, we protest against the longer continuance of this unnecessary structure and palpable nuisance, and implore of Congress its abatement.

"Resolved, That experience elsewhere has long since demonstrated the sufficiency of steam ferry-boats to furnish the necessary facilities, under the same circumstances which exist at Washington; and we feel assured that the steamboats which now ply between that city and Alexandria afford a safe and more expeditious means of travel than is furnished by the said bridge, and that the bridge, for such purpose, has already been measurably superseded by said boats.

"Resolved, That we entertain no unkind or unneighborly feelings towards Washington, but, on the contrary, would be happy to see Congress continue to nurture it, and to make the most liberal appropriations to promote its trade, and give it such embellishments as are worthy the capital of a great and prosperous people.

"Resolved, That, in protesting against said bridge, we only ask of Congress simple justice—a permission to enjoy, without molestation or hindrance, the advantages which nature has given us.

"Resolved, That we respectfully and earnestly call the attention of Congress to some point on the Potomac above our town, as the proper situation for the location of a bridge; which, while it would inflict no injury upon the rights of any individual or community, would afford facility for crossing the river, not only to the District and its neighborhood, but also to the great traveling public of the United States, in connection with the lines of our northern and southern railroads.

"After debate upon a number of propositions to make verbal and unessential amendments to the resolutions, none of which were carried, the question was taken upon the preamble and resolutions as originally reported, and they were adopted with two dissenting voices.

"Colonel Willet moved that a copy of the resolutions be, as soon as practicable, presented to both Houses of Congress; which motion was unanimously adopted.

"And then the meeting adjourned.

"HENRY ADDISON, Chairman.
"JOHN DICKSON, Secretary."

Mr. SHIELDS. It is urged as an objection to the repair of this bridge, that it is now partly in Virginia. In regard to that I would say, that the Government purchased out the old bridge company, known, I believe, as the "Washington Bridge Company," and the Government erected a bridge, and have continued, as it were, the charter that was given to the bridge company. I do not know but that that fact may remove the objection. A perpetual charter, I believe, was given to the company while both shores were within the District of Columbia. The Government purchased it out, and erected a bridge, continuing the conditions.

The contest between Washington and Georgetown has nothing to do with this matter. I prefer that a bridge should be erected at Georgetown, and I hope that we shall be able to determine that one great bridge can be erected there, above navigation, that will answer all the purposes. But I have said, and say again, that all engineers concur, that until we erect another bridge, it will be advantageous to keep open this means of communication; and that if the people of Georgetown consult their own interests, they will prefer to have this bridge temporarily repaired until a new one be erected. If gentlemen wish to sweep away all communication between the District and Virginia, let them do it. For me, I do not care particularly about it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I regard the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina as one of very considerable importance. It proposes, instead of repairing the present bridge, to make an appropriation to remove the large portion of it which remains. Now, in the first place, it has been well stated that there is a necessity to keep open the communication across the river, and that this can be done at a moderate expense, by repairing, temporarily, the old bridge. It is no little affair to undertake the removal of the long causeway, constituting some two thousand feet of solid work; and $20,000, or $40,000, will not be sufficient for that purpose.

It is worthy of being recollected, that before the site for this bridge was determined in 1832, under the administration of General Jackson, the most careful examination was made of all the various sites to ascertain the best location, and after this examination, the site of the present bridge was selected as, on the whole, the best. I believe that if to-day a re-examination were to be had, the same site would be very likely to be again determined upon.

Many effects have been attributed to the causeway which have not resulted from it. It has been charged as the cause of the diminution of the commerce of Georgetown; but other causes have co-operated to diminish that commerce, as will be seen by referring to the diminution of the commerce of the neighboring city of Alexandria, that is not within the influence of the bridge. It has also been charged as causing a portion of this city to be unhealthy. The Committee on the District of Columbia bestowed some time upon the investigation of that subject; and there was no considerable testimony submitted to them, tending to show that such was not the fact. The committee were engaged for several days in an investigation connected with the subject of this bridge, and the other sites proposed for a new one. They visited and examined the old bridge, and all the proposed sites for the new bridge, going up the river four or five miles above Georgetown. They found that there were difficulties to be overcome in erecting a bridge at any of the other points; and my own judgment was, that there was no spot where a bridge could be erected that could be found convenient, and meet the wants of the public, excepting at the old site, or at Mason's Island, below Georgetown.

Now, sir, I will ask if the Senate, after the appropriate committee have investigated the subject, will undertake, without any examination of this important and difficult matter, to determine the whole question in the dark, against the opinion of the committee, and commence the renewal of a structure that was placed in the river under the sanction of law. It appears to me that it is a question which ought to be carefully investigated, and that we should not start off upon mere impressions and suggestions. It is worthy of remark, that the authorities of the city of Washington have passed resolutions unanimously asking the repair of the present bridge, insisting that they need the communication which it enables them even now, by a short ferry, to keep up.

Gentlemen seem to suppose that if this structure were to be removed, all difficulties would be overcome, and that there would then be deep water across the whole river at that point. This is a great mistake. If the structure be removed, it will not remove that difficulty. In 1818, as General Jones informed us, who was present at the time that examination was made, there was shoal water at that spot. The flats in the center of the river were then coming out of the water, the river being about a mile wide. The difficulty is, that there is not water enough to cover the whole surface, and hence there must be shoals either in the center or near the shore on each side. The natural and necessary effect of the causeway in operation, is to cause deposits to be made in the center of the river, and they will ultimately bring that center out of water, and thus form an island; and an examination will show, as I believe, that such will be the ultimate result, whether the causeway shall be removed or not.

If you remove the structure, those causes will still operate, though, probably, not so rapidly, and the deposits will ultimately make an island there. If the present structure be removed, you still have the shoal water. You cannot get deep water by removing this causeway, which is some two thousand feet of solid stone and earth embankment. We are also assured that if this causeway is removed it will be difficult, if not impossible, to run a steam-ferry across the river at that point, because the water will be too shoal for a portion of the way.

These considerations lead me to hope the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment will be rejected, and that we shall make an appropriation for the repairs of the old bridge; and when the project for removing the structure and erecting a new bridge shall be again under consideration, there will be time to consider fully the subject. We need not undertake that, until we have all the information before us that experienced engineers can give. The Committee on the District of Columbia were several days investigating the subject. They were at first impressed with the same ideas that several gentlemen have suggested here; but they found that there were other facts which modified those ideas.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall vote against any appropriation to rebuild or repair this bridge, and I shall do it upon this ground: The people of Georgetown have, to my knowledge, for fifteen or twenty years last past been complaining of this obstruction, and as long as that bridge has been in passable condition, no movement has ever been made in this body, or in the other House, to relieve their difficulties; and if you put that bridge in passable order again, will it not remain fifteen or twenty, or perhaps fifty, years without being touched?

Mr. BADGER. It will remain without alteration until another flood breaks it away.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think my friend from North Carolina has given the proper answer. If we put this bridge in passable order it will continue without any alteration until another flood breaks it away. Heaven has sent a flood which has removed a portion of the bridge, and you have been forced to act. Now it is proposed to put it again in the condition in which it has been for the last fifteen or twenty years, of which the people of Georgetown have always been complaining. If it is put in passable order, I fear the subject will not be touched again: For this reason I shall vote against the amendment of the Committee on Finance, and for the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. I am willing that my friend from North Carolina should limit the appropriation, and instead of removing the brick and dirt embankment in the center of the structure, confine it for the present to the wood piling on each side, and allow us to think about the subject until the next session. But I am indifferent about that, and shall vote for his amendment, whether he limits it in that way or not.

Since this subject has been under consideration, I have conversed with Mr. Ellet, the great bridge builder in this country, upon the wire-suspension plan. He made an estimate some years ago in regard to the money necessary to be expended to construct a wire-suspension bridge over the foundation of the bridge as it now stands, and he thought it would take upwards of $300,000 to build a bridge there upon that principle. According to his estimates it would take $60,000 to build the same kind of bridge across the aqueduct at Georgetown. My own opinion is that if you build a wire-suspension bridge the proper site for it will be across Mason's Island; because immediately west of the Observatory there is a very high embankment, and Mason's Island is considerably elevated, and you can build a wire-suspension bridge there so as to allow space enough underneath for the masts of vessels going to Georgetown. Such a bridge will not interfere with the navigation of the river. But all that is a matter for future investigation and inquiry. If you refuse temporarily to repair the present structure, you should send your engineers out for the purpose of looking at the sites, making estimates, and determining what should be done. But my word for it, just so soon as you commence to repair the old structure, there will be no engineers sent out to look for a new site, and no estimate will be made for that purpose, and the matter will remain just as it has been for so many years.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to suggest that in regard to this matter, it would perhaps be better to follow the suggestions of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who have examined the subject more than any other, and who are better acquainted with it. Even if the Senator from North Carolina be right in his amendment, I think it would be premature to adopt it until we have some more information about it. I should be very reluctant to destroy the present means of communication, imperfect as they are, between the District and the Virginia shore. I am certain that it will be felt as a serious loss, if we were to do it before some other bridge has been erected. If the Senate should refuse to make an appropriation for temporary repairs, I think we had better leave the structure as it now is. That would be better than making an appropriation to remove it, because what now exists is useful. If we should refuse to give the amount of appropriation recommended by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, [Mr. SHIELDS,] I hope the Senate will not go the length of destroying the means of communication that now exist.

Mr. PRATT. I do not concur with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] in believing that Providence sent a flood for the express purpose of carrying away the bridge; but, inasmuch as the bridge has been providentially carried away, I am indisposed to put it up again.

One or two considerations have been advanced, about which I wish to say a word. The first proposition is, that the erection of the bridge has destroyed the trade of Georgetown, in consequence of the obstructions it has caused in the river. Now, I believe no one can deny the fact, that it is so. Many years ago, I went to school in Georgetown, and, at that time, vessels of almost the largest class were enabled to ascend the river to that point, and load with cargoes for every part of the world. At the present day, it is impossible for vessels of that class to get up there. Georgetown was then a place of considerable trade, but from some cause or other, that trade has been destroyed, and its inhabitants allege the erection of the bridge, and the consequent obstructions to the navigation, to be the cause. I have no doubt that that is the fact.

In the next place, it is said that the erection of the bridge, with a permanent causeway of something like two thousand yards, has had a tendency to produce disease. I am satisfied that that argument is correct. If a committee of the most learned and scientific men in the District were to assemble and make a report to me that the exposure of some sixty or seventy acres of marsh mud to the atmosphere would not produce disease, I would not believe them. Every one knows that it will produce disease in such a climate as this; and every one who knows anything of the locality, knows that some sixty or seventy acres are exposed, day after day, to the summer sun, and that disease must be the inevitable consequence. These are some of the reasons why I will vote with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] for the removal of this structure. The mere refusal to repair the bridge will not remove either of these evils; there is a permanent structure there which prevents the water from flowing freely, and it is desirable that that obstruction should be removed; but the mere refusal to repair it would leave that evil untouched, and at the same time deprive us of the advantage which the use of the bridge affords. Therefore, unless the obstruction is to be removed altogether, there can be no difficulty in determining whether we shall assent to the proposition to repair; because that repair will but increase the evils complained of, and the only way in which any good can be effected will be to agree to its entire removal. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] is manifestly right in desiring that that removal should take place. My friend from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] is wrong in supposing that Virginia has any rights relative to this bridge. The State of Maryland—when this District was ceded to the General Government—owned the Potomac river to low-water mark on the Virginia shore; and Virginia, in consequence, has no legitimate jurisdiction over the river, or any part of it. The river, to low-water mark upon the Virginia shore, was under the jurisdiction of the State of Maryland, and therefore, when that State ceded to the United States that part of her territory included in the District, it ceded with it the Potomac river to the Virginia shore.

Mr. PEARCE. I will only add to what has been said by my colleague, that, in 1839, Congress by law extended the boundaries of the city of Washington to the furthest extremity of the bridge, and gave the corporation of Washington jurisdiction over it; and the act of retrocession reserved all the rights of the corporation.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to make one remark in reply to the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT.] Admit that Maryland is the owner of the Potomac river, and has jurisdiction to the Virginia shore, I apprehend that the bridge, when extended, will reach the soil of Virginia. One end of this bridge must of necessity rest upon the soil of Virginia; and I apprehend that if it were an original proposition to locate a bridge, it could not be so located without the assent of Virginia, she being the owner of the fee. While, therefore, the State of Maryland may be the owner of the river, and have jurisdiction over it, I apprehend that for all judicial purposes, both the States of Virginia and Maryland exercise jurisdiction, and when one has so exercised it, it could be pleaded in bar to any action which might be brought by the other upon common-law principles. So that I am not mistaken in saying that the State of Virginia is the owner of the soil on which one end of the bridge stands, or on which any new structure may be erected.

I admit that my objection to the repair of this bridge is based mainly upon the consideration that it will be calculated to procrastinate the period when another and more suitable bridge shall be built at the right point. I think, Mr. President, the time has come now when here, at the capital of the nation, the two great thoroughfares of the country—the North and the South—should be united by railroad communication. We now have a space of about sixty miles between the termini of the eastern and southern line of road. I have in my hand a correspondence between the Mayor and Common Council of Georgetown, and Mr. Ellet, an engineer of much reputation, showing that for $70,000 an iron bridge suitable for all the ordinary travel of the country, can be constructed across the Potomac at a point called the "Three Rocks, or Sisters;" and that for $150,000 a bridge can be constructed sufficient to cross railroad cars on one side, and the ordinary travel of the country on the other.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to say a single word?

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. SHIELDS. Has Mr. Ellet said that he has examined these sites, and that that is his estimate? If that is so, I should like to know it. I am told that if a bridge of either kind named by the Senator from Indiana is to be erected, the granite foundations will cost $300,000.

A SENATOR. At what point?

Mr. SHIELDS. At the point known as the "Three Sisters." The estimate for the foundation alone will be $300,000. I would like to know if the amount named by the Senator from Indiana is the estimate made by that engineer?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will send the correspondence to the Secretary. It can be read, and will answer fully the inquiry of the Senator from Illinois, and in a manner not to be misunderstood.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; state the contents.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate in reading these papers, if Senators do not wish to hear them; but I will say to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] that Mr. Ellet does say that for the sum of $150,000 a bridge can be erected of sufficient capacity for the purposes I have named.

Mr. PRATT. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senator from Maryland, who is conversant with the facts, (having been at one time a resident in this vicinity,) says he has no doubt of it, nor have I heard any one doubt it who knows the locality and all the facts. I do not know that I have a very mathematical eye; I have looked over the ground, and, comparing this with other similar structures, I believe $150,000 will put up a work that will answer the wants of the public, and be an honor to the District.

Mr. GEYER. It is admitted on all hands that this bridge is a nuisance, and dangerous and prejudicial to the health of the people in both the cities in the District.

Mr. BRADBURY. Not at all.

Mr. GEYER. It is so, in consequence of the obstruction to the flow of water and the exposure of a large deposit of mud, at low stages of the water in the river. There is also another objection, which has not been adverted to by gentlemen who have addressed the Senate. When floods occur, the passage for the water at either end of the causeway is too narrow, and the consequence is, that a very considerable rise takes place above the bridge. I believe it has been several feet higher above the bridge than it has been below.

Mr. BADGER. The difference was four feet during the last flood.

Mr. GEYER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] informs me that the difference in the height of the water above and below the bridge last spring was four feet. The result is, that the water thus banked up enters the canal, and floods the whole of the little valley on the south side of the avenue. This is a very serious evil, and may be of frequent occurrence. But it was not so much with a view to mention these facts that I rose to address the Senate. My principal object is to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that we are legislating here for people placed under disabilities by their position; and in that legislation we should take care that we do not injure them further than is necessary to subserve the public interests. We have erected a nuisance which has proved injurious to the health of the inhabitants of both cities—the old and the new. Part of that nuisance has been swept away by a flood; and the question now before the Senate is not whether that nuisance should be continued permanently—for it is admitted by gentlemen who advocate this appropriation that, at no very distant day, it must be removed—but whether it shall be continued for some time longer?

Then I submit to the Senate, that if this bridge is a nuisance; if it is a breach of our duty to continue it there permanently, it is also a breach of duty to permit it to remain for one hour. It should be removed for that reason. It ought also to be removed on the principle by which we provide for the removal of obstructions from the harbor of Savannah, those obstructions having been placed there, it is said, by the Government of the United States. Exactly as those obstructions may have answered the purposes of the Government in case of war, and for the purpose of preventing the approach of an enemy, we may look forward to the probability that this nuisance may at some day promote the same object of the Government; but would such an argument be sufficient to induce Senators to maintain it there, when it is palpable that it is dangerous to the health of the present generation? If it is maintained at all, it will be maintained for fifteen or twenty years, or until such time as the next flood comes, and carries away a portion of it; and the same arguments will be presented then as are presented now, for the purpose of retaining it temporarily. I ask, have we a right to inflict an injury on the present generation? Have we a right to expose those who are our wards, and who have no power themselves to act on the subject, to the evils which that bridge causes? I place this matter on the ground of justice, and affirm that there is an obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to remove that structure, as they have placed it there. I shall support, then—as the utility of the bridge is by no means correspondent to its evils—the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina for the immediate removal of the remains of the bridge, as I am firmly convinced that its retention will prove most injurious to the health of the present generation.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no wish or design to protract this discussion, but I do not admit that this is a nuisance. I am not satisfied that it is; if I were, I would vote for removing it; but I think that we ought to take more time to consider this question. I rise, not for the purpose of making any remarks on the subject, but simply to ask that we may have a vote. The hour that we have expended in debating this question, is worth more to the country than the $12,000 which it is proposed to appropriate.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SEWARD. Before the question is taken, I wish to say one word for the purpose of justifying any apparent inconsistency in my votes. I do not know whether this question was taken by yeas and nays when a similar proposition was made in the deficiency bill; but if it was I voted against the proposition which I shall now sustain. In doing so I must say that I change my vote because I am satisfied with the arguments which I have heard, that this bridge is a serious injury to the health and prosperity of the city of Georgetown, and unnecessary, in its present condition, to the interests of the people here.

Mr. MANGUM. I have listened with a good deal of attention to gentlemen who evince a vast amount of laudable sensibility in regard to the health of the people of the District; but so far as I am informed, the people of Washington almost with perfect unanimity desire the repair of this bridge.

Another argument which is adduced by gentlemen is, that Congress will not do its duty in regard to the future, if this bridge is not temporarily repaired. Perhaps gentlemen understand Congress better than I do. If that is so, perhaps they had better go to work and demolish all the bridges, in order that we may get new ones. Mr. President, I am in favor of creating a new structure in place of the old bridge. I will vote for an appropriation any day for that purpose. But at the same time, the temporary convenience not only of the people of Virginia, but also of the people of the city, requires, in my judgment, that the bridge should be repaired. The amount of cost is very small; and if it is intended to erect a new bridge, the temporary repair of the old one will facilitate operations. But if Congress is only to be thus driven by the extremest necessity in this mode, I must imagine that gentlemen understand Congress much better than I do. I shall vote for the appropriation.

Mr. BADGER. One word in reply to the observations of my colleague. He says my proposition is supported on the idea that Congress will not do its duty, and intimates that perhaps we may understand Congress better than he does. I appeal to my colleague if this very case does not prove that Congress will not do its duty while that bridge stands? For the last ten years it has been as apparent as it is now, that it is a nuisance. It is not only apparent that it is an obstruction to the navigation of the river, but that it is creating a permanent nuisance both to the city of Washington and that of Georgetown; and yet no movement has been made to take it down, and erect a new one. We have never heard of any disposition, on the part of Congress, to get rid of this old bridge, and put up a new one, until the disaster to it by the late flood.

One word, now, with regard to the people who are interested in this bridge. The people on the Virginia shore, below Alexandria, usually come up the river by the boats. They do not drive up from Alexandria to the other end of the Long Bridge, for the purpose of passing over it; and the people above Georgetown cross there. If I understand the matter correctly, therefore, there are only some two or three farms lying between Georgetown and Alexandria who are interested in this matter.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to correct him as to a matter of fact?

Mr. BADGER. Certainly. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand there is a ferry now at the breach made in the bridge, and that it is very convenient to people passing, and the loss of it would be greatly felt.

Mr. BADGER. I am glad to hear it. Nothing will be more easy when the causeway is removed than to extend the ferry across the river.

Mr. BRADBURY. That cannot be done, because there is shoal water there.

Mr. BADGER. And it will be still more so if you keep the bridge there.

Mr. MANGUM. I will answer the inquiry of my colleague. I am of the opinion that Congress does a vast deal more than its duty in the way of talking. Sir, by way of evincing my sincerity upon this occasion, if any gentleman will take the trouble of preparing an amendment, I will vote for an appropriation of $100,000 in this bill, to be put under the direction of the President, with the assistance of the best engineers, for the purpose of constructing a bridge that will be respectable, durable, and every way appropriate for this place; but at the same time I also desire to vote for temporary repairs to the present bridge. Every gentleman who has gone to market must have become acquainted with the enhancement of the price of provisions, occasioned by the want of a proper communication with the Virginia shore. As far as I am informed, I think the entire population of the city desire the temporary reconstruction of this bridge. As to Georgetown, I have a very great respect for her rights; but I have no respect for these little collisions, arising out of the desire to have a bridge, one end of which is to be in Georgetown instead of in Washington. I would be regulated upon that matter by the intelligence and reports of able engineers under the President, considering all the interests of the District. I say again, if any gentleman will make the proposition, I will vote for $100,000 for the construction of a new bridge, but at the same time I desire to see the present one temporarily repaired.

Mr. BRIGHT. The considerations that are to govern the vote of Senators appear to be narrowed down to the single point that the price of marketing will be cheapened in this city, with a population of about 40,000, by the repair of this bridge.

Mr. MANGUM. Not at all. There are other objections which are not mentioned.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, Senators seem to forget that Georgetown is as much within the limits of this District as Washington city, and that Congress is the only legislative tribunal her citizens can appeal to for the protection of their political rights. Georgetown, with her population of eight or ten thousand inhabitants, represents, in the most imposing form, (as appears from the proceedings of a public meeting, read at your desk this morning,) that for years she has suffered great inconvenience and injury from the erection and maintenance of this bridge; that her commerce has been cut off, the health of the city injured—two facts admitted by all who are informed on this subject—and asks you to abate this nuisance, instead of appropriating money to continue it.

This petition is met with an opposition on the part of honorable Senators, based on the ground that a bridge at this point is necessary for the convenience of the traveling public; and particularly is it desirable on account of the increased price charged for marketing in Washington when this bridge is not passable—thus setting up the paltry consideration of low prices to a population of forty thousand in Washington, against the commerce, trade, and health of a city containing eight or ten thousand inhabitants. This is, in my judgment, an unjust and an illiberal view of this question, and one that will do no credit to Congress. The public convenience does not require the repair of this structure. Every necessary facility for travel from this to the Virginia shore, in the direction of Alexandria, is afforded by the steam-packets that ply between this city and that point. Perhaps a few persons, who live between here and Alexandria, would be subjected to some inconvenience by the removal of this bridge; but they are few compared to the entire population of old Georgetown. She has a kind of proscriptive right to be regarded and treated as a part of the city of Washington, and not to be treated and legislated for as an alien and stranger. I hope the Long Bridge may be left to the mercy of the storms, and that Congress will make provision for an iron bridge higher up the stream, and not waste more money on this old dilapidated structure.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to state a fact—not to make a speech. I do not care how the vote goes, but I wish to do justice to myself and to the District. If you remove this bridge, you cannot run a ferry-boat. When gentlemen are speaking of this thing, they ought to know a little about the facts, for I find that they are at a great discount. I will merely mention—not that there will be any respect paid to it, of course—that if you will remove the bridge, you will not be able to cross the river, except at high water, with a ferry-boat, and thus you will cut off all communication with the Virginia shore.

Mr. BRADBURY. I will state another fact. The bridge was placed in its present location because the flats were there before it was located. Gentlemen seem to suppose that there is water enough to spread over the whole surface of the river, a mile wide, and that by removing the bridge they will have deep water over the whole surface. They should understand that the removal of the bridge will not remove the flats. They were there before, and are only brought out a little more prominently, and will ultimately make an island there. In 1818, General Jones, who was with the committee in the examination of the various sites for a bridge, stated that there were flats there on which grass was growing.

Now, the bridge may operate in some slight degree to increase the deposit there, but if you remove the causeway, the accumulation will still go on, because there is not water enough to spread over the whole surface, and being shoal will still be slack in that part of the river. Originally, the flats might have varied somewhat in location, but the removal of the structure will not remove the difficulty. The only remedy is to bring those flats out of the water high enough to make dry land of them, leaving the two channels near the shores of the river as they now are. An estimate of the cost of doing this could enable us to determine whether it would cost more than the removal of the causeway.

The honorable Senator from Indiana seems to suppose that the health of the people of Georgetown is greatly affected by this bridge. That is certainly something new. If he will look at the petitions presented, he will find that that consideration was not very much relied upon before the committee as a cause of complaint. The great complaint is the obstruction to the commerce of the port, arising from the inconvenience of passing the draws of the bridge, and the filling up of the river. They attribute the decline of their commerce to these causes alone. But it is only necessary to look at the commerce of Alexandria, as an illustration that other causes must have produced a part of it. Now, shall we undertake to remove this structure without any estimate of the cost?

Mr. BRIGHT. If the statement I made be not true, the resolutions of the city of Georgetown are false.

Mr. BRADBURY. I can only say that such facts were not prominently urged before the Committee on the District of Columbia when they had the subject under consideration. But will we, upon an appropriation bill almost at the last hour of the session, undertake to decide such a question as is now presented? It appears to me, that before we make the decision to appropriate large sums for such an object, or for new structures elsewhere, we ought to have more evidence—we ought to consider it with all the facts before us, rather than in the haste with which we must decide at this time.

The question on Mr. BADGER's amendment to the amendment was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 23, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Jones of Tennessee, Meriwether, Morton, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bradbury, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mangum, Mason, Pearce, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Walker, and Weller—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "18," and inserting "12," and inserting the word "temporary" before "repairs," so as to make the appropriation for the temporary repairs of the Potomac bridge, $12,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BADGER. I hope, if the Senate will not vote for removing the obstruction, because they are not yet prepared to determine whether it is a nuisance, they will at least appropriate no money to patch it up. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bradbury, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Gwin, Hunter, King, Mangum, Mason, Pearce, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Sumner, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Charlton, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, James, Jones of Tennessee, Meriwether, Morton, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, Wade, and Walker—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

"For compensation of four draw-keepers, and for fuel and oil for the lamps of the Potomac bridge, $2,752."

Mr. SHIELDS. I suppose that may as well go with the previous amendments. There is no use of keeping the draw-keepers, as the bridge is not to be repaired.

The amendment was not agreed to.

After the decision of the Chair that the amendment was rejected,

Mr. BROOKE said: I have been informed that the draw-keepers are as necessary now as before a part of the bridge was washed away, and that it is necessary to keep the lights there.

The PRESIDENT. The question will come up again when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out of the clause providing for the repairs of the two bridges over the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, the words:

"And that the bridges across the Potomac and the Eastern Branch thereof, be surrendered to the authorities of the District of Columbia."

Mr. SHIELDS. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that the object of this provision is to give the jurisdiction over the bridges to the authorities, for the purpose of their better protection. I believe there are no corporate authorities of the District.

Mr. HUNTER. I give it up to the Senator, who has examined the subject.

Mr. SHIELDS. I therefore move to insert "Washington" instead of "the District of Columbia." The object, I understand, was to give the bridges some protection and prevent them being injured by idle and malicious persons.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the amendment of the committee will be agreed to. It will be recollected by the Senate, that the bridges across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, which connect the State of Maryland with the District of Columbia—or rather the two parts of the District together, because the other side is in the District of Columbia too—and which afford the people of Maryland the only opportunity they have of crossing for the purpose of marketing in the District, and the only access, indeed, to the District—were bought by the Government of the United States, and made free bridges. Now, if the jurisdiction over them should be transferred to the corporate authorities of Washington city, they might propose to raise a revenue from them. They might propose to reestablish tolls upon them. They would have the power to do so, and therefore, the great object which the Federal Government had in view by connecting the two parts of the District together so that the people of one part would not be charged for going to the other part, would be annulled entirely. The advantages derived from large expenditures of money would be lost if the jurisdiction were transferred to the corporate authority of Washington city; for they might make them a source of revenue by reestablishing the tolls. The bridges are kept in a very good condition, they are in excellent repair, and the people in the one part of the District are able to go from one side to the other without any cost to themselves.

Mr. MANGUM. I will suggest to the Senator from Illinois to add to his amendment, "and still to continue and remain free bridges."

Mr. SHIELDS. I will withdraw my amendment.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in the following clause:

"For salaries and incidental expenses of the Commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1851, for settling land claims in California, $50,000: Provided, That said Board be authorized to appoint and employ one secretary and two clerks, in lieu of the number provided for in the above recited act;"

—to strike out "two," and insert "three," and add to the clause the following:

Whose annual compensation shall be $2,500.

Mr. HUNTER. There were formerly five clerks, who were allowed each $1,500 as a compensation, which was not sufficient. It is proposed to reduce the number of clerks, and have three at a compensation of $2,500 each.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment increases the number.

Mr. HUNTER. I mean the existing law provides for five. The House of Representatives struck it down to two. The Committee on Finance propose to have three, whose salaries shall be $2,500.

The PRESIDENT. Is the proposition to give each clerk $2,500?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT. Then it will be necessary to add "each" after "$2,500," otherwise the gross amount will be divided among the three.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "each" after "$2,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in the clause—

"To supply the deficiency in the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, $100,000;"

—to insert "two," instead of "one," so as to make the appropriation $200,000.

Mr. HUNTER. This was the sum estimated for, and usually appropriated. The Department stated that it was necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out of the clause making an appropriation to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to deliver to each member such books as he was entitled to under a resolution of the House, the following:

"Provided, That report shall be made in detail at the commencement of the next session of Congress, of the mode and manner of purchase of these books, and whence they were obtained."

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. It proposes to strike out a provision adopted by the House of Representatives to regulate their own officers, which only requires that the Clerk, who purchases the books, shall render an account of how he came by them, and what he gave for them. If any man has an objection to that, I do not see what it can be.

Mr. BRIGHT. The committee recommend the striking out of the proviso, for the reason that it is the first time, in the history of the Government, that ever such an imputation has been thrown upon an officer of the other House, and upon being advised that it had been inadvertently placed there. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that this proviso was put in inadvertently. It is a restriction that the House have imposed, themselves, upon their own officers, for furnishing their own members with books. To show that it was not inadvertent, I think, if the public papers may be relied upon, there was a provision mooted at one time in the House, not very long ago, to prevent the very thing aimed at in this proviso, by which the Clerk, where he furnished a member with the books provided for by the clause which contains this proviso, should be obliged to stamp his name in some enduring and inefaceable manner upon each book, so that it might be known that it was one that had been furnished by the House, under the law, and might not be brought into the market again to be the subject of speculation, without the House knowing it. Now, the House know themselves and their officers a great deal better than we do, and if they have thought that this sort of self-denying ordinance was necessary for the proper administration of the book fund, I do not think it becomes us to tell them that they do not need it, and I therefore hope we will let it remain in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is another reason why the proviso ought to be retained. Since we have been in the habit of distributing books among ourselves, and paying for them out of the public Treasury, there has been a charge of this sort made against Senators and Representatives too—

A SENATOR. Senators?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir; Senators and Representatives too—that they have received the books sometimes, and sold them, and pocketed the money, and thus indirectly obtained money of the Treasury to swell their emoluments—selling those books instead of using them or giving them to libraries. I want the source whence they are obtained accounted for, to show that no disgraceful transaction of that sort falls either upon members of the Senate, or of the House. If you require a statement as to the manner in which the books are obtained, it will show that we are not guilty of the things that have been imputed. I hope, therefore, that the proviso will be retained.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the amendment of the committee will obtain the sanction of the Senate, and that the proviso will be stricken out, not because I am opposed to its object, but because it is perfectly competent for the House of Representatives to accomplish it by a rule or order of their own. It is now introducing into the joint legislation of Congress a subject in regard to which the House has power to regulate its own rules and officers. The next thing will be a proposition from the House that our officers shall make reports under law, and not under a rule of the Senate, which if we could well resist, after having given our consent to this joint resolution in regard to them, I am at a loss to know upon what ground it would be done. I think we had better stop the business at the beginning.

Mr. BRIGHT. I take the same view of the subject as the Senator from North Carolina. It is attaching too much consequence to a thing of this kind to give it the forms of solemn legislation, when the House can by a simple rule regulate the evil at any time without the aid and cooperation of the Senate. For that reason the Committee on Finance unanimously, I believe, recommended the striking out of the proviso.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to state why I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance. The House of Representatives have sent us a bill in which, for reasons sufficient for themselves, they have prescribed a check for the government of their own officers, and they simply ask us to permit them, by the terms of the law, to control the action of those officers. If the Senate were to adopt such a provision in a bill with regard to their officers and send it to the House, I apprehend we should think it strange if the House were to interfere with it and undertake to prevent our placing this check upon them. I do not know anything about the object which the House had in view, or the motives which actuated them. I simply find that they have deliberately put in this appropriation bill a check upon the action of their administrative officers, and I do not feel at liberty to thwart them in their purpose, whatever may be the object desired. It is competent for them to do it, and I shall sustain their action.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now move to strike out the whole clause making an allowance for the purchase of the books, to test the sense of the Senate upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT. That will not be in order until all the amendments of the committee have been gone through with. It will then be in order to move to amend any portion of the bill.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the words in italics in the following clause, which had been left blank by the House of Representatives:

"For establishing the branch of the United States Mint at San Francisco, California, in accordance with the provisions of the law approved the third day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the sum of $300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in the second section of the bill, which relates to the compensation of the clerks and others, to add after the words "all whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,200, shall, in addition thereto, be allowed an increased compensation of twenty per cent.," the words:

"All whose annual compensation exceeds $1,200, and is less than $2,000, shall receive an increased compensation of ten per cent., and those whose salaries exceed $2,000 shall receive an additional compensation of five per cent."

Mr. SHIELDS. The same necessity that exists for an increase of salary in the Departments exists in relation to the arsenals and navy-yards. I will ask whether it is competent to extend the provision to them?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly; the Senator can move to amend the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I move to insert in the beginning of the section after the words "executive and legislative departments of the Government"—

The PRESIDENT. That will not be in order now, because the amendment of the committee is in another part of the section.

Mr. HUNTER. There was an inadvertency in drawing up this amendment. It provides that "those whose salaries exceed $2,000 shall receive an additional compensation of five per cent.," but there is no provision for those whose salaries are $2,000. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "amount to or," between "salaries" and "exceed."

The amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the words in italics in the following clause of the same section:

"Provided, That this section shall not extend to more than one salary of any person receiving a salary for discharging the duties of more than one office at the same time."

Mr. HUNTER. There are some persons who receive salaries as clerks and have additional salaries as superintendents of public buildings.

It was thought by the committee that they were as much entitled to the increase on one salary as any of the others, but not on both. The proposition is to give the increase on one salary, and not on the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I move to take up for consideration the resolution which I submitted the other day, providing for a recess from four to seven o'clock each day. I perceived very clearly that unless we pass this resolution to give gentlemen an opportunity to discuss the various subjects which are to be submitted for our consideration, in relation, even, to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, not to speak of the other appropriation bills, that we shall not be able to get the river and harbor bill through this body in time to receive the favorable action of the House of Representatives, where it must go if the amendments which have been adopted in committee be not stricken out in the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I am anxious for the adoption of the resolution, in order that we may have some time left us for the consideration and passage of the homestead bill, in which my constituents and myself take a great interest, because of the innumerable blessings which the enactment of such a law will bring to the hearth-stones of the thousands of the landless, but honest, citizens of my State, and to the hundreds of thousands who, in consequence of its passage, will emigrate to Iowa and other western States. I desire to see this homestead bill taken up and passed into a law, not only because I have been instructed by the Legislature of my State to vote for and support it, but because, being myself a native of the Northwest, and one who has reaped the benefits of the preemption and settlers' laws, I can sympathize with, and feel for, the deprivations and toils of those who have already settled, or may become settlers, upon the public domain which God has intended for the benefit of his creatures, for habitation and cultivation, and not for the benefit of the landlord and heartless speculator.

Another consideration which prompts me to propose longer sittings of the Senate, at this late day, is the hope which I still entertain that we may be enabled to do something to secure grants of lands for the numerous railroads which have been projected in our western States, and in some of which my constituents feel intense anxiety, and for which they and I, and my colleagues, and others, have labored constantly for the last four years. This act of simple justice to Iowa, Arkansas, and other western and southern States, may yet be done—if not in the passage of railroad bills, by such amendments to Bennett's bill, or the lunatic asylum bill, which have passed the House of Representatives, and which now lie upon the table here, containing, in my opinion, very objectionable and defective provisions, but which their friends feel the utmost confidence in seeing passed into laws, even in the crude and objectionable shape in which they now are framed. I have upon the table an amendment, which I propose to offer when the Bennett bill comes up, making provision for the grant of lands for the construction of railroads in the West, Southwest, and South, and which I also intend to amend, if I can, so as to provide that none but actual settlers shall have the privilege of purchasing lands with the land scrip which it is proposed to issue to the old States, among whom our western lands are to be distributed in the way of scrip only—another mode of distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. I hope my resolution will be adopted, or that it may be amended so as to require us to come here at nine o'clock in the morning, instead of eleven.

Mr. BORLAND. I presume the question of taking up the resolution will be considered a test upon the resolution itself. I therefore shall vote against taking it up, for the reason that I am opposed to evening sessions. I am perfectly willing to come here at nine o'clock in the morning; but after we leave here at four or five, I know that I myself would not be in a situation to attend to business at seven. I should be worn down, as I think a majority of the Senate would be. My little experience here has been, that evening sessions have not put forward the public business, but that they have added greatly to the fatigue and discomfort of Senators. I shall therefore vote against taking up the resolution, as I shall be opposed to its adoption if it is taken up.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If the Senator will move to amend my resolution, so as to make our hour of meeting at nine o'clock, or at ten o'clock, I will agree to it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The merits of the resolution will not be under consideration until it is taken up.

Mr. HALE. I had a word to say upon its merits; but if it is not in order, I will postpone the making of them until it is taken up.

The motion to take up the resolution was not agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 18, noes 24.

FLORIDA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before the special order is taken up, I desire to make a motion, which, I suppose, will be regarded as a privileged one. The special committee on the Florida contested election case made a report on Saturday, which has been printed, and I see is laid upon our tables. It is desirable that the matter should be disposed of during the week, and I hope, with unanimous consent, some hour may be appointed on Thursday next for the purpose of considering it. I move to take up the report of the committee for the purpose of postponing its consideration until twelve o'clock on Thursday next.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would ask whether the printing has been done so that we shall be ready to discuss it?

Mr. ADAMS. The report is printed, and laid on our tables.

Mr. DOUGLAS. With the testimony?

Mr. BRIGHT. The report only has been printed. I presume the evidence and accompanying arguments cannot be prepared during the session. They will embrace some two or three hundred pages.

The motion to take up the report was agreed to, and its further consideration was postponed until Thursday next, at twelve o'clock, and made the special order for that hour.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That T. S. J. Johnson have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills from the Senate:

An act to confirm to the State of Michigan certain lands selected for saline purposes;

An act for the relief of William P. Greene;

An act for the relief of John A. McGaw, of New York; and

An act granting a pension to John Le Roy.

Also, that it had passed a bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853."

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

At one o'clock the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers, and continued engaged in its consideration until half-past nine o'clock, p. m., when it was reported to the Senate as amended. [For the debate see Appendix.]

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 23, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of Senate bill No. 223, "to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the better security of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.'"

On motion by Mr. CABELL, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal of the petition and papers of A. D. Lawrence from the Committee on Claims, for the purpose of reference to one of the executive departments.

Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the purpose of reference to the Senate, of the papers in behalf of the claimant, for an appropriation to complete payments for surveys on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. COBB. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to introduce a resolution to keep alive the business which may remain in the hands of the committees.

Mr. PENN. I object.

Mr. McCORKLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report and put upon its passage the bill to organize the Surveyor General's office in California, and to extend the preemption laws to that State.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I call for the regular order of business.

SECURITY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMBOATS.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order, as the Chair has already stated, is the consideration of Senate bill No. 223. The question first recurs upon the adoption of the amendments of the committee.

Mr. ST. MARTIN. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to make a report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It will not occupy more than five minutes.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I must, under the circumstances, object.

I send to the Chair certain corrections of the report of the committee. Most of them are typographical mistakes. Others change propositions, already considered, for the purpose of reconciling the conflict of interests involved in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Are the corrections from the committee, or the gentleman himself?

Mr. SEYMOUR. They are from the committee. As I have said, the object of the paper which I have sent up, is to correct certain typographical errors in the bill and amendments, as printed and now before the House, and also to alter certain propositions contained in that bill as it was reported. It comes from the committee. They recommended the alterations, which I hope may be made.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would inquire whether any amendments to the bill, other than those proposed by the committee, will be in order?

The SPEAKER. They will be in order when those of the committee are disposed of, unless the previous question be called.

Mr. EDGERTON. I made the inquiry, as I have several amendments to submit.

The SPEAKER. No amendment to any section to which the committee has proposed an amendment, will be in order until this amendment is disposed of, unless it be an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDGERTON. My amendments are to the original bill.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to inquire whether it is now in order to propose an amendment, to be considered at the proper time?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order without the unanimous consent of the House. Amendments should be offered at the time when they are to be acted upon, and they cannot be acted upon so long as the amendments of the committee are pending.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to inquire further, whether an amendment can be offered to any one of the committee, when it comes up?

The SPEAKER. The amendments proposed by the committee are amendable. Is it the pleasure of the House to have the bill read first entirely through, or by sections?

Mr. STUART. I would suggest, that inasmuch as this is a very long bill, that we had better have it read in the first place by sections.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, then, the bill will be read and amended by sections.

There was no objection.

The first section of the bill was read, as below. It is proposed by the Committee on Commerce to strike out the parts in brackets, and to insert the parts in italics:

"Be it enacted, &c., That no license, register, or enrollment, under the provision of this or the act to which this is an amendment, shall be granted, or other papers issued by any collector, to any vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam, and carrying passengers, until he shall have satisfactory evidence that all the provisions of this act have been fully complied with; and if any such vessel shall be navigated with passengers on board, without complying with the terms of this act, the owners thereof and the vessel itself shall be subject to the penalties contained in the second section of the act to which this is an amendment."

The amendments of the committee to the section were severally agreed to.

The second section of the bill was then read; and the amendments of the committee, striking out the parts in brackets, and inserting the parts in italics, were severally agreed to:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the inspectors of the hulls of steamers, and the inspectors of boilers and engines, appointed under the provisions of this act, to examine and see that suitable and safe provisions are made throughout such vessels to guard against loss or danger from fire; and no license or other papers on any application shall be granted if the [directions of the inspectors] provisions of this act for preventing fires are not complied with, or if any combustible material liable to take fire from heated iron, or any other heat generated on board of such vessels in and about the boilers, pipes, or machinery, shall be placed at less than eighteen inches distant from such heated metal or other substance likely to cause ignition, unless a column of air or water intervenes between such heated surface and any wood or other combustible material so exposed, sufficient at all times, and under all circumstances, to prevent ignition; and further, when wood is so exposed to ignition, as an additional preventive, it shall be shielded by some incombustible material in such manner as to leave the air to circulate freely between such material and the wood. Provided, however, [if] that when the structure of such steamers [navigating rivers only be] is such, or the arrangement of the boilers or machinery [be] is such that the requirements aforesaid cannot, without serious inconvenience or sacrifice, be complied with, inspectors may vary therefrom if, in their judgment, it can be done with safety.

Mr. BOWNE offered a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be entertained, but cannot be acted upon until the original bill has been perfected.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the whole of the second section. I do so, not because I am prepared to say that I will oppose the bill, but I received by mail last night a remonstrance against its passage, signed by a large number of pilots navigating the western rivers. I desire that it shall be read as a part of my speech. They have a right to be heard, and this is the only means by which I can secure to them that privilege:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, pilots upon the western rivers, respectfully represent unto your honorable body, that, in their opinion, the provision of the bill now before you requiring pilots to obtain a license before they can exercise their profession, will not meet the objects of the Legislature, whilst it will operate sorely upon such as are well qualified to discharge the duties of their said profession. As things now are, the owners of boats only seek to employ such pilots as can be relied upon for their skill and prudence, in order to save their responsibility in case of accident; but should the bill now before your honorable body become a law, all that will be required of them will be to obtain a licensed pilot—and all experience goes to show that it is not the skillful and the trustworthy only who obtain license.

Wherefore, respectfully suggesting that the public interests will be seriously injured by any such law, they beg leave to remonstrate against the passage of the same.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, August 14, 1852.

My object in moving to strike out this proviso was simply to allow these pilots an opportunity to be heard. They are respectable citizens, living upon the Ohio river, in my district, and they are engaged in the navigation of the western waters. I received the memorial late last night, and of course have had no opportunity of presenting it until now. Their remonstrance is entitled to consideration and respect.

The question was then taken on Mr. STANTON's motion, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HENN. I move to strike out the whole proviso to the second section. I have only to say in regard to it, that it seems to put the whole power in the hands of the inspectors. I think that ought not to be done.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to say only one word in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN.] What I say in reply to the first proposition will relate, to a considerable extent, to various other provisions of this bill. There is a power of extended character delegated, or proposed to be delegated, to inspectors, and it results from the fact that we and no other Legislature here can provide with certainty all the details which may be necessary to secure safety on board the great variety of steamers which they may be called upon to inspect; and it is necessary in this instance in regard to the position and proximity of heated iron. It is due that there should be some discretionary power left with the inspectors in this as in many other instances. The details will be observed by the House as we proceed with the bill. I presume it will not be the intention of this House, without having before them the dimensions and peculiar construction of different steamers upon our western waters, upon our northern lakes, and our Atlantic rivers, to prescribe the particulars of distances, and all the minutiae that inspectors can and ought to provide; and if they are proper men, and such men as we intend shall be appointed to those stations, such they will provide.

Mr. HENN. I wish to say to the gentleman that if he is willing to apply this power to inspectors, so far as boats hereafter to be built are concerned, I have no objection to the proviso.

Mr. SEYMOUR. It is difficult, such are the various kinds of boats already constructed and to be constructed, varying continually, according to the service to which they are applied, for us here, by a general sweep of legislation, to prescribe all this minutiae. I say in this respect, both as it regards boats to be built and as it regards those which have been built, it is proper, it is just, and it has met with the almost unanimous approbation of the committee who have investigated this matter, that some discretionary power of this character should be suffered to remain with the inspector. If they are proper men—if they seek to do their duty—the very important duty which is imposed upon them, as the House will see, by the provisions of this act—all will be right. If they do not do their duty, there may be a necessity in making more stringent provisions. We must rely upon the faithfulness of men in these respects as in any other. I hope that the proviso will not be stricken out.

Mr. HAVEN. I think we had better retain the proviso as it is. The provision by which no combustible material was to be placed within eighteen inches of the boiler or heated iron, gives rather larger space than I think is necessary. In my judgment, we had better trust to the discretion of the inspectors upon this point.

Mr. EDGERTON. I am opposed to this proviso, and for this simple reason: It is incorporated solely into this bill for the benefit of steamboat owners, and not out of regard to the lives of passengers. The proviso is, that every provision of the bill in relation to the construction of steamboats shall be varied when there shall be an inconvenience to the owners or builders of boats. That is the whole sum and substance of the proviso, and it is applied not only to boats now constructed, but those hereafter to be constructed. Where, therefore, is the necessity of providing that boats shall be constructed in the manner specified in this bill, when you leave the whole question as regards the safety of the construction to the opinion of the inspectors? And whenever they can be satisfied that the provisions of this bill are a serious inconvenience, or that a sacrifice will result to the builders and owners of steamboats unless a modification of this bill, according to their own opinions, shall be made, they can build the boats precisely as they please. Every provision of the bill here has no regard whatever for the safety of passengers. It is all left entirely with the judgment of the inspector, and there is, therefore, no necessity for making these specific provisions. Let this proviso be stricken out.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I find, on looking into this bill, that it is a very long one—there being some fifty pages of printed matter in it. I do not believe that we can consider and act understandingly upon a bill of this character in the morning hour during this session. We have only one week from today, and we might occupy the whole of every morning hour and not get through with the bill. I will therefore, with the view of ascertaining what the feeling of the House is upon this matter, move to postpone the consideration of this bill until the second Monday in December next.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to move to refer this to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am of the same opinion with the gentleman. It is too important a matter to be acted upon hastily.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no objection to that, if the gentleman would prefer it. I am satisfied that, in the short time allowed us, we cannot examine and perfect this bill. I therefore, if the gentleman prefers it, substitute the motion made by him to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DISNEY. We will never reach it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If we do not reach it, it will be because we cannot pass the appropriation bills, and other bills upon which the majority of the House prefer to act. If a majority of the House think that it is more important than other measures in committee, they can take it up and act upon it.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to the last section of the bill which provides that so far as the western waters are concerned—I make use of that term generally, though there is a particular designation for certain districts—this bill shall not go into effect until the 1st of January, and that as to all the rest of the country, it shall not go into effect until the 1st day of March next. The object of that provision is, that the people of the western country, who desire very much that this bill should be passed now, may have an opportunity of adapting their boats and machinery to meet the requirements of the bill. They think that they can do it by that time, and as it does not go into effect in all other parts of the Union till near the close of the next session of Congress, ample time is given for future legislation if there is anything in it improper at the present time. I hope that the House will not postpone action upon this bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] satisfy me of the importance of a new examination of the system. It is obvious that the committee have some doubt of its working, and they do not desire it to take effect immediately. It is not to go into operation until the middle of January. I think that we had better take time to consider and perfect it.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] and that is, whether it is not just as convenient to consider the merits and demerits of this bill to-day, as to postpone it; whether there is any special reason why we should pass it over?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not believe that we can get through this bill, in the morning hour, this week; and there is other business which ought to come up from the committees. You cannot go through and perfect it, even if there be no debate, during the morning hour, for this whole week. I therefore move to commit it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HALL. I think it is important that we should act upon this bill. It is evident that we cannot act if the debate is to continue; and I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. CARTTER. Not yet, I hope.

Mr. SEYMOUR. If the previous question is sustained, what effect will it have upon the amendments of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It will bring the House to vote upon the amendments of the committee.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask for tellers upon the second to the previous question.

Mr. EDGERTON. I wish to make an inquiry. If the previous question be sustained, will it cut off all amendments other than those proposed by the committee?

The SPEAKER. All amendments except those of the committee and the substitute.

Mr. EDGERTON. I stated to the Chair, that I had some amendments to propose to the bill, and I understood the Chair to state that they might be proposed when one section was read.

The SPEAKER. That is certainly true, if the previous question does not cut them off.

Mr. CARTTER. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. EDGERTON. I should like to have my amendments offered before the previous question is sustained, as they are important in their character, and ought to be considered by the House.

Mr. CARTTER. Is it in order to demand the previous question after the House has ordered the bill to be read by sections for amendments, until you have closed the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about the call for the previous question being in order.

Mr. CARTTER. That takes away the right to have the bill read.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask that an amendment which I propose to offer to the fourth section be read.

It was read, as follows:

Section four, line nine, after the word "persons," add the following: "having a float and fender around the gunwale inflated with air, and made of vulcanized India rubber, or some other material equally elastic and durable, and as capable of containing air, of not less than six inches in 'diameter.' In the same section, tenth line, strike out the words "and gunwale," and insert "thereto." In the same section, line thirty-seven, after the word "apparatus," insert the following: "so as to make each boat on either side of the vessel, when full of water, capable of sustaining at least fifty persons."

Mr. HENN. Will the previous question cut off my amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not at all; because that amendment was legitimately made.

Mr. HENN. With the consent of the House, I wish to modify my amendment. Instead of striking out the whole proviso, strike out the words "such steamers," and insert "any steamers heretofore built."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to modify his amendment in that respect.

Insert after the word "good," in the third line of the fifth section, the words "nautilus or self-inflated;" and after the word "of," in the same line, the words "vulcanized India rubber, or of some other equally"—so as to make the section read:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That every such vessel carrying passengers, shall also be provided with a good nautilus or self-inflated life-preserver, made of vulcanized India rubber, or of some other equally suitable material, and float well adapted to the purpose, for each and every passenger, which life-preservers and floats shall always be kept in convenient and accessible places in such vessels." &c.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I was not able to hear distinctly the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON.] I therefore wish to inquire of him whether the articles embraced in those amendments are not patented articles?

Mr. EDGERTON. I will state that the articles are patented articles, and the best life-saving apparatuses known to the American people.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I will say that the Committee on Commerce have carefully excluded all patents. We do not wish to elevate them into either importance or profit.

Mr. EDGERTON. I will say that the committee have not carefully excluded all patented articles.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must recollect that discussion is not in order. Is it the pleasure of the House that, in case the previous question is seconded, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio shall be received and considered?

Mr. ORR. I must object.

The SPEAKER. Then the amendment will be cut off by the previous question.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to present the amendment of which I gave notice a little while ago.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the resolution will be received.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the previous question cut off my amendment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly it will.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I hope it will be voted down.

Tellers were ordered upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and Messrs. DISNEY, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 46.

So the previous question received a second.

The question then being, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. FOWLER demanded the yeas and nays, and called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was ordered to be put.

The question now being upon referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,

Mr. CARTTER demanded the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 121; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Averett, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brooks, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Carter, Caskie, Chapman, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Doty, Edgerton, Evans, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gilmore, Green, Hamilton, Hammond, Haws, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, George G. King, Preston King, Martin, McQueen, Meade, Murphy, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Pennington, Schoonmaker, Scurry, Smith, Thaddeus Stevens, Sutherland, Thurston, Wallace, Walsh, Wells, Alexander White, and Woodward—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bibbighaus, Bissell, Bocock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Conger, Cullom, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Disney, Dockery, Duncan, Dunham, Eastman, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gray, Hall, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jackson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Mason, McCorkle, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Miller, Millson, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Price, Reed, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Yates—121.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Has the morning hour expired?

JOHN LE ROY.

The SPEAKER. It has expired, and the business first in order is on a motion to suspend the rules, made upon Monday last by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 272, "granting a pension to John Le Roy."

Mr. HOWARD. I ask that the report accompanying the bill may be read.

There being no objection, the report was read.

The question was then put upon Mr. HOWARD's motion, and (two thirds voting in the affirmative) it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended.

The bill then received its three several readings, and was passed.

Mr. HOWARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

MR. CORWIN AND THE GARDINER CLAIM—
COMMITTEE OF INVESTIGATION.

Mr. OLDS moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the following resolution:

Whereas it is believed that spurious and fraudulent claims have been passed upon and allowed by the Mexican Claims Commission; and whereas, among the claims said to have been fraudulent was the one belonging to Dr. John A. Gardiner, amounting to a large sum, said to be nearly half a million of dollars; and whereas, a grand-jury for the District of Columbia, upon their oaths, have presented the said Dr. Gardiner for the crime of perjury, committed in his testimony substantiating his said claim before said Mexican Claims Commission; and whereas public rumor charges that the Secretary of the Treasury was the agent or counsel of the said Dr. Gardiner in the prosecution of the said alleged fraudulent claim, and that the said Secretary had a fee interest in said claim, amounting to a large sum, said to be one hundred thousand dollars; and whereas common rumor still further charges that the said Secretary of the Treasury, for a sum said not to exceed fifteen thousand dollars, purchased and held the one fourth interest of said alleged fraudulent claim; and whereas the said claim, amounting to four hundred and twenty-eight thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, has, upon the warrant of the said Secretary of the Treasury, been paid; and whereas Mr. Corwin, disregarding the pledge of his immediate representative, has failed to call for an investigation of said allegations: Therefore—

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of five members of this House, be appointed by the Speaker, to investigate all the facts touching the connection of the said Thomas Corwin, the present Secretary of the Treasury, with the said Gardiner claim; what fee, if any, he was to receive for his services as agent or counsel for said Gardiner; what interest, if any, other than his fee he purchased and held, either directly or indirectly, in said claim, and the amount paid or stipulated to be paid therefor, and conditions of said purchase; at what time he ceased to act as the counsel or agent of said Gardiner; to whom and for what consideration he disposed of his fee interest, to whom and for what consideration he disposed of his one fourth interest in said claim.

Resolved further, That the said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. POLK. I ask for the yeas and nays. I wish to know who will vote against an investigation in these charges of fraud.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order. Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask that the first sentence of the preamble to that resolution may be read.

The Clerk read the sentence, as follows:

"Whereas it is believed that spurious and fraudulent claims have been passed."

Mr. CABELL. I shall vote against the resolution merely because nobody seems to take the responsibility of it. The resolution says "it is believed," without stating who believes it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bibbighaus, Bissell, Bocock, Bowie, Bowne, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fitch, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodrich, Green, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Miller, Millson, Molony, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Pennington, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Powell, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Savage, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Fred. P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, A. P. Stephens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Alexander White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—142.

NAYS—Messrs. William Appleton, Bennett, Brooks, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Chandler, Chapman, Duncan, Evans, Goodenow, Hascall, Haven, George G. King, Landry, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Outlaw, Reed, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Stanley, Thaddeus Stevens, Taylor, Tuck, Walbridge, and Wells—28.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. OLDS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the Louisville Journal. In its columns I find the following editorial article:

"Mr. OLDS, of Ohio, an apostate from the Whig party, made a scurrilous speech the other day in the House of Representatives, in which he assailed Mr. Corwin in connection with the 'Gardiner claim.' We see, by the following paragraph from the Congressional proceedings, that Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, replied to Mr. OLDS:

"'Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, defended Secretary Corwin from the attacks of Mr. OLDS, and denounced the allegation of dishonesty by Corwin in connection with the 'Gardiner claim' as a willful and deliberate lie. He would not have risen on this occasion to make a speech, had he not understood the Democratic party in this city have printed one hundred thousand copies of OLDS's speech, to scatter broadcast over the land. He wished to counteract its influence. He exposed Galphinisms under the 'Democratic Administrations,' spoke of Democratic inconsistencies, and defended General Scott.'"

"Mr. Corwin's whole connection with the 'Gardiner claim' has been repeatedly explained, and it is perfectly understood by all who are willing to understand it. Any man who charges Mr. Corwin with fraud, dishonesty, or impropriety in that transaction, is unquestionably a slanderer and a villain."

This article, sir, founded upon the speech of my colleague, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] as published in the Congressional Globe, compels me, even at this late day of the session, to trespass upon the time of the House for a few moments, in my own vindication; and by the passage of this resolution to give Mr. Corwin, if he really be an injured man, an opportunity to vindicate himself from the charges which public rumor has fastened upon him.

Upon the article of the Louisville Journal, I have no comment to make; but I must be permitted to notice briefly the speech of my colleague, upon which this and other scurrilous attacks are founded.

My colleague seems to have been in a rhapsody, because, when an attack was made upon Mr. Stuart, the Secretary of the Interior, the whole Virginia delegation were ready to defend him. The inference is, that when an attack is made upon Mr. Corwin, the whole Ohio delegation should be ready to come to his rescue; and that, least of all, should the attack come from one of the Representatives of Ohio. My colleague says:

"The magnanimous spectacle presented in the early part of the session, by the Representatives from the State of Virginia, challenged my admiration. It will be remembered that a charge was preferred against the Secretary of the Interior—not one that in any way involved his integrity as a public functionary, or the purity of his character as a citizen—but simply the propriety of the manner in which his estimates for his Department had been presented to this House. At the first dawning of an assault, every Virginian in this Hall, discarding mere party feeling, sprang to the floor, ready and eager to defend a son of the 'Old Dominion,' though a political opponent. Their conduct on that occasion was generous and just—a creditable display of Virginia State pride, gallantry, and magnanimity. In bearing testimony of this honorable course on the part of Representatives from a sister State, it is with feelings of the deepest humiliation and regret, that I am forced by a sense of duty to contrast with it the continued efforts of a Representative from that State which gave me birth, and which in part I represent, to blacken the fair fame of one of Ohio's purest and noblest sons, for the paltry purpose of mere party gain. For the credit of my State—for the honor of her citizens of all parties—I had hoped, that if, in the heat of party conflict, it became necessary to have any person to do the work of dishonorable warfare, there would be no one amongst my colleagues, on either side of the Hall, willing to accept the place. I acknowledge my disappointment with deep, deep mortification."

What was this charge against Mr. Stuart, which brought all the Representatives of the "Old Dominion" to his rescue? Why, sir, that he had been disrespectful to the Congress of the United States, by sending his reports direct to the House of Representatives, instead of sending them through the President of the United States. Now, sir, I do not really think, that if Mr. Corwin's charge had consisted in a small discourtesy, like Mr. Stuart's, that I should have assailed him. And upon the other hand, neither do I think that I should be entitled to be called a faithful Representative of the State of Ohio, if, because Mr. Corwin is a citizen of that State, I should sit silent, and not endeavor to expose him when I had reason to believe that he had been peculating upon the Treasury of my country. I think I know the Virginia Representatives too well to believe that they would consider themselves complimented by a declaration that should imply that they would connive at and defend a fraud because committed by a citizen of the "Old Dominion." This course may suit my colleague's notions of the duties and responsibilities of a Representative, but it does not suit me.

My colleague remarks, that "for the credit of my State—for the honor of her citizens of all parties—I had hoped, that if in the heat of party conflict it became necessary to have any person to do the work of dishonorable warfare, there would be no one among my colleagues, on either side of the Hall, willing to accept the place."

Dishonorable warfare! I hurl the epithet back to my colleague. Dishonorable to do what? Has it come to this, sir, that it is dishonorable in an American Representative to expose the fraud and Galphism of a high public functionary? And for the reason, too, that he happens to be a citizen of your own State? If such are my colleague's notions of honor, he must have drawn his teaching from the last days of the Roman Empire, and not from the early fathers of our Republic. A blessing, sir, that the captors of Benedict Arnold were not citizens of his own State, and disciples of my colleague's school of honor, or we should have been most effectually sold to the British.

Sir, let me test my colleague's notions of honorable warfare, not by his declamation, but by his practice. In speaking of the Independent Treasury, my colleague remarks:

"The terrors of all the penalties did not prevent your Wetmore's, your COLLINGS, and your other sub-treasurers from proving defaulters to the amount of nearly a million of dollars."

Mr. Speaker, this Patrick Collins in his lifetime was a citizen of Ohio. He was as near a neighbor of my colleague as is Mr. Corwin. My colleague should have known, if he did not, that Mr. Collins was no defaulter; that upon a settlement of his accounts with the Treasury of the United States, he was found to have faithfully paid the Government every farthing that he owed. True, sir, at the time he was charged by such honorable Whigs as my colleague with being a defaulter; but upon a settlement of his accounts since his death, he was found to have been no defaulter. The Treasury Department have honorably wiped from his memory the disgrace that was sought to be heaped upon him in his lifetime. But my colleague, this would-be teacher of "honorable warfare," "HYENA-LIKE," digs open his grave, and brings up his dead body, that over it he may blacken his memory in an "honorable warfare!" I shall have occasion before I conclude my remarks to edify this House with a few more illustrations of my colleague's notions of "honorable warfare," and Representative dignity. But I must first discharge my duty to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

Speaking of the Gardiner claim, my colleague charges that I am "seeking to manufacture votes out of it, to secure my reelection to Congress."

If my colleague means by this, that by a faithful and fearless discharge of my Congressional duties, I am anxious to secure the approbation of my constituents, I plead guilty to the charge. If, upon the other hand, he means to charge that I seek to gain votes by assaults upon Mr. Corwin, he pays a poor compliment to Mr. Corwin's popularity in Ohio. Sir, I will read his own language, and then you may judge whether or not my assaults upon Mr. Corwin can be so popular in Ohio as to secure me additional votes. He says:

"Mr. Chairman, assaults have been made—not once, but often—not in this Hall alone, but elsewhere—by my colleague, [Mr. OLDS,] upon the character of Thomas Corwin, the present Secretary of the Treasury—a man who has been recognized throughout Ohio, by all parties, through all the embittered political controversies in which he has been a prominent actor, as distinguished for his high moral virtues, and for an integrity not only unquestioned, but unquestionable."

My colleague continues:

"And here let me say that if the calumny was to circulate only where my colleague is personally known, or where Mr. Corwin is personally known, I should not consume a moment of the time of this House. In such case it would fall perfectly harmless."

Now, Mr. Speaker, if my colleague correctly represents the standing of Mr. Corwin and myself in Ohio, how in the name of Heaven can he suppose, that I expect to manufacture votes by assailing him? If his suppositions are true, one would suppose it would be a very unpopular act with the voters of Ohio, to take this political bull by the horns; especially when I had reason to suppose that the whole kennel, "Tray, Blanche, Sweetheart, and Prentiss," would all be turned loose upon me. These boasts of my colleague, depend upon it, are only the imitations of smaller boys "who always whistle loud, while passing through a grave-yard."

Does not my colleague know that once upon a time, and that time not far distant either, being during the prosecution of the Mexican war, and upon that gush of indignation that burst forth spontaneously from the good people of Ohio of all political parties, upon the reception of the "bloody hand and hospitable grave" speech of Mr. Corwin, that a petition, numerously signed, both by Whigs and Democrats, was presented to the Legislature of Ohio, asking his recall from the Senate of the United States, and his incarceration within the walls of the penitentiary? Ay, sir, perhaps it may be even popular in Ohio to expose fraud and corruption, even in the person of Thomas Corwin.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague charges upon me, not only that I have been actuated with improper motives, but that I have sought to take advantage of Mr. Corwin's ill health and absence from Washington to assail him.

"Two or three months ago," says my colleague, speaking of the fact that I had connected Corwin with the Gardiner claim, "he alluded to it in a speech, when I demanded to know whether he meant to insinuate that the connection of Mr. Corwin with that claim was in any way dishonest or disreputable. His reply was, that he did not so insinuate—leaving upon my mind a satisfactory impression; but upon the minds of other members, as I since learn, the idea that, instead of insinuating, he made the direct charge."

Again my colleague remarks:

"Time passed on, and I was loth to drag the matter again before the House. A few weeks since ill health drove the Secretary to a visit to his home in Ohio. He had been absent but a few hours from the city before my colleague, pursuing him as it were with the spirit of the hyena, presented a resolution asking a committee of investigation, prefaced with a string of preambles setting forth what rumor (which, I presume, he had himself created in part) said upon the subject."

Now, sir, let us see how the facts comport with my colleague's historical account of this transaction. On the 5th of March last, while addressing the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I used the following language:

"Sir, let me divert the attention of this committee for a single moment to charges that common rumor fasten upon the present Secretary of the Treasury, and which the country demand to have investigated by this Congress. I refer, sir, to his connection with the Gardiner claim. Public rumor charges, sir, that Mr. Corwin received $79,000 as the agent of this Gardiner claim. Now, sir, the inquiry naturally arises, Why did Mr. Gardiner stipulate to pay Mr. Corwin this enormous fee? Was Mr. Gardiner so dumb that he could not act as the agent of his own claim? Not so, sir; he is a man belonging to one of the liberal professions, and cannot be supposed to be devoid of common sense; and, sir, if his claim was a just one, he could himself present it before the proper tribunal and ask a decision upon its merits. But if his claim was bad, he would naturally desire to bring the stronger influence to its support. He could not have selected Mr. Corwin because of his great eloquence; for, sir, a plain, simple statement of facts was all that was allowed before the tribunal. He could not have selected him on account of his legal acumen in taking and arranging testimony; for, sir, this case was prepared and the testimony taken in Mexico; and every one knows that Mr. Corwin, though a great favorite in Mexico in consequence of his 'bloody hand and hospitable grave' sentiments, was never in Mexico. Nay, more, sir; a grand inquest of the country, upon their oaths, have said that this whole case is a forgery. Why, then, sir, was Mr. Corwin selected? The answer is obvious: Mr. Corwin is a great man with his party. He has been made so, sir, by the Whigs of Ohio. They made him their Representative first in this House; then, sir, they made him their standard-bearer of the party in Ohio, by selecting him as their candidate for Governor; then, sir, they sent him to the Senate of the United States. But this is not all; he was at one time the favorite of his party in Ohio, as a candidate for the Presidency. His name, in connection with that office, was at the mast-head of his party press. Sir, Mr. Gardiner, as a shrewd man, knew all this. He knew that this man must be possessed of great influence with a Whig Administration; and for the exercise of this influence, for the power of this position, Mr. Gardiner could afford to give Mr. Corwin $100,000, if thereby he could get allowed his claim of $340,000. But, sir, in what light does it present Mr. Corwin before the country? The people had sent him here to guard their interests; they were paying him eight dollars per day to watch the National Treasury; they supposed, sir, that with the vigilant and ever-watchful eye of Mr. Corwin upon the Treasury, all would be safe. But, sir, rumor says that they were mistaken in their man; for whilst receiving pay from the people to watch and guard their Treasury, this Mr. Gardiner, knowing his man, fed him upon the other side—he outbid the people. Gardiner's $100,000 was as omnipotent over your National Treasury as was the 'Open sesame' of Ali Baba over the cavern of the 'Forty Thieves.'

"Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me to correct him, I understand that my honorable colleague has charged upon the Secretary of the Treasury dishonorable and dishonest connection with the Gardiner claim. Do I so understand him?"

"Mr. OLDS. I have made my statement clearly and explicitly. If my colleague does not understand it, I will repeat it again, if he desires."

"Mr. CAMPBELL. I undertake to say that if he does charge upon the Secretary of the Treasury any dishonorable or dishonest connection with that claim, it is wholly gratuitous and unfounded. Now, I happened to have been placed—"

"Mr. OLDS. I ask my colleague to be brief, as I want all my time."

"Mr. CAMPBELL. I will; and I will not stand here and hear insinuations and insinuations of dishonesty against an honorable man. I happened to be placed, at the death of General Taylor, in such a situation as to have enabled me to understand fully and completely all the connections of that distinguished man with the claim then before the Mexican Board; and I say this, that so long as Mr. Corwin had any interest, direct or remote, in any claim which could in any possible contingency have to be paid out of the Treasury, he refused positively and peremptorily to take a seat in the Cabinet."

"Mr. OLDS. I hope my colleague will not understand me as making any insinuations against Mr. Corwin. [Laughter.] I hope I am not so understood by the House. I charged upon Mr. Corwin that he was elected by the Legislature of Ohio, and given eight dollars a day to watch over the National Treasury; and I charge that while receiving that pay from the people of the United States, he received $79,000 from the holder of a claim, said to be forged and fraudulent, to open that Treasury and take the money from it. I hope this is no insinuation. [Laughter.] I am sorry that my colleague should so understand it."

"My colleague says, that before Mr. Corwin took a seat in the Cabinet, he sold out his interest in this claim. Does that change the fraud perpetrated upon the Treasury? Would my colleague insinuate that Mr. Corwin would protect the Treasury by swindling the man to whom he sold his interest in this fraudulent claim? Nay, sir, it is not far more likely that Mr. Corwin had given positive assurances that this claim should be paid? Will any man, in the right exercise of his reason, suppose for a single moment that so shrewd a speculator as George Law would have given $79,000 for a contingent fee of $100,000 without a positive assurance from Mr. Corwin that the claim should be allowed? Such an excuse as that offered by my colleague, only tends to sink Mr. Corwin deeper in infamy and corruption than the original charge."

"Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) I wish to say one word."

"Mr. OLDS. I cannot yield."

"Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to say that Mr. Corwin will challenge investigation."

This, sir, is the history of what occurred at that time, as taken from the Congressional Globe. My colleague says, "it left a satisfactory impression upon my (his) mind." Yet his last words were, "I wish to say Mr. Corwin will challenge investigation." My colleague, sir, is Mr. Corwin's immediate representative. I understood, sir, and I think the House understood, my colleague as speaking by authority, when he pledged Mr. Corwin to "challenge investigation." It was with reference to this pledge, that in the preamble of the resolution calling for investigation, I said, "Whereas, Mr. Corwin, disregarding the pledge of his immediate representative, has failed to call for investigation," &c.

Now, sir, is there any lack of courtesy in this? Is there anything disrespectful towards my colleague in it? Yet my colleague says:

"That preamble betrays a desire on the part of my colleague to involve me in a controversy with him; for he sets out that I, the 'immediate representative' of Mr. Corwin, have failed to call for investigation. If it is controversy with me that my colleague has been seeking, I can say to him that he can have it to his heart's content."

"Oh! ye gods and little fishes!"

Am I to understand that this is an open declaration of war? Or is it, rather, an illustration of the old saw—

"That little dogs that dare not bite, Sometimes bark to vent their spite?"

But to pass on with the Gardiner investigation. I waited more than two months for Mr. Corwin and his immediate representative to "challenge," or, rather, to call for an investigation. But I waited in vain. I then asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution calling upon the President of the United States for information, to know why the Gardiner suit was not prosecuted, and for such information as might be in his possession touching Corwin's connection with the claim. Objection was made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] one of the leading Whigs of this Congress. I acquiesced, supposing that Mr. Corwin, or his friends, were not yet prepared for the investigation. Time passed on. Months again elapsed. Rumors became more and more rife relative to the Gardiner fraud. When I asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the preamble and resolution now under consideration, objection was made by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Toombs,] I asked leave to introduce the resolution at a few minutes past twelve o'clock, noon. My colleague immediately disappeared from his seat. I supposed that he had gone to consult Mr. Corwin. At four o'clock that afternoon Mr. Corwin left Washington city in the cars for Ohio.

So far, Mr. Speaker, from my seeking the absence of Mr. Corwin for an occasion to introduce the resolutions, precisely the contrary is the fact. You can bear me witness, Mr. Speaker, that I urged you to give me an opportunity to introduce the resolutions, as I had been told that in a few days Mr. Corwin would leave the city, and that I desired him, before leaving, to have notice that an investigation would certainly be demanded. I think, instead of being charged with taking advantage of his absence, that with more plausibility I may charge, that when my colleague informed him of what was going on in the House, he embraced the first train of cars to flee from the city.

But my colleague complains because my resolutions were "prefaced with a string of preambles setting forth what rumor,"—which, says my colleague, I had myself created in part,—"said upon the subject."

It is true, sir, that in Ohio last fall, I was invited, and did actually address Democratic meetings in nearly half the counties in the State. It is also true, that in each and all these meetings, at the one in the county in which my colleague resides, as well as the one in the very town in which for many years Mr. Corwin has resided, I charged upon Mr. Corwin, in language as strong as that used in my resolutions and preamble, his connection with the Gardiner fraud. And what, sir, was the result? Why, sir, in Ohio, where Mr. Corwin and myself are personally known to almost every citizen, where, according to the showing of my colleague, this assault "should fall perfectly harmless," the Whig party, in defending Mr. Corwin, were beaten more than twenty-five thousand votes. Another election is approaching in Ohio; my colleague is himself a candidate for reelection. No wonder, sir, that he speaks feelingly, and feels sensibly upon this subject.

But, sir, my colleague, in his attempted defense of Mr. Corwin, admits enough to warrant this House in prosecuting an investigation. After alluding to the Galphin controversy in this Hall, and the death of General Taylor, and the offer of a seat in Mr. Fillmore's Cabinet to Mr. Corwin, my colleague says:

"Mr. Corwin, having then fresh upon his mind the scenes of this House a few days previous upon the Galphin matter, declared to his friends that his contingent fees on Mexican claims were an insuperable barrier to his acceptance; that under no circumstances would he subject himself to any such suspicions as had given rise to that controversy. He was importuned and pressed, by day and by night, by distinguished statesmen from all quarters of the Union, to accept the post. His resolution was fixed, and in reply to the argument, that as these claims were settled, and determined by a tribunal independent of the Cabinet in all its action, his delicacy was too fastidious, he sternly said, that he would never act as the Secretary of the Treasury out of which any claim, in which he had either a direct or remote interest, should be paid. On this point he was immovable. His friends then suggested that he should first dispose of all his interests in those claims. To this he consented. A house in New York proposed to buy his interest. The terms were arranged; the money was paid."

In this my colleague; the confidential friend of Mr. Corwin, fully admits two of the charges which I made against Mr. Corwin:

1st. That Mr. Corwin, whilst acting as Senator from the State of Ohio, and receiving eight dollars per day for watching over, and guarding the National Treasury, took a large contingent fee for the prosecution of a claim against the United States—the amount of his fee depending upon the amount of money he could get out of the United States Treasury.

2d. That when he was appointed the head of the Treasury Department, and received the custody of the National Treasury, and when this claim, if paid, must be paid upon his warrant, he sold his contingent claim to a gentleman in New York, for a large sum of money.

Now, sir, a few words with regard to the fraudulent character of this claim. In speaking of Mr. Corwin's connection with it, my colleague says:

"The proofs were furnished by Gardiner and his agents, and I have the authority of the members of the Board of Commissioners, composed, as it was, of distinguished men and able jurists, for saying that there was no clearer case presented to that Board than that of Gardiner. The papers were most perfect, both in matter of form and substance, and contained internal evidence, by a combination of corroborative circumstances, to force the conclusion that the claim was just. It was allowed."

In this short statement, my colleague makes himself a witness for the Gardiner claim. Let us see, then, how this statement agrees with my colleague's previous statements. He says:

"General Thompson, of South Carolina, was employed as his counsel. General Thompson being the warm personal friend of Mr. Corwin, and acquainted with his high legal attainments, and desirous to avail himself of his assistance, employed him to aid in the argument to the Board of Commissioners. The fee agreed on to be paid Mr. Corwin by General Thompson was five per cent. upon the amount allowed. Gardiner had nothing to do with Mr. Corwin in this contract. Mr. Corwin spent, to my knowledge, the greater part of one vacation between two sessions of the Senate in the preparation of arguments in this cause."

In this sentence my colleague tells us that General Thompson himself, a distinguished advocate and jurist, acquainted with his (Corwin's) high legal attainments, employed him to aid in the argument to the Board of Commissioners, and that to his personal knowledge Mr. Corwin spent the greater part of one vacation, between two sessions of the Senate, being the greater part of nine months, in the preparation of arguments in this cause. First, my colleague had the authority of the commissioners for saying "that there was no clearer case presented to that board than that of Gardiner;" that "the papers were most perfect, both in matter of form and substance, and contained internal evidence, by a combination of corroborative circumstances, to force the conclusion that the claim was just." Yet General Thompson, himself an eminent lawyer, knowing Mr. Corwin's high legal attainments, found it necessary to give him $100,000 for his services in the prosecution of the claim, and that Mr. Corwin actually spent the greater part of nine months in the preparation of the case.

What, sir, is to be the interpretation of these contradictory statements? I fear me, sir, that my colleague himself will convict Mr. Corwin of being a party to the fraud. I fear me, sir, that this case is likely to be far more serious upon Mr. Corwin than even his worst enemies had apprehended. This case, when presented to the commissioners, was "most perfect." "No case presented was more perfect," both in matter of form and substance." Mr. Corwin spent the best part of nine months in the preparation of the case; and yet the facts are, that the whole case is a fraud, from beginning to end. No such silver mine as that claimed by Gardiner ever even existed. Every signature affixed to his evidence, with the exception of the signature of the consul at Vera Cruz, is said to be a forgery. Under these circumstances, the district attorney caused Mr. Gardiner to be again arrested and thrown into prison. No wonder, sir, that when Mr. Corwin heard that a committee of investigation was about to be raised in this House, he fled in dismay from the city. No wonder, sir, that my colleague was willing to withdraw his pledge that Mr. Corwin should "challenge investigation."

Mr. Speaker, "for the credit of my State," to use the language of my colleague, "for the honor of her citizens, of all parties," I hope the statement of my colleague is untrue. Yet my colleague seems to rely implicitly upon it, for he says:

"Now, Mr. Chairman, for the truth, substantially, of this statement, I pledge my veracity as a man, and my honor as a Representative in the American Congress."

Mr. Speaker, in the remarks which I had the honor to submit to this House on the 20th of the last month, speaking of the Galphinism of this Administration, I then said that—

"Through the investigation of Congress, their Galphinism has been exposed; and Crawford, loaded with the execrations of the American people, has received his passport to perpetual infamy. But Corwin still remains unwhipped of justice. True, sir, his catspaw and accomplice in the fraud, is loaded with irons, and is branded by public sentiment as a perjurer and forger; but the master-mov'ing spirit, the head and brains, in the fraud, through the negligence of this House, is still permitted to control the Treasury of the United States. Though this House may not visit upon him retributive justice, yet the American people, remembering, in connection with this fraud, 'his bloody hand and hospitable grave' sentiments, and the aid and comfort he gave our enemies in time of war, will sink him so deep in infamy, 'that the hand of resurrection will never reach him.'"

After making this quotation from my speech, my colleague remarks:

"Here, Mr. Chairman, are two clear, positive, and distinct charges. First, that Mr. Corwin has been guilty of the high crime of subornation of perjury. Secondly, that he is participes criminis to a most villainous fraud upon the public Treasury, over which he was appointed the people's sentinel. If my colleague were present, I would extend to him now the opportunity of withdrawing, unconditionally, the base calumny; or I should, on behalf of my constituents, demand a statement of his proofs. But, presuming that he ventures to base his charge upon public rumor, and avails himself of the aid of her foul and irresponsible tongue, to slander my friend and constituent, that his party may gain something, I have but to say that public rumor is notoriously a 'common liar,' and that the charge of these crimes upon Mr. Corwin is a wilful, a malicious, and a deliberate lie."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to my colleague, both for his honorable courtesy, and unparalleled generosity as manifested in this extract. He generously affords me the opportunity of withdrawing, unconditionally, the base calumny which his own statement fastens upon Mr. Corwin, or otherwise "he demands the proofs." Now, sir, I affirm: 1st. That Mr. Corwin, while acting as Senator, and receiving eight dollars per day for watching and guarding the National Treasury, took a contingent fee, said to amount to $100,000, for the prosecution of a claim against that Treasury. I affirm, 2d. That when about to become the head of the Treasury Department, he sold his contingent fee to a citizen of New York for a large amount, said to be $79,000, and that said claim, amounting to nearly half a million of dollars, was paid upon the warrant or draft of Mr. Corwin. For the proof of these allegations, I refer not only to public rumor, but to the statement of my colleague, which, he says, upon the honor of a man, and an American Representative, are true.

I affirm, in the third place, that public rumor charges that Thomas Corwin and Robert Corwin, his nephew, through Mr. Corcoran, purchased the one fourth interest of this claim for the sum of $15,000, and that with this $15,000, Dr. Gardiner twice visited Mexico in the preparation of his papers and evidence to be presented to the Board of Commissioners. I charge, in the fourth place, upon public rumor, that Dr. Gardiner's claim was founded upon his right to a silver mine in Mexico, from which, he alleges, he was expelled by the Mexicans. I charge, in the fifth place, upon public rumor, that no such silver mine, as the one claimed by Dr. Gardiner, ever existed.

And I charge, in the last place, upon the finding of the Grand Inquest of this District, and upon the criminal prosecution now existing against Dr. Gardiner, that the evidence upon which the Mexican Claims Commissioners awarded nearly a half a million of dollars to Gardiner, Corwin & Co., was a forgery from beginning to end. And I have the authority of my colleague, Mr. Corwin's bosom friend and immediate representative, for saying that Mr. Corwin, in consequence of his high legal attainment, was employed, and actually spent the greater portion of nine months in the preparation of this case for presentation to the Board of Commissioners; and I will save my colleague the painful duty of demanding the proof, by asking the House for a committee of investigation, and an opportunity of furnishing the proof.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a notorious fact, that both my colleague and Mr. Corwin are ardent supporters of General Scott. That it is charged upon

Mr. Corwin, that his mission to Ohio was, in part, to negotiate and purchase the support of the leading Free-Soil paper of that State for General Scott. That Mr. Corwin is himself a "GALPHIN;" and that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] one of the editors of a leading Whig paper in the city of New York, charges that the election of General Scott will be a restoration of the "tail of the Galphin."

Now, sir, it is said that some of the evidence upon which these Mexican claims have been allowed, has most mysteriously disappeared from the files of the Department. Under these circumstances I can wait no longer for Mr. Corwin, or his friend and representative, to call for an investigation.

I demand, sir, of this House, in the name of the American people; I demand for the "credit of my State," and "for the honor of her citizens of all political parties," that these charges be investigated. Public policy and the interests of the people, demand that this investigation shall be had before any more of the evidences shall disappear from the files of the Department.

I may perhaps be told, that there is no occasion for haste, inasmuch as the President of the United States, knowing the importance of this testimony, has himself taken custody of this evidence, and placed it under lock and key, that no more may disappear from the files of the Department. But, sir, the sooner this whole transaction receives a thorough investigation, the better for the country.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few precious sentences in my colleague's remarks, which characterize his notions of what constitutes an "honorable warfare." For illustration, my colleague, in speaking of my humble self, says:

"My colleague who, when a candidate two years ago, ran home to electioneer the best part of a month before the adjournment, thereby dodging or evading a vote upon that test question of the day—the fugitive slave law; who 'Galphinized' upon the public Treasury (in a small way) to the amount of about $150 per diem up to the close of the session."

If this, sir, is "honorable warfare," I might show from the record that my colleague, during this very session, has been absent a month from this House attending to his professional business in Ohio, and drawing his per diem compensation. I might show from the record, that, while we live only eighty miles apart, and that in returning from the last Congress I had to pass within a few miles of his residence; and that, while for the two sessions of the last Congress I Galphinized in the way of mileage the sum of $860, my colleague Galphinized $1,350 40. But this does not comport with my notions of "honorable warfare," and I will, therefore, spare my colleague.

Again, Mr. Speaker, my colleague's notions of "honorable warfare" would seal my lips, and not suffer me to charge upon General Scott his own declaration made in 1841, and still unrevoked, that he was in favor of a Bank of the United States, and that had he been in the extra session of Congress in 1841 he would have voted for such an institution, because, says my colleague, speaking of myself—

"He admits that he is a renegade Whig, and was about those days in favor of a United States Bank. He has had some experience in the shin-plaster business, having once been a subscriber to stock to the amount of $250,000 in a manufactory of that kind in Ohio."

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that, in the language of my colleague, I am to be pursued "HYENALIKE" for once having been a Whig? I have a thousand times confessed the fault, and done "works meet for repentance." As to the charge of having once been a bank man, I can exclaim, as did General Harrison in his Dayton speech in 1840, "I am no bank man now; I once was, and then they cheated me out of every dollar I put in them." But, sir, if I was once a Whig, General Scott claims to have once been a Democrat. He avowed himself to his Rochester friends, in 1839, as a Jackson Democrat. General Scott and myself both changed sides, then, it seems, in 1840. I do not think anything the worse of General Scott for having been once a Democrat; and I trust I may some day be forgiven for having been so foolish as to have been born a Whig.

Again, Mr. Speaker, my colleague, in his "honorable warfare," charges that I dodged the vote upon the fugitive slave law, and upon the Hillyer resolution. I have never hesitated to avow, that had I been in the city when the fugitive slave law was passed, I should have voted against it. As an independent measure, I was opposed to it. I do not now like it. But, as a part of the compromise, I am willing to acquiesce in it, until it shall have received the test of time and experience. My colleague will find that upon the Hillyer resolution, I voted to lay it upon the table, a vote which my colleague well knows was a test vote upon the resolution.

My colleague, Mr. Speaker, is a Scott man; he was one of the wire-workers in the Senate Chamber caucus, and in General Scott's nomination. He boasts of his consistency, and would not vote for General Taylor, because he was not pledged upon the question of slavery. I have in my hand a letter written by my colleague in 1850, to this effect:

HAMILTON, October 14, 1850.

DEAR SIR: I have just received yours of the 11th. I have an important suit to attend to in the United States court at Columbus, and I have been written to that I must be there to try it the latter part of next week. It would give me the greatest pleasure to attend the meeting at Wilmington, but I cannot for this reason. As to the fugitive law, I condemn and denounce it on all occasions. I am against its iniquitous and unjust provisions, and all men who sustain it! It is the greatest outrage ever perpetrated upon liberty. I would trample it under foot. I have no right to dictate to others, but, for myself, I say I will utterly disregard its obligations, and will never cease my opposition until it is wiped from our statute-books. This is the position I took in the few speeches I made before the election, and in maintaining it hereafter, I shall not stop to inquire what effect my course will have upon my success as a politician. Political success has no charms for me, when purchased at the sacrifice of justice and right.

Very truly yours,

L. D. CAMPBELL.

A. BROOK.

Horace Greeley says that he loathes the Whig platform, and would spit upon it. He, too, is a leading Scott man. Senator Wade says, "that Gen. Scott told him that he would let his right arm fall from its socket before he would be instrumental in protecting slavery." I am aware, sir, that Senator Wade now says that he never wrote such a letter; yet, sir, the letter was read to a Whig Free-Soil meeting in Ohio, by an honorable ex-member of this House.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Does the gentleman insist Mr. Wade wrote the letter?

Mr. OLDS. I insist that Tilden read the letter at a meeting of Free-Soilers and Whigs in Ohio.

Mr. STANTON. That rests upon the word of a newspaper correspondent.

Mr. OLDS. Yes, sir, upon a Whig correspondent of a Whig newspaper. I admit the witnesses to be suspicious, yet it is Whig authority.

Mr. POLK. Does the gentleman say that Mr. Wade did not write such a letter?

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Tilden said that he did not read any letter whatever, and the charge does not rest upon the authority of a Whig correspondent of a Whig newspaper, but upon the authority of an anonymous letter published in the Cleveland Plaindealer, a Democratic paper that has Pierce and King flying at its masthead.

Mr. OLDS. Yet Whig correspondents and Whig newspapers say, that he not only received such a letter from Senator Wade, but that he actually read it to a Free-Soil Whig meeting.

The truth is, sir, that both Wade and Tilden found it to be a "hasty plate of soup," and that they had better upset the bowl. Consequently, Wade telegraphed Tilden to destroy the letter. Tilden called two witnesses, in whose presence he read the letter, and then burned it. He now suffers Wade to make the denial, and consents himself to be branded a liar, until after the election, when the responsibility, depend upon it, will be shifted upon Senator Wade.

Such are the Scott men, and such is General Scott at the North. Upon the other hand, a Mr. Addams, one of the Whig delegates to the Scott convention, corroborated by the testimony of John M. Botts, Senator Jones, and others, represents General Scott as being "dead for the fugitive slave law."

Mr. Addams says, that General Scott held the following language to the Mississippi delegation:

"I am well pleased, too, gentlemen, with the platform you have adopted—it meets my hearty and cordial approval; and let me assure you, gentlemen, that this is no new-born faith with me. Years ago I entertained the sentiments expressed in that platform on the subject of southern rights. I can assure you that I was one of the first to give in my hearty and cordial approval and indorsement of those measures, when they were before Congress. There were but two others ahead of me in point of time in their advocacy and approval of those measures. I mean Mr. Clay, and Senator Foote, of your State. As early as 1850, when first brought before Congress, I openly avowed myself the friend of those measures, and then, and since, as many I think as an average of five times a day, have I openly and publicly declared my sentiments to man, woman, and child, who has approached me on the subject."

"My name has been coupled with that of Mr. William H. Seward, and I have been charged with entertaining sentiments in common with him in reference to southern institutions. Nothing can be more unjust and false. It is true, I am personally acquainted with Mr. Seward, and that he is personally my friend; but I am not responsible for his peculiar sentiments, nor those of any other man who may see proper to support me; and no man living knows better than he what my opinions are and always have been. I made his acquaintance some time in the year '36 or '37. I had not met with him, or corresponded with, or interchanged communications with him, however, during the interval from the year '42 to '50. In the latter year, during the pending of the compromise measures before Congress, I met with him in traveling through New Jersey. He approached me upon the subject of those measures, and asked my opinion in relation thereto. I replied to him in these words: 'Sir, I am dead for the Constitution—dead for the Union—dead for the compromise—and dead against any man who is opposed to them or either of them.' The language used by myself on that occasion was so positive and emphatic that, in alluding to it since—for he well remembers the conversation—he has even charged me with rudeness."

My colleague says:

"As to the FUGITIVE LAW, I condemn and denounce it on all occasions. I am against its iniquitous, cruel, unjust provisions, and ALL MEN WHO SUSTAIN IT."

Yet, my colleague is one of the "chief cooks and bottle-washers" in the Scott organization at the North. General Scott says:

"I am dead for the Constitution—dead for the Union—DEAD FOR THE COMPROMISE, AND DEAD AGAINST ANY MAN WHO IS OPPOSED TO IT."

Somebody is imposed upon. Either the North or the South is cheated—dreadfully, shamefully cheated. A greater fraud upon the elective franchise is being perpetrated by General Scott and his friends than that of Gardiner, Corwin & Co., upon the National Treasury. And, sir, although I do not include this in my investigation resolution, I warn my colleague, when he accuses me of deception and dodging, "Men who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I ask my colleague to withdraw his call for the previous question for ten minutes; I will renew it.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to offer an amendment to the preamble, unless it is accepted as a modification of the resolution by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OLDS. I wish to say to my colleague and the House, that he had opportunity to make his attack upon me during a whole hour. I have replied only to the allegations that he has made against me.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is out of order.

Mr. SWEETSER. I hope my colleague will be allowed ten minutes of reply.

The amendment of Mr. MEADE was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Whereas, a strong suspicion rests upon the public mind that fraudulent claims have been allowed by the late Mexican Claims Commissioners, with one of which it is suspected Thomas Corwin, Secretary of the Treasury, has been improperly connected: therefore, &c.

The SPEAKER. It is not competent for the gentleman from Ohio to modify his resolution, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. OLDS. Permit me to say I am willing that my colleague should have the floor ten minutes, or half an hour. My anxiety is this: I fear there may be a disposition to carry this resolution to the table, by proceeding to other business, and I may not be able to reach it again. All I ask is, that an investigation may be had. I have pledged myself to the country that this investigation shall be had, and my colleague has pledged himself that Mr. Corwin would challenge investigation. I withdraw my call, on the condition that it shall be renewed by my colleague.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the gentleman, as I expect to vote for his resolution, whether, under the circumstances, he intends to serve upon the committee?

Mr. OLDS. I will not serve upon the committee. I shall ask the Speaker to excuse me.

Mr. STEVENS. I supposed not, as you have already condemned him.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of following my colleague through the remarks he has just submitted. I consider the time of the House, at this late period, too precious to be consumed in exposing my colleague, further than I have already been compelled

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 145.

by a sense of duty to do. The old issue between us is not changed by anything he has said, and I address myself simply to the new points he has raised.

He has again inquired why I did not demand, in behalf of Secretary Corwin, an investigation into his connection with the Gardiner claim. I have already stated the very satisfactory reason that no responsible person had been found to assert a charge of improper or corrupt conduct. Some months ago, when my colleague had the floor, understanding him to insinuate such a charge, I did promptly rise in my place, and put to him the question directly, as to whether he made such a charge. And I then said that Mr. Corwin would challenge investigation whenever any responsible man was found to assert the charge on this floor. Whether I was so reported, I do not know, as there was much confusion in the Hall at the time, and I have never looked at the published report. I have always asserted, that whenever there was found a responsible father for this calumny, investigation should come. But no such person has ever been found. Even my colleague has prefaced his resolution by saddling the charge upon public rumor. I should indeed be treacherous to my duty, were I to demand here an investigation of any man's conduct, involving large expenditures of the public money, upon any idle and libelous rumor that may have been originated by hired demagogues to blacken the fame of honest men. Sir, I come here for no such purpose.

A word, sir, as to the creation of this slanderous rumor as to Secretary Corwin and the Gardiner claim. I charge that my colleague has manufactured it. More than a year ago, I remember he came to the town in which I reside, to address a Democratic meeting. He there made pretty much the same speech on general politics that he refreshed us with here the other day, except as to the allusion to the Secretary of the Treasury. He then, in an insinuating manner, sought to cast a stigma upon his character for integrity. Determined to bring the matter to a point, I was unwilling that even in a Democratic meeting, where I had no rights, the character of that man who had been personally known to most of the audience as honorable and upright from his boyhood, should be blackened by insinuations. I interrupted my colleague, and inquired whether he made the charge that, as Secretary of the Treasury, he had acted improperly in regard to this claim. He then, sir, before that Democratic meeting, disavowed that charge, and confined it to the fact that he was attorney for the claimant whilst he was a Senator. Yet, sir, I have heard that he passed on through the State of Ohio, from Hamilton, from stump to stump, with the base insinuation upon his tongue that the Secretary was corrupt.

Mr. OLDS. (Mr. CAMPBELL yielding to him for explanation.) When I was proceeding with my remarks at Hamilton, and was speaking of the fact, that Mr. Corwin, while acting as Senator, and receiving eight dollars a day of the people's money, had taken a fee from the other side as a claim agent against the Treasury, my colleague arose, and in putting his question to me, made a disclaimer that Mr. Corwin, before he went into the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, sold out his interest in that claim. He made an admission of the very thing I charged. In reply to him I said this: How does that change the condition of Mr. Corwin? If this was a fraudulent claim, and he sold it for a valuable consideration, does he wish his friends to understand that he cheated the man to whom he sold the claim in New York? or did he have an understanding with the gentleman in New York that on being Secretary of the Treasury that claim would be paid? I told him to take which horn of the dilemma he chose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The House will perceive, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague now admits substantially, what I have said, that there, in that Democratic meeting, his charge was simply that Governor Corwin, whilst Senator at eight dollars per day, had no right to employ his leisure time, not taken up by duties in the Senate, in pursuing his profession, and acting as an attorney for claimants. Yet his charge in his speech on this floor to which I replied, was one of high crime, viz: Subornation of perjury and willful frauds upon the Treasury over which he has control. On the subject of Senators and members of Congress, acting as attorneys in the prosecution of their profession before our courts, commissioners, and departments, without going into details or discussing the propriety of it, I have but to say, for my present purpose, that such has always been the practice of men of all parties here, from time immemorial. As a party charge, then, my colleague makes nothing by that.

But, Mr. Speaker, as if driven to the wall by his former charges against my distinguished constituent, my colleague now makes others. He says that Mr. Corwin, learning that this searching resolution had been offered, left the city for Ohio. Sir, I cannot now stigmatize this charge as it should be marked. I have only to say, as is well known to many members here, that Mr. Corwin had left for Ohio, more than twenty-four hours before my colleague proposed to offer his resolution, and was, perhaps, half way to his journey's end before my colleague drew it from his pocket. In fact, sir, I believe it was the knowledge of his absence that induced its presentation at that particular time. Besides, sir, the Secretary's acquaintances all know that his health imperatively required his absence, and the idea that my colleague's self-importance has conjured up, that he left to avoid his puny assaults, will be regarded as the veriest absurdity where either of the parties are known.

But my colleague says that Mr. Corwin went to Ohio to purchase up some Free-Soil paper. It would be well for my colleague if he makes this new charge to amend his resolution and have that investigated also. It will save the expense upon the public Treasury, over which he has constituted himself a guardian, to do so, and to have all his charges examined at once, and all his slanders silenced by one report. As to this new charge, I have but to stigmatize it, as I did others of a similar character, a few days since, as wholly destitute of any foundation in truth.

Mr. OLDS. I did not make the charge. I only said that public rumor said so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My colleague always deals in public rumors. It is my colleague who goes from stump to stump, in Ohio, from day to day, week to week, and month to month, casting aspersions upon the characters of honest men, and when brought to account for it, conceals his beautiful person beneath the ample and filthy folds of the under garments of that old hag, "Rumor." It is he who goes around the country, worming his poisonous slanders into the ears of the unsophisticated and credulous yeomanry of the land, against honorable men; and when summoned for his proofs, gives the whippers of her foul tongue. Of all character of persons, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, those who seek to destroy or impair the reputations of their fellow-men, by retailing the malicious whisperings of public rumor, thus evading the responsibilities which honorable men are ever ready to assume, are most deserving of public scorn and public contempt. My colleague has just given us his own evidence to show that he is entitled to the credit of being a leader amongst this class of men.

So far, then, as the Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, I only desire to say, that my colleague has long been engaged in this work of poison—this system of creating opinion upon idle rumors. If the House deem it due, either to the public interest, or to the character of Secretary Corwin, which has had aspersions cast upon it by my colleague in this manner, that there should be an investigation, I not only ask it, but demand it. All that I would ask, as his friend and representative, and all, I know, that he would ask, is a fair and impartial committee, who, ridding themselves of all party prejudices, will investigate his connection with this claim, and if they choose, the whole history of his life. I feel confident, sir, and I repeat it, that the calumnious charge of corruption against him, will vanish before the light of fair investigation, as dust does before a tornado.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a few words as to my colleague's assault upon me. His personalities I cannot notice without a violation of the principles of honor, or without stooping from the dignity which my position here requires me to maintain. Upon the point of personal veracity, I have but to say, that in my remarks the other day, I moved the "previous question" on my colleague on this point, which certainly cuts off all debate on this floor. I have nothing further to say upon that question; but I have to say to him, in reply to his sneering allusion to my physical size, that although I only weigh about one hundred and twenty-five pounds avoirdupois, I will waive that difference readily and cheerfully, if he has any wrongs to avenge, by an effort at personal chastisement. Though I do not profess to be either good-looking or physically strong, I am ready to compare the personal appearance which God has given me with his, and that may be found large enough, and strong enough, and able enough to defend myself or a friend on this floor, or any other proper place, intellectually or physically, from the effect of his puny assaults.

Mr. OLDS. I do not wish to take any advantage of my friend in consequence of the smallness of his size. It reminds me of the two men who went out to fight a duel. One was a large and the other a small man; and it was agreed that the large man should mark out the size of the little man upon his person, and that if he were shot outside of that mark it should not go for anything. I will make the same arrangement with my colleague.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, my colleague's effort at wit is quite as feeble as his attempts to destroy men's reputations. If he can satisfy himself with it, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague has charged that I was absent from the House for some three weeks during this session. That is true, sir. Let him have credit for having uttered a truth here! After a long absence from friends and business, and after many months of laborious attention to every interest of my constituents here, I did, in the spring, go home. But, sir, I availed myself of a period in our business when it was scarcely possible that any question would be voted upon in which my constituents had either a direct or remote interest. Not so with my colleague's absence, to which I incidentally alluded to show that he was not the proper person to charge that Mr. Corwin, as Senator, had neglected his duties. He was absent for several weeks at the close of the session, into which, we all know, the important business of Congress is crowded. He was not at his post at the time when your Treasury is plundered, if plundered at all—at the close, when everything is passed in hot haste—when the "Galphinzers" look for a harvest. My colleague was not a sentinel then, at the close of the ever-to-be-remembered first session of the Thirty-first Congress. He was not here when the fugitive slave law was passed. Where was he? Echo answers: "At home electioneering, and proving his fidelity to Free-Soil principles." Sir, I was here. The record shows it. I have been here whenever every great question of public interest during my service has been voted upon, and especially during the memorable session of 1849-'50.

But my colleague complains that he has not received enough mileage, or that I have received too much. On this point I desire only to say, that the Committee on Mileage, which is a Democratic committee, settled the matter for me without my interposition. I had nothing to do in the matter, except to answer their interrogatories, that I lived in Hamilton, Ohio, twenty miles north of Cincinnati. Upon this, they allowed me for twenty miles more travel than they gave my Democratic colleague, [Mr. DISNEY,] who resides in the city of Cincinnati. In fact, sir, I have never looked into it particularly. My rule is to tell the truth when interrogated by the Committee on Mileage, and then take whatever money the Sergeant-at-Arms, under their direction, offers me. That is all I do. It may be that my colleague would fare better by pursuing the same course.

My colleague has found in a newspaper, a private letter which some two years ago I wrote in regard to the fugitive slave law, and which found its way into the public prints. He is welcome to all he can make out of it. It has, at least, the redeeming trait of boldness, and direct opposition to the details of that law. In regard to it, I have only to say here, that my position is well understood. Acknowledging, as I do, the constitutional obligation to deliver up fugitives from labor, I am, nevertheless, opposed—uncompromisingly opposed—to the details of any law, under which a free man, of any complexion, may be made a slave. My opinions are well known here. They have been freely and fearlessly avowed on all proper occasions. Honorable gentlemen, on all sides of this Hall, of every party, will bear me witness, that I have never pursued an evasive course on this point. Can my colleague say as much? Can anybody say as much for him? Let his constituents answer. Sir, when I am to retain this seat only by duplicity—by holding one set of opinions here, and another among my constituents, I shall leave it in disgust. That I claim a modification of the fugitive slave law I confess, and that, in due season, even our southern friends, when cool and patriotic counsels prevail, will see the justice of that claim, I do not cherish a doubt.

Mr. Speaker, the time of the House is valuable, I know, and I dismiss this matter, leaving the House to exercise its pleasure as to the passage of this resolution. In pursuance of my promise, I move the previous question.

Mr. OLDS. Can I accept the amendment to the preamble proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MEADE?]

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It can be done by withdrawing the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. OLDS. Will my colleague withdraw the call for the previous question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly; I do withdraw it.

Mr. OLDS. Then the gentleman from Virginia can propose his amendment to the preamble, and then move the previous question.

Mr. MEADE. I then offer that amendment, and renew the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the resolution, and it was agreed to.

The question was then put upon the amendment to the preamble, and it was agreed to; and the preamble as amended was then adopted.

Mr. OLDS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

BUSINESS BEFORE THE COMMITTEES.

Mr. COBB. I ask my colleague to withdraw that motion, so that I may introduce a resolution in which every member of this House is interested, with the exception of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let the resolution be read for information.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That all bills, resolutions, and other matters referred to the standing committees of this House, upon which no report shall have been made at this session, shall be returned informally to the Clerk, and shall, by virtue of this resolution, stand recommitted at the commencement of next session to said committees, into whose possession the Clerk is hereby directed to restore them.

Mr. EVANS. I object.

Mr. GREY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to introduce a resolution, to which, I am sure, no gentleman in the House will have an objection. It is a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object. It is not in order.

Mr. GREY. I ask that the resolution may be read. I am convinced that no gentleman upon the floor will object.

Mr. KING. I object; and I call for a vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to take up House bill No. 242, making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by the ocean steamers, and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1853.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then taken up for consideration, and was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to occupy any of the time of the committee in explaining this bill further than to say that the bill, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, is simply for appropriating money to carry out the existing contracts for the ocean steam service, made in pursuance of law. There is no contract in the bill. There is no proposition to make an additional contract in the bill, but it is confined alone and entirely to carrying out the existing contracts which have been made under existing laws.

I am instructed, sir, by the Committee of Ways and Means to propose an amendment at the end of the ninth line in the first paragraph, of which I give notice to the House, so that they may know what is coming. The amendment is to strike out $385,000, which was the amount of compensation heretofore paid to the Collins line, and to insert in lieu of that sum $858,000—the compensation allowed to that line in accordance with the recent vote and legislation of Congress. That is the only amendment the Committee of Ways and Means propose to this bill. In saying this, I believe I have brought all the facts connected with this bill before the House, so far as the bill itself is concerned; and if it is the pleasure of the House, I am exceedingly anxious that we should close this debate to-morrow at twelve o'clock. If gentlemen wish it, we might have an evening session to discuss this bill.

[Cries of "Close the debate!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will agree to it, I will propose now to go into the House and pass a resolution closing debate upon this bill to-morrow at twelve o'clock, and then there will be no misunderstanding about it. I move that the committee rise.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman stated that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and especially House bill No. 242, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE UPON THE MAIL SERVICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose the resolution to close debate upon House bill No. 242 at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move an amendment to that resolution, by striking out twelve o'clock to-morrow, and inserting in lieu thereof, in five minutes after the committee shall again resume the consideration of the same.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, by striking out "five minutes," and inserting "fifteen."

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I should like, sir, to offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. A second amendment is not in order. An amendment to an amendment is moved, and another amendment is not in order.

Mr. ORR. I desire to offer an amendment that the debate be closed at four o'clock to-morrow.

This is an important bill, and ought to be discussed.

The SPEAKER. No further amendment is in order, the previous question having been moved.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the amendment as amended, and being put, it was agreed to.

Mr. ORR moved to lay the resolution upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution as amended, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 242.

Mr. DEAN obtained the floor, and addressed the committee in regard to the issues involved in the presidential question, and in regard to the extravagance of the present Administration. Upon his responsibility, he asserted that the corruptions which existed in the Departments at Washington are greater than they ever have been; and that the investigating committee which had been appointed by the Senate would make developments astounding to every one.

The bill was then read by sections, for amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment, viz: After the word "back," in the ninth line, strike out the words "three hundred and eighty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the words "eight hundred and fifty-eight," so as to make the clause read as follows:

"For transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool and back, $858,000."

That is to provide for the Collins line. I desire to say now, that this bill was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means some time before the House acted upon the Collins line, when the deficiency bill was under consideration. At the time this bill was reported, it provided an appropriation for the Collins line, in accordance with the then-existing laws. Congress, however, have since that time increased it to $858,000, and I am now instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to amend the bill, to meet that increase.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the chairman (Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee) reported that the committee had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and especially House bill No. 242, for the support of the United States mail service by ocean steamers, during the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1853, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was read the third time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion was agreed to.

MARGARET L. WORTH.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I have sought the floor for a long time, for the purpose of bringing before the House for consideration a bill, important in its character. I will not appeal to the sympathy of the House, nor do I desire to do so. I believe that the mere mention of the case will operate upon the judgment of members of this House, to induce them to take it up, and pass it. I move to take up the bill now upon the Speaker's table, for the relief of the widow of Major General Worth. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up this bill, and I hope no member will object.

Mr. ALLISON. I know my friend from Tennessee will include two orphans, of whose case I have charge. Their case is a very meritorious one, and one of great necessity.

Mr. POLK. If there are circumstances connected with that case which inspire the same patriotism as the case I have presented, I will most certainly include the gentleman's case. I however decline to include it in my proposition.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order until the gentleman's resolution is before the House for consideration.

Objection was made.

Mr. POLK. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. HARRIS. I will remark that this bill is not on the Speaker's table. It is before the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. POLK. Then I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill, with a view of taking it up and passing it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. POLK. I move to suspend the rules.

The question now being upon the suspension of the rules,

Mr. BRIGGS demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 30.

So (two thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the motion received.

The question was then taken, and the House agreed to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill indicated.

Mr. POLK. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I understand the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Polk] to have been to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill. Now, I do not understand that that brings the bill before the House for its action. It goes to the Speaker's table, and must be taken from there before it can come before the House for its action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Polk] moved to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, with a view of putting it on its passage. The Chair thinks both propositions were contained in his motion, and decides that the bill is before the House.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask that the bill may be read.

It was read through by the Clerk.

It provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place the name of Margaret L. Worth upon the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, from the 7th day of May, to continue during her natural life.

Mr. HEBARD. Is there any report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is none in the possession of the Clerk. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. HEBARD. Then I should be very glad to hear some statement made as to the facts upon which the bill is founded.

Mr. POLK. It is a sufficient statement to say that she is the widow of the late gallant and lamented General Worth.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Is there not an amendment pending to the bill.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment which will be reported.

The Clerk then read several amendments.

Mr. HARRIS. Will my colleague allow me to say a word?

Mr. POLK. I cannot allow my colleague.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I rise to a point of order.

The amendments reported have never been offered to the bill. The bill was reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and has never been considered in Committee of the Whole. An amendment was reported from that committee, but not the one which has been read.

Mr. POLK. Then I make the issue before the House with my colleague, and I ask the House to decide whether any construction shall be put upon this matter by which to prevent the widow of a man who fell fighting with his face to his country's enemies, from having this little pittance upon a mere question of order.

The SPEAKER. The question of order is merely one of fact.

Mr. HARRIS. It is known to every member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that another amendment was offered by that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that a mistake has been made by reading the wrong amendment. That reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions is the following:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Mrs. Margaret L. Worth, widow of the late General Worth, on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, to commence on the — day of —, to continue for five years: Provided, That in case of her death, or the marriage of the said Margaret L. Worth, before the expiration of the said five years, the pension for the remainder of the time shall be paid to the children of the said Worth."

Mr. POLK. I insist upon the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The only amendment before the House is the one reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Polk,] I understand, moves the previous question. If so, all debate on the bill or amendment is out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I would suggest to my colleague, [Mr. Polk,] that he withdraw his demand for the previous question and admit one little amendment. His feelings seem to be all alive for the widows of officers who had served their country and have fallen in battle. I was in hopes my colleague would permit an amendment to be offered, which would embrace the widows of all those old soldiers who had fallen in battle while in their country's service. Many of them have been allowed a pension of five years' half pay, which pay has long since expired, and I can see no good reason why the widow of the soldier who has fallen in battle should not be placed upon an equal footing with the widows of officers who have died at home.

Mr. POLK. There is no gentleman whom I would accommodate sooner than my friend and colleague, but he has not evinced any generosity himself in regard to such matters.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was in hopes my colleague's sympathies would extend to the widows of soldiers, as well as to those of officers.

The question being upon seconding the demand for the previous question,

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. ROBBINS and MOLEY appointed.

A count was then had, and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 44.

So the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Before the motion upon ordering the main question is put, the Chair would remark to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] who reported the amendment from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that there is a blank in the amendment as to the date when the pension shall commence.

Mr. HARRIS. Fill the blank with the same date as that contained in the bill.

The amendment was then again read.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question next recurring upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions,

Mr. POLK called for tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. GOODENOW and WILDRICK were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 51.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. CARTER called for the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

So the amendment was adopted.

The amendment was then ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time; and, having been engrossed, it was read a third time and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote last taken and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF CAPTAIN PLUMMER.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 454, for the relief of Joseph Morton Plummer and Mary Reynolds Plummer, heirs and minor children of Captain Plummer of the United States Army.

A VOICE. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the rules be suspended to allow me to make the motion.

The question was then taken and decided in the affirmative.

The bill was then taken up and read.

It provides that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to place the names of Joseph Morton Plummer and Mary Reynolds Plummer upon the pension roll at a pay per month amounting to one half the sum their father was entitled to, to continue for a period of five years, commencing on the 9th day of March, 1852.

Mr. ALLISON. I have but a word or two to say in relation to this bill.

Several MEMBERS. There is no occasion for it.

Mr. ALLISON. As there seems to be a disposition to put the bill upon its passage, I will make that motion, and call the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman will say something in explanation of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my motion, then, for the purpose of making a statement. Captain Plummer was an officer in the Army of the United States, and served with gallantry and bravery in the Florida war, and also in the Mexican war, in which latter service he contracted a disease which terminated his life a few years ago. An application was afterwards made to the present Congress for a pension for his widow, and while that application was pending in the Senate, the widow died, leaving two children, in poverty and destitution. One of them is an infant, as I am told by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] who understands this case much better than I do. After the widow's death, a change was made in the bill, and the names of the surviving children substituted in the place of that of the original applicant, the mother, and that is the bill which is now before you for consideration.

Several VOICES. Let us pass it. That is enough.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move the previous question upon its passage.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

OBITUARY NOTICES OF HENRY CLAY.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question. The Committee on Printing have instructed me to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's table.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the House on Printing be directed to cause to be published ten thousand additional copies of the proceedings of the Senate and House, and obituary notices upon the death of Henry Clay.

Mr. STANTON. I have but very little to say upon that resolution.

Several VOICES. There is no necessity of saying anything.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the resolution, and it was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order to take up House bill No. 312, making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes. The claims of humanity demand that it should be passed.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 90, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. VENABLE in the chair.)

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, there is one more appropriation bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, which I hope the House will take up and dispose of at this time.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order. By the courtesy of this House, I submit that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DUNCAN] is entitled to the floor, he having made the motion to go into committee, for the purpose of taking up the light-house bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is very clear that the gentleman's point is not a point of order; but, if the gentleman desires the floor upon the ground of courtesy, I yield it to him.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the committee take up House bill No. 312, making appropriation for light-houses, &c.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 96, noes not counted.

Mr. DUNCAN. I will not occupy the attention of the committee, at this period of the session, by any extended remarks; but will simply state, that the appropriations in this bill have received the careful attention of the Committee on Commerce; that the bill is moderate in amount, as compared with some bills of this character which have been passed within a few years.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman give way until the bill shall have been read?

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the House dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The question was taken on the motion, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk then read the first section of the bill, upon its second reading.

Mr. DUNCAN. I simply propose to say, that these appropriations are made upon petitions and recommendations from the proper authorities, and upon the suggestions of the Light-house Board, and of the Commissioner on Light-houses, and from information obtained from the Coast Survey. The result is, the bill which the committee have now presented to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DUNCAN,] I would inquire if this is the last reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the last reading by sections.

Mr. HOUSTON. It occurs to me that the first clause of the bill, if I understand it right, is intended not to let the appropriation that has been made for the light-houses fall into the surplus fund at any time.

Mr. EVANS. We will have the clause read again.

Mr. HOUSTON. My object is to call the attention of the committee to that point. It occurs to me if there is any defect in the law now, it exists in regard to this very item. The practice of the Government has been, in my opinion, very improper for a number of years, because it has not rigidly and strictly administered the law, in regard to the surplus fund. They have not required the surplus moneys to be carried into the surplus fund, where Congress can get a knowledge of them; and it seems to me that this clause makes the matter infinitely worse, for it proposes that the moneys appropriated for these purposes, shall not go back to the surplus fund in conformity to the law, which says that after money has been lying two years idle and unused under an appropriation, it shall come back into the Treasury.

Mr. DUNCAN. I believe that clause of the bill is not liable to the construction which the gentleman gives to it. The provision is, that if a good title to the land shall not be acquired by cession, that the appropriation shall not fall into the surplus fund, until two years, after the first meeting of the Legislature of any State in which such lands may be situated, subsequent to the passage of this act.

Mr. HOUSTON. I read the clause rather hastily, but the objection holds nevertheless. The law now is, that if an appropriation of money is made for any object, and is not used for two years after being appropriated, it then goes back into the Treasury. Now, this bill proposes that all appropriations made for purchasing sites for light-houses, shall not be subject to the law creating the surplus fund; and that the money shall remain out not only a year, but two years after the Legislature of a State meets, in which the lands proposed to be purchased shall lie. It seems to me that section of the bill is wrong in this respect.

Mr. DUNCAN. I think the gentleman somewhat misapprehends the meaning of the section. As the law now stands, moneys appropriated and not applied within two years go into the surplus fund. If a title to land cannot be obtained, the provision of this section is, as I understand, that the money shall not fall into the surplus fund until two years after the first meeting of the Legislature of the State in which the land may be situated. At any rate, it is a copy of the identical provision of acts which have passed Congress for successive years.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the objection. It keeps the money out of the Treasury four years at the shortest, instead of two.

Mr. DUNCAN. The money is never drawn from the Treasury.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is appropriated. The mistake is in their saying they do not take it out of the Treasury. The appropriation act takes the money out of the Treasury. It puts it where the law considers it out of the Treasury. The law in regard to the surplus fund requires that if an appropriation remains in that condition two years, it shall go back into the Treasury.

Mr. EVANS made some remarks in favor of a reform of the light-house system, (which will be found in the Appendix,) and gave notice of an amendment which he intended to offer with the view to that object.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move the committee take a recess till seven o'clock.

Mr. POLK. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. VENABLE) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and especially House bill No. 312, making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of its late Clerk, Thomas J. Campbell, a sum equal to the salary of the said Clerk, reckoned from the time of his death to the close of the session of Congress during which he died.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILDRICK. I ask the gentleman to give way to enable me to make a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills:

A bill for the relief of John A. McGaw, of New York;

A bill for the relief of William P. Green;

A bill confirming to the State of Michigan certain lands granted for saline purposes; and

A bill granting a pension to John LeRoy; which several bills received the signature of the Speaker.

The House then adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. McNAIR: The petition of C. W. Werand and 63 others, citizens of Lehigh county, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for a mail route from Allentown to Pottstown, in said State.

By Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania: The petition of Samuel Freichter and others, citizens of Berks county, Pennsylvania, praying for a mail route from Allentown to Pottstown, in said State.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 24, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. HALE. I understand there is a Journal this morning of twenty pages, consisting mostly of yeas and nays. I move to dispense with the reading of it.

The PRESIDENT. If such is the pleasure of the Senate, the reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. MASON. Although the Journal may be long, I think it should be read. I object to dispensing with the reading.

The Journal was then read.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish merely to say that after half an hour has been given to the morning business and reports, I shall move to take up the civil and diplomatic bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a report relative to the Tulare Valley, made by Lieutenant Derby; which was, on the motion of Mr. WELLER, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

FLORIDA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to present a communication from the Hon. David L. Yulee, addressed to the Senate of the United States, which I ask may be read.

The Secretary commenced the reading of the communication, but was interrupted by

Mr. BADGER, who said: As the gentleman who writes that letter is entering into a discussion of the subject-matter of the report of the committee, and as that subject is not now before the Senate, I think it is very unnecessary that our time should be consumed by reading it. The letter commences with an application to the Senate to be allowed to be heard in person when we shall proceed to the consideration of the subject. Then immediately follows an argument for the purpose of showing that the report of the committee is wrong in point of fact, and in point of the construction of the law. Now, if we choose, we might say with great propriety that the Senate are perfectly willing either to hear the gentleman speak his argument, or to hear him read it. Yet I do not think, at this late period of the session, that we ought to do more. I therefore move that the further reading of the communication be dispensed with, and that it be ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the motion will not prevail. I think it is due to the courtesy which should be extended to my late colleague, that the communication should be read. It is not very long. It is addressed to the Senate, and should be read, at least. His object is that it should go upon the Journal, and be published with the proceedings of the Senate. Whilst we are discussing the propriety of it, the reading of it might be concluded.

The PRESIDENT. It will not go upon the Journal, as the Senator supposes, if it is read.

Mr. MORTON. It will be reported and go into the papers. I hope the reading will be proceeded with.

Several SENATORS. "Let it be read."

Mr. BADGER's motion was not pressed, and the Secretary concluded the reading of the communication.

Mr. BADGER. As the paper has been read, and has been heard by nobody in the Senate, which I expected to be the case, I renew the motion that it lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask a division of the question. I am willing to vote to lay it on the table, but not to print it.

The PRESIDENT. It lies on the table, as a matter of course. The question of printing goes to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BADGER. I hope there will be no objection to the printing of it.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, it will be ordered to be printed without reference to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORTON. I beg leave, in this connection, to submit the following resolution, which I ask may be considered at this time:

Resolved, That the Hon. D. L. YULEE, who contests the seat of the Hon. S. R. MALLORY, have leave to be heard in person at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. MORTON. That motion, I presume, is not debatable; but I ask the Senator, as a courtesy to me, standing here in the advocacy of the rights of one of my constituents, not to press the motion. The object which the resolution proposes has never been withheld from any contestant for a seat in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, nobody has proposed to refuse the privilege; not at all. We have not yet determined the time when and how, or where we will take up the report of the committee on the subject.

The PRESIDENT. It has been postponed, and made the special order for twelve o'clock on Thursday next.

Mr. MORTON. I have no objection to laying the resolution on the table, with the understanding that the Senator from North Carolina will call it up at the proper time.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly I will.

The motion was then agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying that the bill requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the State the fourth installment of the deposits of the public moneys, directed to be made by the act of 23d June, 1836, may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CASS presented a memorial of citizens of Frederick county, Maryland, praying that the homestead bill may become a law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FISH submitted additional documents in relation to the claim of C. L. Williamson to a pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolutions passed at a meeting of the veteran corps of 1812, held in the city of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the homestead bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of armorers and artisans employed in the armory at Harper's Ferry, praying that the appropriations for the manufacture of arms may not be reduced; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill granting bounty land to certain officers, seamen, and others who have been engaged in the naval service of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BADGER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred a bill for the relief of the sureties of Robert S. Moore, deceased, late a purser in the United States Navy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the memorial of Roger Pinckney and Susannah Hayne Pinckney, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

APPRAISEMENT OF MERCHANDISE.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance, to which were referred a bill amendatory of the several acts regulating the appraisement of imported merchandise, and the more effectually to prevent frauds against the revenue, and for other purposes; and a bill amendatory of the several acts regulating the appraisement of imported merchandise, and the more effectually to prevent frauds against the revenue, and for other purposes; one introduced by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON,] and the other by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. JAMES,] have instructed me to report back the same, with a recommendation that the consideration of the subject be postponed until the next session of Congress, as they have not had time to bestow that attention to the subject which it deserves. They have determined that there was no time to examine it properly; therefore, that its consideration should be postponed till next session.

The PRESIDENT. That question will come up when the bills are taken up.

FLORIDA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing, to which were referred the additional papers relating to the contested election of Senator from the State of Florida, have directed me to report back the same, and ask to be discharged from their further consideration. It is a question which does not belong to the Printing Committee. They are not raised for the purpose of supervising the concerns of other committees. The Select Committee on the Contested Election have had the papers under consideration, and recommended their printing. By discharging the Printing Committee, that question will come before the Senate.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope that will be considered now. There will be no objection whatever to the printing of the papers.

The motion to discharge the Committee on Printing from the further consideration of the papers was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the papers be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that one thousand additional copies of the same be printed.

The PRESIDENT. That motion will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. PEARCE submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. Jefferson Davis, be filled by the President of the Senate.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill from the House of Representatives, received yesterday, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE MEXICAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a privileged question. Upon Tuesday last the resolution which I had offered in the month of June, appointing a select committee to investigate the charges preferred by Colonel McClellan against the United States Boundary Commissioner, was adopted. Immediately after its adoption I was compelled to leave the city. On my return I learned that upon that day, after I had left, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] moved to reconsider that motion. This question is still before the Senate. I said then that I was exceedingly anxious to have the Committee appointed, and because of that anxiety, I was unwilling to enter into a discussion by way of reply to the voluminous, and I might add, unfair speech of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE.] Sir, that Senator, in the course of his speech, made charges against Colonel McClellan of various crimes, amongst others, subornation of perjury. That officer occupies a high rank not only in the Army of the United States, but in the social circle with which he is connected. It is due to him that he should have an opportunity of showing to the world not only that the charges against him are unfounded, but that those which he has preferred against the Commissioner are true, and can be sustained by legal testimony. I undertake to say that if the committee had been thus appointed, and an opportunity given to take the testimony of witnesses who were about to leave the country, and whose testimony they may not now be able to obtain, Colonel McClellan would have been able to show that the Commissioner has been guilty of some of the offenses charged against him, and that the aspersions cast upon his character by the Senator from Rhode Island are wholly unfounded. Now, I desire that the Senate shall act distinctly upon that question. An officer ranking high in his corps is charged with infamous crimes, and justice demands that a full investigation should be had. More than five months ago I offered a resolution in this Senate calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to inform the Senate what had been done with the $325,000 which Congress appropriated to prosecute the Mexican Boundary Commission. To this day he refuses to let this Senate know what has been done with a dollar of that money! Can this most extraordinary conduct, in refusing to let the public know how their money has been expended, be justified?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will be under the necessity of informing the Senator that this discussion is not in order upon the motion to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WELLER. I will then for the present content myself with asking the Senate to take up that motion. If it prevails, I do not intend, nor do I desire to go into a discussion unless the Senator from Rhode Island desires it, and in that event I have no objection to meeting him.

I move therefore to take from the table the motion to reconsider by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. It is obvious that if we enter into these inquiries and investigations, we shall have no time in which to consider the appropriation bills. I am sorry to resist the motion, but I cannot agree to anything but morning business being considered now. I merely agreed to waive my motion to take up the civil and diplomatic bill until twelve o'clock, for the purpose of receiving reports.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted. Until that question be taken up, the subject is not open to discussion.

Mr. CLARKE. The honorable Senator from California, in calling up that motion, has entered somewhat into the subject.

The PRESIDENT. That is very true.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not, at this stage of the session, intend to go into the merits of this controversy. I thought they had been fully gone into once before. In the discussion which took place at that time, the Senator from California took occasion to correct me in regard to his own position. He disavowed that he was a public prosecutor, and he did not intend to be placed by me in that position. In all courtesy, I withdraw anything which could imply that the Senator from California was himself personally interested. He disavowed having anything to do with the question except so far as to the charges which had been made against Mr. Bartlett by Colonel McClellan had been produced before the Senate upon a resolution introduced by him. He confined himself to these charges. I confined myself in reply to them, and to charges made against Colonel McClellan.

It is due to my honorable friend from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] that I should state to the Senate that on the day upon which this resolution was called up by the Senator from California, I was within the walls of the Capitol in an antechamber, attending to my duties as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. When I came into the Senate I found that the resolution had been called up in my absence, and the committee ordered to be appointed by the Chair. I said to the honorable Senator from California that I regretted it had been taken up during my absence; I regretted that it had been adopted; and I then gave notice, as he will remember, no doubt, that I should procure some friend who was in the Chamber, to move a reconsideration of the question. The honorable Senator told me that he was to leave in the afternoon on a political mission at the North. I told him then again that I should be compelled to get some friend to move the reconsideration. It was not done without courtesy to the honorable Senator, and it has laid on the table waiting for his return. There has been no want of courtesy on my part towards the honorable Senator, nor shall there be. In regard to the charges which have been made, until the resolution is taken up for consideration, it would be improper for me to go into them. I hold here the charges and the evidence, and if there is any investigation to take place which the Senate should deem necessary—

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that it will not be in order to go into the subject.

Mr. CLARKE. I have made this explanation simply for the purpose of showing why my honorable friend from North Carolina made the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT. Remarks upon the subject-matter of the resolution are out of order at this time. The Senator from California makes a proposition to take up the motion to reconsider. If that should be agreed to, it will then be in order to discuss the merits of the question.

Mr. CLARKE. I submit to the Chair.

Mr. WELLER. I ask the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. MASON. I trust the Senate will agree to the motion, and refuse to reconsider the resolution, so that the committee may be appointed. It is one of the most important matters that can be brought before us.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the question debatable?

The PRESIDENT. The question cannot be debated until the resolution is taken up.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask whether the object is to debate the resolution and occupy the time of the Senate?

Mr. WELLER. Not at all. I declined to debate it the other day.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 31, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Cass, Charlton, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, King, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Stockton, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Hale, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Miller, Pratt, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—18.

So the motion to take up the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was then rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills from the Senate:

A bill for the relief of Emily H. Plummer and Mary Reynolds Plummer.

Also, that it had passed a bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers, and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

Mr. BADGER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report to the Senate the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act declaring the Wheeling Bridge a lawful structure, and for other purposes," without amendment, and with a recommendation that the bill do pass. In reporting this bill to the Senate, I desire, as it is impossible that the committee can make a written report on the subject at this time, to make a very brief statement for the purpose of correcting a mistake with regard to the nature of the measure.

It has been supposed that the intention and purport of the bill, and of those who have moved or reported it, is to exercise, or draw to Congress, some revising power over the adjudications of the Supreme Court, and that the purpose of the bill is in some way or other to overrule, or modify, or control the judgment of that tribunal. I wish to say that this is a total mistake. The bill proceeds, and the action of the committee in this body proceeds, upon the supposition that the judgment is altogether right. We propose to exercise our legislative functions, as the court discharged its judicial functions; and the provisions of the bill are intended to accomplish this object: That if there be anything in any law, or laws, passed by Congress, which makes this Wheeling Bridge a nuisance, and as such, liable to be abated; or, if there be any privilege induced under an act of Congress, in consequence of which it becomes a nuisance, and liable to be abated, the bill proposes to put the effect of such laws out of the way by legislative enactment.

Then the bill, in the second place, proposes to make the bridge a public highway, and to require vessels that are navigating the stream to conform the elevation of their chimneys to the height of the bridge, in the exercise of our undoubted right to regulate and control the commerce of the river.

It is proper, also, and I do it at the instance of every member of the committee, to take notice of another thing. Some of the memorials which have been presented upon this subject, and some of the papers which we have seen elsewhere, in reference to this subject—arguments and discussions upon it—have indulged in expressions towards the high tribunal by which this case was decided, calculated to be disrespectful either to the learning, or intelligence, or impartiality of that court. I desire to say, on behalf of myself and every other member of the committee, that we sympathize not with any such expressions. We concur in no shape or sense with them. We look upon them as highly improper and indecorous, and we deem them as unjust, invidious, and impolitic. The action which the Senate committee have taken on the bill, is founded upon the principle which I have stated. In the exercise of our legislative power, we think it right to put out of the way any legislation of Congress in virtue of which it becomes necessary to put down this structure, which is not only most useful to the country, but an honor to the age and the land in which we live.

Mr. President, this bill has been read twice, and referred to the committee. The session is drawing to a close. If it is to be acted upon at all, we have very little time now to dispose of it. I look upon it, and so do the committee, as a measure of the very highest importance to the country; and I move, therefore, that the bill be taken up and considered now.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make one remark on this subject, as the Senator from North Carolina has been permitted to make a verbal report. I do not concur in the views expressed by that Senator. He says he does not desire, and the committee do not desire, by this report, to call in question the correctness of the decision of the Supreme Court; but the design of that bill is to prevent the execution and carrying into effect of that judgment.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend his remarks until the Senate declare whether they will consider the bill at this time. It being a House bill, and having been read twice, it is within the power of a majority of the Senate to take it up at this time.

Mr. MASON. I presume the Senate are aware that if the bill is not passed this session, it will be too late to pass it at all. Unless it is passed, it will bring the States of Ohio and Virginia in collision with the Supreme Court, or else the bridge will be abated. It is, therefore, essentially necessary that the bill should be considered this session.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to take the bill up.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish the Senator would postpone his motion to take up the bill until some more convenient time. I want to go on with the river and harbor bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. I certainly cannot vote to take up any bill to supersede the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I hope we will take that up first, and go on with it. I am perfectly willing to let this other bill have an opportunity of being considered this session, if we can.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would say that my colleague, [Mr. COOPER,] who feels a deep interest in this question, is absent from the Senate. I therefore would prefer that it should go over until he returns, which will be to-morrow morning.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

Mr. BORLAND. The question is on taking up the bill for consideration. Heretofore that has been considered debatable.

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order to go into the discussion of the merits of the case.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not desire to do that; but simply to state the reasons for my vote. I am in favor of this bill, and shall vote for it; but I shall vote against taking it up for the reasons stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which I think are entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope my friend from North Carolina will withdraw his motion.

Mr. BADGER. I never wish to have the appearance of being obstinate. I shall withdraw the motion, but at the same time I wish to say that the gentleman at whose instance I have withdrawn it, may take the responsibility of losing this great work to the country.

Mr. MASON. I presume the motion cannot be withdrawn by the Senator, the yeas and nays having been ordered.

The PRESIDENT. A single objection cannot prevent it being withdrawn, even after the yeas and nays have been ordered. A majority of the Senate can authorize it to be withdrawn.

Mr. MASON. I object to its being withdrawn, and, if it is necessary, let the vote be taken upon authorizing it to be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT. The question will then be whether the Senate will authorize the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw his motion.

Mr. BADGER. We can decide the question as well upon the motion itself, as upon the question to withdraw. I therefore persist in my motion, and desire to have the vote taken upon it.

Mr. HALE. I shall vote to take up this bill. I shall not occupy more than a minute of the time of the Senate; but I shall say a great deal in that time. I am going to vote to take it up, because I have a private bill which passed the Senate this session and the last, and I can possibly see no other way of getting it passed through both Houses, than by putting it as an amendment to this bill, which I shall move to do when it is taken up.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 21, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brooke, Dawson, De Saussure, Downs, Hale, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Shields, and Weller—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Clark, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, King, Miller, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—33.

So the Senate refused to take up the bill for consideration.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest to my friend from Virginia, that we can make but little advance upon that bill this morning, if it is taken up, as it is nearly one o'clock. If he will permit us to take up the river and harbor bill at this time, we will do our best to finish it this day.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe we shall save time, if we will go on with the civil and diplomatic bill. We can dispose of many amendments which will give rise to no debate. If the Senator will allow us to go on with it till one o'clock, when it will give way, he will have less speaking on his bill.

Mr. CLARKE. I would say that the residue of the amendments from the committee to the civil and diplomatic bill—one of them at least—will consume time in discussion. I appeal to my friend from Virginia whether he had not better let it go over till to-morrow morning, when we will probably be able to give it the whole day.

Mr. HUNTER. I have other amendments to report to the Senate, which I propose to take up, and which will give rise to no debate. I think we will be able to dispose of several.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853, and for other purposes."

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out of the clause relating to the increase in the compensation of clerks, the following:

Resolved further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any person whose salary has been increased at the present session of Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. The committee recommend the striking out of that proviso, because it was found that it would lead to embarrassment. A good many clerks have had their salaries raised just a little above $1,200, and who would not have the benefit of the increase with it in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert, in place of the foregoing proviso, the following:

Provided further, That the increase of salary given by this section shall not extend beyond the present fiscal year without further legislation.

Mr. GEYER. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance that under that the increase of the salary will expire when Congress will not be in session, and the clerks will be without the increase until Congress provides for them.

Mr. HUNTER. We will be in session again before it expires. The proviso is, that the increase shall not extend beyond the present fiscal year without further legislation. We will be in session next year, when we expect to have a scheme before us for a reorganization of the clerks. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance have, in pursuance of estimates, directed me to propose various other amendments, which I will submit before we go on with some which were previously reported, and which will lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT. That can only be done by unanimous consent, as the amendments which were reported with the bill have not been gone through.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope unanimous consent will be given.

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a part of the bill upon which we have just acted. I wish to make a suggestion for the purpose of perfecting the amendment with regard to the compensation of clerks. The clause provides that the increased compensation shall commence "from the first day of the present fiscal year." I would ask the Senator from Virginia if he would not be willing to change that, for reasons which I will suggest to him presently, and make it for the last year?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator's proposition will not be in order at the present time. It will be in order when the amendments of the committee shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought I would make the suggestion while the subject was before the Senate, and before they passed to anything else.

Mr. HUNTER. The first amendment which I propose is to insert in the proper place in the bill the following:

For compensation of Senators, members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates, $50,000.

That is in pursuance of estimate sent up from the House of Representatives. The session is prolonged beyond the period for which the estimate was first made. They want about $45,000, which leaves $5,000 for the Senate. That sum will probably accomplish the purposes of both Houses.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to insert at the end of the appropriations, for the legislative department, the following:

For the publication of the Jefferson Papers, under the direction of the Library Committee, in addition to the balance of an unexpended appropriation, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is in the following clause, relating to the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury:

"For fuel, watching, and miscellaneous items for the same, $2,500."

—to strike out "$2,500," and insert "$4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to add to the following clause, under the head of the Navy Department—

"For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, $7,300"

—the following:
